Agents find carcinogens in wells by landfill

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer
© Student Publications Inc. 1987

Cancer-causing agents have been found in wells belonging to two Riley County residents.

Moehlman Bottoms, the affected neighborhood, is about 3 miles south of Manhattan, situated along the Kansas River.

The owners of properties adjacent to the Riley County Landfill were notified months ago by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment their water contains harmful levels of vinyl chloride, 1,2-dichloroethylene, benzene and chlorobenzene.

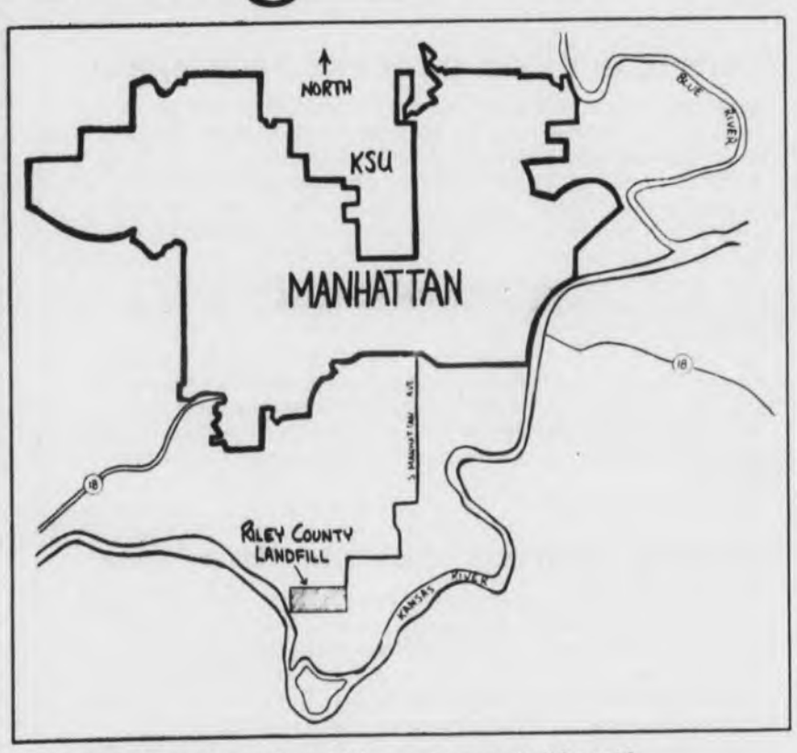
The suspected source of the well contamination is the Riley County Landfill, according to a letter from KDHE.

A revised petition delivered to County Engineer Dan Harden Tuesday requested action be taken to pipe good water into the community.

The first contamination was detected in November 1985 on the property of a Riley County employee who owns a home adjacent to the landfill. The second was discovered in November 1986 on the property of John Pratt Jr., 1,000 feet southeast of the landfill.

In letters from KDHE, owners were notified their water contained several compounds that were "suggested cancer-causing agents and even at the indicated levels could significantly increase the risk of a user developing health problems over a long period of use.

"I am recommending that this water supply not be used as a source of water for drinking, cooking or bathing," wrote Charles H. Linn, chief of the solid waste section of the bureau of waste management.



Linn said he could offer no encouragement that the problem could be solved quickly.

"I will be discussing these results with the county in the near future and will keep you informed of developments which affect your property," he wrote.

In a subsequent letter that confirmed continued contamination of one of the wells, Joseph E. Cronin of the same bureau wrote, "the department is recommending that the county provide an alternate water supply for residents in this area."

One of the residents affected has been hauling five-gallon buckets of water to her home.

"Last fall we had the biggest increase in the number of bad wells," Harden said.

As a long-term solution, he said the county is attempting to organize a water district to give the residents a central source of water.

"It would probably be purchased from the city if we can make arrangements," he said.

The Hunter's Island area experienced similar water contamination problems in 1985 and received an alternative water source from the city, he said.

"Sometime this spring or summer we'll probably have the thing constructed," he said.

Though details have not been worked out, Harden said the landfill budget would have to pay for "quite a bit" of the project. As a result, trash bills will probably increase in the city, because most of the landfill users are commercial trash haulers.

"The bottom line is that we're probably all going to pay higher trash bills so those folks have clean water to drink out there," he said.

About 15 homes are affected by the contamination, he said. Although the KDHE runs its own tests, the county is going to begin additional testing of 12 homesites Thursday.

"We don't think they're inadequate in their testing, we just want to go a little further in scope," he said.

The state only tests property immediately adjacent to the landfill, he said.

"We're going to get everybody east of the site," he said.

Another reason for the testing is that KDHE said it did not have a large enough budget.

"They have a limited budget," Harden said. "They claim they don't have any more money, and didn't feel these were in immediate danger."

The county's testing will be done by a chemist from Salina, and the results should be back in about three weeks, he said.

The county has 25-30 monitoring wells around the landfill for the sole purpose of testing groundwater.

"One thing we've learned from that is that the flow of the groundwater is to the east and south," he said.

That is one reason the county is not too concerned about the land north of the landfill. The other reason is that there are no homes in that area.

"It's all agricultural land, so there are no wells to foul up," he said. "Unfortunately, all the homes are east and south, and that's where the flue appears to be heading, because the river's on the west side."

The city opened the landfill in the early 1960s, Harden said. The county took over the site in 1976. In the first several years of operation, no agency existed to regulate the area.

"About the only limiting factor on what went out there was what one could physically carry out there," he said. "All sorts of weird things went in there."

Bernard Buster, Manhattan, earned a master's degree in French horn performance from the Juilliard School in New York, but has learned that music is not imperative to his happiness. He now owns a construction company and sometimes plays with the Kansas State Orchestra.

Local merchant recalls Juilliard days

By TODD SCHULTZ
Collegian Reporter

Rather than playing his French horn these days, Juilliard School graduate Bernard Buster is laying beams and putting up walls.

Buster, 37, left Juilliard, New York City, 11 years ago with a master's degree in French horn performance and hopes of performing or teaching. After doing a bit of both for eight years, he now owns a construction company in Manhattan and plays in the Kansas State Orchestra when possible.

Buster received a bachelor's degree in music education from the University of Colorado, Boulder, Colo. A friend studying at Juilliard "sang praises of the school and encouraged me to come out and audition. I did and got in and enjoyed it a great deal," he said.

"Juilliard is an unusual school because it has no campus. It is just a building," he said. The building doesn't seem very large, but it is four stories up and three stories down.

While at Juilliard, Buster was paid for free-lance playing in temporary orchestras, including one created by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, leader of the Unification Church.

"Since most of the musicians were drawn from Juilliard, it was a pretty good musical organization," he said. "It paid and was another opportunity to play, which was what everybody was looking for."

Buster said Juilliard is a performance-oriented school, which encourages students to become the best.

City primary narrows field

By The Collegian Staff

A field of eight city commission candidates was narrowed to six, and a group of four USD 383 School Board candidates was reduced to two after the city's primary election Tuesday.

The six city commission candidates will vie for three seats during the general election April 7. Those endorsed, and the percentage of votes they received are: Kent Glasscock, 22.12 percent; Nancy Rohles Denning, 18.79 percent; Richard B. Hayter, 18.66 percent; Bob Newsome, 13.02 percent; Ruth A. Schrum, 10.55 percent; and Roger E. Maughmer, 7.94 percent.

Facing each other for the school board's two-year seat is Beverly E. Eversmeyer, who received 49.83 percent of the primary vote, and Rudy Clarenburg, with 25.79 percent. The winner of the two-year seat will join the winners of the four four-year terms.

Voter turnout for the primary election was described as "about average," at 28 percent of registered voters, by Wanda Coder, Riley County clerk and election officer. Of 16,080 registered voters in Manhattan, 4,531 ballots were cast.

All six candidates are looking ahead to the April general election.

Glasscock, president of Home Lumber Co., said his campaigning will begin immediately.

"During the next month I plan on seeing as many people as I can and talking to them to see what is on their minds, what they're concerned about," he said. "Politics and government are supposed to be responsive to the concerns of the public."

Denning, president of Denning, Buster and Hungate marketing agency, also plans to campaign heavily during the weeks preceding the general election.

"I want to get to as many people as I can," Denning said.

Placing emphasis on direct personal contact with potential voters is also a part of Hayter's game plan.

"What's very important is that the voters get a chance to meet the candidates," he said. "We will be putting quite a bit of effort into one-to-one contact, door-to-door visitations and so on."

Hayter, director of engineering extension at K-State, said he was pleased to finish among the leading vote-getters.

Newsome, K-State area extension director, attributed his endorsement to being well-known among voters.

"I think the thing was name recognition," Newsome said.

He said he will be making campaign plans for the general election in the near future.

"I'll sit down this week and outline a campaign," he said. "I'll have more publicity than I did in the primary."

Schrum, teacher at Fort Riley Junior High School, said if elected she would make her position progressive, with continuing support of transportation improvements such as the widening of Seth Childs Road.

"I would eventually like to see a convention center built here in Manhattan," Schrum said.

"We need a wider representation of commissioners," she said. "Perhaps they need to be spread wider across the city in districts."

Speaker stresses history's importance to future generations

By JUDY GOLDBERG
Staff Writer

Knowledge of history is essential to improve society because without it, people cannot compare the present with the past, said Sue Zschoche, assistant professor of history, Tuesday night.

"When one has given up the past because it is either too unpleasent or too inconvenient, what is also gone is that grammar of meaning that makes it possible for people to connect with each other," she said. "When that is gone, the present becomes meaningless — a set of random associations.

Zschoche spoke to about 60 people in Nichols Theatre in the Last Lecture Series sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences Council.

"Given this, the night before I depart you, I would have to say 'why is it that I teach history?'" she said. Speakers in the Last Lecture Series are asked to give what would be their last speech before they die.

"The answer is, of course, that history matters," she said.

To explain the importance of history, Zschoche told a story about a man who suffered a partial memory loss.

"All he experiences is a bombardment of random stimuli," she said. "There is no present, there is no future and that is because there is no past."

She said people can avoid their own history and become "intentionally amnesiac."

"The history that they will live is one that they will make," she said, "but they will not make it intentionally, they will simply let it happen."

People cannot expect history to precisely define or point in the direction in which they should live today, she said.

"The connection to the past...does nothing more than help us identify the terrain where we now stand, and maybe explain to us a little bit how we got here," she said.

History for women became more meaningful in the mid 1800s, Zschoche said.

Women were given the chance to explore their individuality in 1865 with the opening of Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N.Y., — the first college exclusively for women, she said.

A Vassar graduate spoke at a ceremony on its 50th anniversary in which she called its early years, "spacious days," Zschoche said.

"She recognized that spacious meant two things; it meant extraordinary possibilities, as well as extraordinary risks.

"They had been handed the enormous responsibility to be the first generation of American women to define their own lives," she said.

These Vassar graduates were dedicated to improving society, she said.

Women of the 1920s said the preceding generation "was obsessed with its Messiah complex about saving the world," she said.

"The women of the 1920s fought the battle between what is good for me, vs. the question of what is good for all of us, and in the 1920s 'me' won," she said.

There is a tension between what an individual wants for himself and what he can offer to the rest of the world, she said.

"It seems to me that the trick is simply to not resolve the tension at all but to live with it," she said. "In that creative tension is how generations that can stand it produce something better for the next one."

"The future is up to us," she said. "History doesn't take you there, it only makes it possible to go."

Poindexter agrees to reduced rank

WASHINGTON — Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter, the White House national security adviser who resigned in the Iranian arms controversy, has decided to accept a reduction in rank rather than leave the Navy, the Pentagon announced Tuesday.

Robert Sims, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, said Poindexter "will revert as required by law to a two-star rank and be assigned to the long-range planning staff of the chief of naval operations here in the Washington area."

"That will occur as of tomorrow," Sims added. "He'll stay on active duty...as a rear admiral, serving on the staff of the chief of naval operations."

Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr., in discussing Poindexter's decision, said his new assignment was selected with an eye to "where his unique experience and expertise can really be of genuine help in the strategic planning of the Navy."

Israeli officer accused of spying

The three-count espionage indictment accuses Sella of recruiting Pollard, then a Navy civilian intelligence analyst, to gather military secrets helpful to Israel.

Sella, identified by prosecutors as a brigadier general, approached Pollard in the summer of 1984 and met with him several times to discuss obtaining secrets, the indictment charged.

Sella, now a commander of an Israeli Air Force Base, was charged with conspiracy to commit, gather or deliver national defense information, gathering such secrets and receiving or obtaining classified information as a foreign agent.

The charges carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

But Sella may never have to stand trial for the charges because the U.S.-Israeli extradition treaty exempts espionage. However, he would face arrest if he were to travel to the United States.

During several meetings in the summer of 1984, Pollard provided Sella with portions of two top-secret U.S. Army intelligence surveys of foreign countries.

The classification on these documents specify they not be shown to foreign intelligence agencies.

Pollard, who has been cooperating with the government investigation since his guilty plea last June, is scheduled to be sentenced Wednesday and could receive a life term for espionage.

Seoul peace march turns violent

SEOUL, South Korea — Demonstrators fought for hours against nearly 50,000 riot police in hit-and-run clashes Tuesday on the streets of Seoul during a day of remembrance for a student who died during police torture.

Violent confrontations also were reported in six other cities. Police said 20 people were hurt in all, two seriously, and 395 were detained.

At least four opposition lawmakers were injured, one seriously, in leading protesters against police, who fired tear gas and used shields and truncheons to fend off demonstrators.

Tuesday's "Grand Peace Marches for Anti-Torture and Democratization" were called by the main opposition New Korea Democratic Party and 47 dissident and church groups to mark the 49th day after the death of Park Chong-chul, 21.

Hearing ordered on Colby killings

TOPEKA — The Kansas Supreme Court has ordered a hearing in Thomas County District Court on Lisa Dunn's motion for a new trial which could overturn her multiple convictions on charges stemming from a February 1985 crime spree which left four dead in northwest Kansas.

The Supreme Court order, signed Monday and made public Tuesday, instructs Judge Keith Willoughby of Colby to conduct a hearing on Dunn's motion to determine if she should be granted a new trial.

Her public defender attorney, Jessica R. Kunen of Topeka, alleges in her petition for the new trial that newly discovered evidence indicates Dunn should have been allowed at her first trial to claim as a defense that she was the victim of the battered woman syndrome or the hostage syndrome.

That evidence, she said in her petition filed with the Supreme Court, involves an alleged sexual attack on Dunn by two men in Florida prior to her relationship with Daniel Remeta, a co-defendant in the Colby murder trial nearly two years ago.

Arkansas has been seeking Dunn's extradition to stand trial in another murder case. Conviction in that state could bring a sentence of death.

Americans lose pancake race again

LIBERAL — It's yet another case of wait until next year for American hopes of regaining the prestige of victory in the Shrove Tuesday international pancake race competition.

Elizabeth Bartlett's victory at Olney, England, was her second in a row and the fifth straight time that a British woman has won the race in which women run a 415-yard course while carrying a frying pan with a pancake in it.

The competitors — all wearing the traditional garb of skirts, aprons and head scarves — must flip their pancakes twice, at the beginning and end of the race.

Bartlett, a 30-year-old mother of two, ran from Olney's Market Square to the city's 14th century church in 64.7 seconds, crossing the line a yard ahead of her closest competitor in the 20-woman field.

At Liberal, Marcia Streiff, 29, a housewife with three children, led a field of 12 runners, but her time of 70.1 seconds was well behind Bartlett's.

Student murder, suicide stun town

DeKALB, Mo. — The mother of a 13-year-old boy shot and killed by a schoolmate who then took his own life says her son had tried to stop other students from taunting the boy about being overweight.

Timothy Perrin, 13, of Rushville, was shot Monday morning in a classroom at DeKalb High School by Nathan D. Faris, 12. Faris, who had been the object of relentless teasing, then shot himself.

Faris' funeral is scheduled for today in Atchison. He is to be buried near Rushville. Perrin's funeral is scheduled for Thursday.

Buchanan R-4 School Superintendent Robert Couldry said classes will be dismissed at 12:45 p.m. both days so students can attend the funerals.

Students in the seventh grade history class in the northwest Missouri school said Perrin tried unsuccessfully to take the gun after Faris pulled it out of a duffel bag.

"It was like Tim to try to stop something bad," said his mother, Billy Jane Vega, of nearby Rushville. "He was always trying to make things right."

She said her son had talked to her several times about Faris, who other students said had been teased for years about his weight.

Athletic injury clinic officially opens

By CHRIS HALL
Collegian Reporter

A ribbon-cutting ceremony today will mark the official opening of the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic, now providing services to about 120 students each week.

The clinic began operation at Lafene Student Health Center in October 1986. The ceremony will begin at 2:30 p.m. at Lafene.

University President Jon Wefald will be present, along with Kathleen Eriksen, representing Conrad Eriksen, contributor of the funds to start the clinic. Guy Smith, director of the clinic, will speak, and tours of the facility are scheduled.

A sports medicine clinic is unusual in the Big Eight Conference, said Eric Muehleisen, administrative officer at Lafene.

"It does more than repair (injuries)," he said. "There is also research done on how to avoid injury.

"We do evaluation and treatment of injuries. Most are sports-related," Smith said. "We provide not only care of the acute injury, but also rehabilitation and a protective return to sports. Our goal is preventing recurrent injuries."

Hired in August 1980 as the physician for the University's sports teams, Smith serves in this capacity for all sports teams except the men's basketball and football teams.

Smith said he was interested in starting the clinic because he didn't want to confine access of treatment for sports-related injuries to the students on the University teams.

The clinic is open to students participating in club sports and intramurals, and other students needing treatment or advice, he said.

"There is a lack of information and a lot of misconceptions about sports injuries," Smith said. "I thought if we had a place with the name (sports medicine clinic) people would come."

One of Smith's goals for the clinic is to hire an athletic trainer to take care of intramurals and other injuries on campus, he said.

"We'd like a unified system to have a certified trainer available at the (Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex) at certain hours of the day," Smith said.

The trainer positions would be filled by graduate assistants in physical education who are taking additional instruction in athletic training, he said. Trainers can be certified by the National Athletic Training Association.

Trainers would be able to recognize injuries needing treatment and could bring the students to the clinic the next day, Smith said. Treatment would continue with a rehabilitation program.

"A lot of injuries are neglected. The most common of these are finger injuries," he said. "Some we see two weeks after the injury occurred.

"If the trainer was there to recognize that the injury needs to be seen, the chance of the student coming over is much higher. This (early treatment) could possibly prevent surgery or deformity."

A second project is to instigate a heat injury warning system.

The clinic has equipment that tests environmental conditions and assigns a numerical value to the heat stress factor. Muehleisen said people can adjust their exercise to this factor to prevent heat stress and other heat-related injuries.

Staff members could alert people daily about the heat stress factor by flying different colored flags on a flagpole, Muehleisen said. Lafene is working with University Facilities to select a campus site for a flagpole.

Currently, local radio stations broadcast the heat stress information, he said.

"The high school football coach gears his practice sessions to it," Muehleisen said.

"They are pushing you to practice and play and get good and go out and get famous so that Juilliard will get more famous."

He said he believes the average student at Juilliard isn't a lot more talented than the average student at big state schools.

"It is just that they are obviously...more motivated or they wouldn't have managed to get there in the first place," Buster said.

The orchestras and private lessons were the most rewarding aspects of the school, Buster said.

"All the string players have to play in orchestra, and, of course, all the string players disdain playing in orchestra, because they are all convinced they are going to end up as soloists, at the most.

"But they can play very well. The rehearsals tend to sometimes be quite rocky because their hearts really aren't in it, but when concert time comes and you get them all on stage, wondrous things happen," he said.

After Juilliard, Buster came to Manhattan and applied for a position at K-State to teach horn, but the position was later withdrawn.

Buster played in the city band that summer and met several members of K-State's music faculty.

Shortly after arriving in Manhattan, Buster had begun working part time for a construction company in town.

Later, he and his wife built a home for themselves.

"From there we decided to go into construction with her working full time at it and me working part time at that and also with the teaching. We did that clear up through '84," he said.

"I used to think that music was the only thing worth doing...

"Maybe a little more effort on my part would have taken me there. Maybe I would be having the time of my life, playing in a major orchestra somewhere, or even a minor one.

"Other than the fact that I don't get to do enough playing, I'm pretty happy with where I am."

Ruling to help AIDS victims

Law protects contagiously ill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in a ruling likely to help AIDS victims fight discrimination, said Tuesday people with contagious diseases are protected by a federal law helping the handicapped.

The court, by a 7-2 vote, said businesses and government entities receiving federal aid are barred from discriminating — in employment or otherwise — against people with contagious diseases.

Rejecting Reagan administration arguments, the court said employers may be violating a 1973 federal law if they fire employees based solely on a fear that those employees may spread a disease.

The decision did not directly involve Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, a deadly viral disease. And the court pointed out it was not deciding whether some carriers of AIDS, those who do not suffer from symptoms of the disease, are covered by the 1973 law.

But gay rights groups and other organizations nevertheless hailed the ruling as a huge victory for efforts to protect AIDS victims from discrimination in employment, housing, insurance and health care.

The ruling kept alive a job-discrimination lawsuit against the Nassau County, Fla., School Board by Gene Arline, fired as an elementary school teacher in 1979 because she had tuberculosis, an infectious respiratory disease.

Led by Justice William J. Brennan, the court said allowing bias based on a disease's contagious effects conflicts with the basic purpose of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 — to ensure that handicapped people "are not denied jobs or other benefits because of the prejudiced attitudes or the ignorance of others."

Brennan said, "It would be unfair to allow an employer to seize upon the distinction between the effects of a disease on others and (its) effects...on a patient and use that distinction to justify discriminatory treatment."

Jean O'Leary, executive director of the National Gay Rights Advocates, said the decision "certainly bodes well for us."

"It shores up our position and goes against what the Justice Department has said," she added. "It moves us one step closer to obtaining a federal remedy for discrimination."

Ben Schatz, director of NGRA's AIDS Civil Rights Project, said the decision could influence job-bias cases now pending in lower courts.

"My guess is that...lawyers on both management's side and the plaintiff's side are going to have the understanding that AIDS-based discrimination is illegal," Schatz said. "I think that will be the very clear result of this decision."

Homosexuals are among the victims of AIDS, a virus that destroys a person's immune system and leaves him or her vulnerable to other diseases. The AIDS virus can be transmitted by sexual contact, transfusion of blood or blood products or contact between mother and child around the time of birth.

Barbara Elkin of the Epilepsy Foundation of America praised the ruling, calling it "a victory for all people with disabilities."

Reagan administration lawyers had joined with the Nassau County school officials in seeking to kill Arline's lawsuit.

They had argued that she was not discriminated against because of her handicap but because of her alleged contagiousness.

Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland expressed disappointment with the ruling, saying, "We made our arguments. We wish the court had decided differently. Other than that we have no comment."

In a highly publicized memorandum last year, the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel said employers do not violate the 1973 law by firing employees out of a fear, even an unfounded one, that they may spread a disease.

Tuesday's decision rejected that interpretion of the law.

A little story about Martin, Fawn, Ollie

SCOTT MILLER
Collegian Columnist

This is the story of Martin, Fawn and Ollie (not to be confused with Kukla, Fran and Ollie). It is a story about crime and punishment and about three people — very similar in some respects, very dissimilar in others. It is not a happy story or an unhappy story — only a puzzling one.

Unlike most stories, this one is not about how the paths of its characters eventually cross, but how they do not, and probably never will cross. But I'm getting ahead of myself so I'll start at the beginning.

Our story begins with Martin Holladay. The son of a United Church of Christ minister, Holladay grew up a world traveler. His father's studies in Old Testament theology took the family from San Andreas, Calif., where Martin was born, to Holland, Colorado, Illinois, Lebanon and Massachusetts.

Although a bright student, Holladay was expelled from high school after leading a Vietnam "die-in." Following is an excerpt from Holladay's answers to a 10th grade autobiographic questionnaire:

"I am torn between a desire to go to college and repulsion at the thought of just going because I'm supposed to. Sometimes I just want to flee everything and everybody; flee the system and the high school and the little old lady next door who says 'get a good education, then get a good job' and the guidance counselor with his IBM card of career choices and the three or four hour SATs that make you want to stand up and scream an obscenity."

Holladay attended Yale University where he was noted for his good grades. He eventually dropped out to work as a carpenter. Meanwhile, in 1974, as Holladay was at Yale, an important event was taking place in the life of another of our story's characters whom I'll take a moment to introduce.

Meet Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North. A recent news item from the Kansas City Times described North as "a charming, zealous Christian and anti-communist who was willing to work incredibly long hours, shun vacations and take high-risk shortcuts to achieve the purposes he and the president shared."

The same article also paraphrased the Tower Commission Report's characterization of North: "a persistent liar, flatterer and name-dropper whose obsession with secrecy and can-do attitude added up to recklessness." As I said, 1974 was an important year for North — it was then that he was hospitalized for three weeks for emotional distress.

A decade later, in 1984, North developed a plan to use private Americans and foreign governments, such as Israel, to secretly fund the Nicaraguan Contras. President Reagan approved the plan and left North to implement it as he saw fit.

As North was seeking out intermediaries to keep the Contras armed, 1984 found Martin Holladay on the opposite end of the political spectrum. He was sentenced to six months in a federal prison for painting "REAGAN IS HEROD" on the Pentagon. He served his sentence and was released, but within a year, Holladay was again in trouble with the federal government.

At about 6:30 a.m. on Feb. 19, 1985, Holladay got a ride to N-11, a Minuteman II missile silo in Layaffette County, 40 miles east of Kansas City, Mo. He proceeded to pour from a bottle a half pint of his blood onto the silo's concrete lid. He put up a banner bearing the words, "SWORDS INTO PLOWSHARES," and painted a number of slogans, such as "DISARM OR DIG GRAVES" and "NO MORE HIROSHIMAS," on the silo's maintenance hatch. He then attacked the silo with a hammer and chisel, before smashing two electrical boxes.

Holladay was charged with willful destruction of government property and sabotage. He pleaded not guilty and based his defense on two arguments — that nuclear weapons violate international law, and that his action was justified to prevent an imminent danger. U.S. District Court Judge Elmo B. Hunter would allow the jury to hear neither argument.

Holladay was convicted and given eight years in prison, a $1,000 fine and ordered to pay $2,442 in restitution. In early October 1986, after more than a year in prison, Holladay's sentence was reduced to five years' probation. The fine and the restitution money, however, remained intact.

When queried about Holladay's sentence, John B. Skelton, owner of the 260-acre farm where N-11 is located and brother of U.S. Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., said, "I feel nothing negative about it. He broke the law. He destroyed government property, and he needs to be punished, just as surely as if he robbed a bank."

Meanwhile, in Washington, North was still secretly funneling aid to the Contras while Fawn Hall, North's secretary and another prominent character in our story, was dating the son of a Contra leader. Within a month, Hall was on her way to becoming an unwitting national celebrity by feeding incriminating National Security Council documents into the paper shredder. She has testified that North was also present at this document-shredding session.

Like her boss, Hall has lost her job at the White House. Martin Holladay has lost more than a year of his freedom. For her part in the attempted Contrascam cover-up, that is, for her part in the wiilful destruction of government property, Hall was granted immunity. Holladay was sent to prison.

North has been reassigned to a desk job in internal Marine Corps service matters. Holladay, on the other hand, has returned to his home in Vermont to begin paying the fine and restitution money. As for Hall, there's probably a career in television sitcoms waiting in the wings.

As I mentioned, it's not a happy or unhappy story, merely a puzzling one if one is willing to think about it. But it is only a story, and for their own part, millions of Americans can sleep soundly tonight, confident that justice has been served.

Privacy is paramount in health information

The Kansas Senate passed and has sent a bill to the House which would require all hospitals, health care centers and doctors performing abortions to file annual statistical reports with the state Department of Health and Environment.

The reports would contain the number of abortions performed, the names of women who received abortions and "any other" information the department deems necessary. The department could only release statistical totals to the public and not the names of individuals.

The names of individuals who choose to have an abortion will be listed somewhere — in someone's file cabinet. Anti-abortion groups will use this information not only to pressure doctors and centers to stop performing legal abortions but to pressure individuals to stop having abortions.

Where there is a will there is a way, and anti-abortion groups will find a way to access the file cabinets that contain the "lists."

Supporters of the bill claim it would allow the state to keep more accurate records. Currently, abortion numbers are released only by hospitals. More accurate records can be obtained by compiling the numbers of abortions performed by doctors, hospitals and care centers.

If more accurate records are what they want then why are names and "other" information needed?

There is no legitimate public health reason why the names should be provided to the department. A possible health problem may actually occur because of this legislation and more abortions may be performed illegally.

SMU's 'death penalty' colossal NCAA failing

They should have had the book thrown at them. The "death penalty" should have been used to the full extent last week, sparing none who violated the law to the extent they did.

"They" are the Southern Methodist University Mustangs, and their offenses are payoffs totaling $47,000 to football team members.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association penalized the already-on-probation Mustangs by ordering a shutdown of the football program for one year. The following year, the team may only play seven away games. And there will be no TV appearances or bowl games for SMU in 1988.

Yet the NCAA, in the wake of a recent ruling called the "death penalty," dropped back and punted when it should have taken the role of the aggressor.

The ruling was designed to combat cheating in college sports and calls for the complete two-year shutdown of an athletic program in extreme cases of regulation violation.

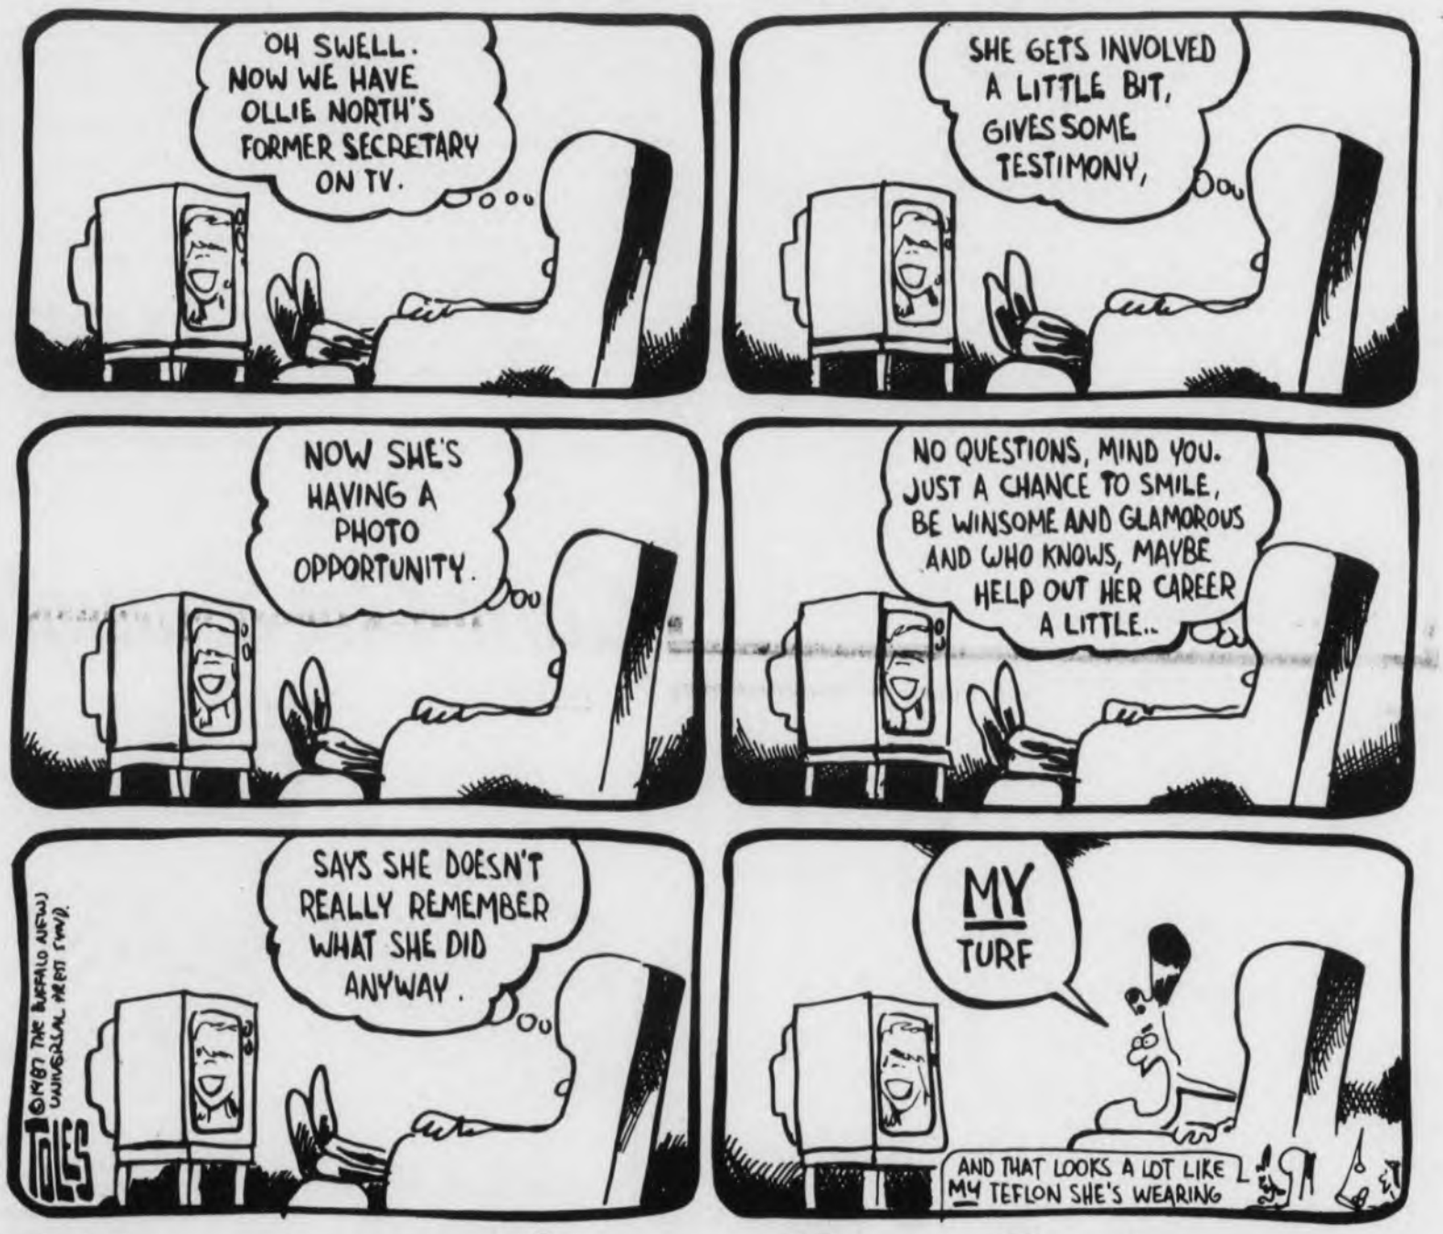
So what is considered "extreme?" If these payoffs weren't enough, what is?

The NCAA said it backed off on its punishment because SMU aided in the investigation. But anyone about to receive a death sentence would be wise to cooperate if it would help result in a stay of execution.

SMU is well known for its history of recruiting violations. It now is tied with The Wichita State University in running up the most penalties ever imposed against a higher education institution in the history of collegiate athletics.

There is a need for reform in college athletics. The NCAA had the opportunity to do just that, but it only carried the ball halfway. A message was sent to all athletic teams: "Next time." But what will it take for there to be a next time?

The NCAA needs to get its game plan in order and decide who is calling the plays — the organization or the football teams.



The new ruling, as stringent as it promises it can be, is no good unless it is used.

Mortgaging the future

Halting SDI research a mistake

JOE LASK
Guest Columnist

Sometimes we make decisions based on emotions instead of rational thought. While this type of decision-making may be appropriate for personal feelings, it is not the best way to formulate important United States policies like national defense. In last Thursday's Collegian, Professor Al Compaan said the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) would be "impossible" to develop. While I respect his convictions, I must disagree with his logic and presumptuous statements that do nothing more than vent politically based opinions.

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effective means of preserving the peace." George Washington said that more than 200 years ago when he wrote about the need for a strong defense to deter war. It is an ironical statement that has been echoed by many other presidents, including Woodrow Wilson, Franklin Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy. In a world with massive amounts of nuclear weapons, it has become more incumbent upon us than ever before to ensure that peace is preserved. The way to ensure peace in the electronic revolution that we are undergoing is through SDI.

It is clear that the Soviet Union is bent on carrying out its expansionistic policies while using force to facilitate its objectives. Intelligence sources have discovered a classified Soviet document which illustrates Soviet attitudes toward space-based research and SDI: "The mastering of space is a prerequisite to winning the next war." It doesn't take a ton of bricks hitting me in the head to make me realize why the Russians want us to discontinue SDI research. What I don't understand is why people such as Compaan want the United States to end SDI research and leave America vulnerable when the Soviet Union develops such a system. If the United States allows their efforts to go unchecked, it will ultimately lead to a war of disastrous consequences.

SDI is our most important defense program under development. Deputy Secretary of Defense William Howard Taft IV points out: "To prove the potential of a defensive deterrent — the first goal of SDI research — we need only show that we can make the success of any attack so uncertain that an adversary would not hazard aggression."

Even a partially effective defense, Taft suggests, "can be an effective deterrent. No rational aggressor is likely to contemplate nuclear conflict when the ability to penetrate our defensive system and destroy our retaliatory capability remains so uncertain." In the case where the irrational does occur or there is an accidental launch, SDI would provide the only means of protecting our people and people of the Soviet Union. Today, once an ICBM is launched, it cannot be retargeted or stopped.

No reasonable SDI spokesman has stated an intended reliance on a space-based antimissile or given such reliance that it will fully protect the U.S. population from nuclear attack. SDI is a research program, not one for deploying weapons. The idea is to integrate ongoing programs into a cohesive program so we can get the results we want. SDI is an intensive, treaty-consistent research program designed to fulfill both a short- and long-range objective.

The short-term objective is designed to respond to the extensive Soviet SDI/anti-ballistic missile effort. If anyone contends that the Soviets are not conducting this research, they are hopelessly naive. Did you know that the Soviet Union has the only operational anti-ballistic missile system in the world? SDI is also aimed in the long term at eventually eliminating the threat posed by nuclear-tipped ballistic missiles.

According to Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, the overall objective of this research is to provide the technical knowledge necessary to support future decisions about the program. An argument that SDI is "technically infeasible" shows no concern for the advancement of science and technology. What would have happened in 1960 if university professors around the nation had said that it was impossible to put a man on the moon?

I was shocked that Compaan would call a technical research program "impossible," but I suppose there were "experts" who told Dr. Jonas Salk that a vaccine for polio was impossible. A sure way not to succeed is not to try.

Hedonistic attitude

Editor,

Students at K-State recently had the opportunity to hear Playboy columnist James Peterson. Being the curious creature I am, I too stopped in Forum Hall Feb. 23 to hear for myself what Peterson had to say.

To say I was shocked might be exaggerating. However, I was surprised to hear the content of Peterson's message. As a student of K-State in the late 1970s, I asked myself, "Would this type of lecture have occurred at K-State eight years ago?" My answer, "I don't think so."

Perhaps we're catching up with the sexual revolution, or at least accepting the variations of sexual fulfillment which Peterson expounded on. But, I am concerned with such change. My primary concern is toward the hedonistic attitude which Peterson conveys. That is, if it feels good do it.

And not only do it, but do it often and without reservation. Now, if hedonism is the path we're going to walk, then are there to be any limits upon us? I do suppose Peterson would propose that the people engaging in sexual activity should all be in agreement, but is that merely enough?

Are there no moral absolutes by which we gauge our actions? Without such absolutes, how could we rationally uphold any kind of law that would limit "sexual fulfillment," i.e. laws against rape or incest?

As a Christian, I obviously carry certain views about where such moral absolutes might be found. But before you discount what I say as archaic or "religious," please consider how you arrive at your own view of what's right or wrong. I must simply ask myself, "If there is a God, could this God have communicated to us?" (I don't mean in a mere inner, mystical sense, but in an objective, historical sense.)

And if such communication is available to us in the Bible, then should we discard it as irrelevant? Let's face it, if God is really God then what He communicates should be important. (Please don't confuse my defense of the Bible as God's word to that supposedly given by Oral Roberts!)

Peterson is at least consistent enough to imply that if through finding sexual fulfillment he were to contract AIDS, then what better way to go. However, based upon what I understand of the agony and ugliness of the death caused by AIDS, I wonder if Peterson isn't being naively courageous. My guess is that he must say what he did about death to be consistent with his hedonism, but if indeed faced with such a cruel death, he would reconsider his personal views toward sex.

Editor,

Present becomes past and turns into history before our eyes. In this history lessons are written for the wise to learn from and teach to others. This is one thing America and Americans have failed to do and in so doing have failed themselves. Do you ever wonder why Americans are targets of attacks, kidnappings and rallies with slogans like "death to America?"

Do you think people wake up in the morning and feel a sudden urge to kill, kidnap or threaten Americans? If your answer is "Yes," then my friends you are very naive. When things like that do happen, it becomes easy to ignorantly point fingers and from there stereotyping, prejudice, hate and fake patriotism are born. To automatically assume that "we're right and they're wrong" is the easy way out.

Unfortunately, the world is not black and white, and right and wrong are relative depending on where you stand. Noam Chomsky, in his book "Pirates and Emperors," wrote: "St. Augustine tells the story of a pirate captured by Alexander the Great, who asked him how he dares molest the sea. 'How dare you molest the whole world?' The priest replied: 'Because I do it with a little ship only, I am called a thief; you doing it with a great navy are called an emperor.'"

This holds true in this day and age and the only way to realize that is to seek the truth and not just wait for it to come knocking at your door watered down and picked apart. Ignorance is not bliss, but ignorance is safe and until people understand what urges others to commit such acts, the killing will go on. And, yes, you may then hold up your hand and say I had a hand in this because I didn't care enough to seek the truth.

Overzealous staff

Editor,

I hate going to the library to begin with. It's always hot. Every time I leave, I have to walk through those stupid little doors. And I swear, it doesn't matter what subject I'm researching, every time I've tried I've never found the exact book I was looking for. Recently, my hate for the library reached heights even Farrell's 57 flights of stairs cannot compete with.

After spending an entire hour looking for books I already knew I could never find, I decided to grab something that would remotely suit my purposes and I laid the books next to my sketchbook, backpack and notebook on one of the tables. I then decided not enough of my time had been wasted that day and I returned to the lobby to do battle with the card catalog. When I returned, my backpack was there, but the books I had spent an hour searching for, as well as my notebook and sketchbook, had disappeared.

I had not been gone 10 minutes before the slightly overzealous crew of Farrell Library had whisked away my efforts and personal belongings. In a mad rush, I searched and frantically checked with three of Farrell's many offices and found it would probably be impossible to recover the books. As for my notebook and sketchbook, they didn't know where they could have disappeared to. My guess is they were taken and shelved somewhere on the 57th floor, in the back. And even if my notebooks were listed in the card catalog, that would only mean they're history.

Stop my hate for the library. The heat from 50 million bodies that wander in and out daily should be enough to defrost the entire campus in the dead of winter, so get them to leave the heat off. Those little doors make funny noises when you wear your Walkman through them anyway, so just get rid of them. Buy some books that correspond to the cards. And for gosh sakes, tell them not to work those poor library people so hard, so maybe we can read our books before they get reshelved.

Missile talks endure

U.S. to offer new arms plan

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — U.S. and Soviet teams continued talks on medium-range nuclear missiles and President Reagan said the Americans would present new proposals Wednesday, when this round of talks originally had been scheduled to end.

Maynard Glitman and Lem Masterkov led the U.S. and Soviet negotiators in Tuesday's meeting. Soviet spokesman Alexander Monakhov said they talked for about 90 minutes at the Soviet Mission, but he gave no details.

Max Kampelman and Yuli Vorontsov, chiefs of the two delegations, had a luncheon meeting Tuesday to discuss procedure.

During an appearance in the White House briefing room in Washington, Reagan said: "I welcome the statement by Soviet Secretary-General Gorbachev on Saturday that the Soviet Union will no longer insist on linking agreement on reduction in INF (Intermediate Nuclear Force) to agreements in other negotiations."

Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, proposed that the superpowers reach an agreement apart from other arms negotiations on eliminating medium-range missiles from Europe in five years.

Reagan said he would bring U.S. negotiators home for consultations at the end of this week and, "following these dicussions in Washington I will send a team back to Geneva to take up once again the detailed negotiations for an INF reduction agreement."

He said he had told the American team to begin presenting the U.S. proposals Wednesday and added: "I hope that the Soviet Union will then proceed with us to serious discussion of details which are essential to translate areas of agreement in principle to a concrete agreement."

Among issues to be resolved, he said, "none is more important than verification. We will continue to insist that any agreement will be effectively verifiable."

U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva are in three areas: medium-range missles; long-range, or strategic weapons; and the fields of defense and space.

Gorbachev's offer reversed the Soviet position, taken after his Iceland summit with Reagan last October, that agreement on medium-range nuclear forces must be tied to the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative.

The space-based defense project, commonly called "Star Wars," has been a major sticking point since the Geneva talks began two years ago. Moscow has insisted the United States curtail research, but Washington refuses to accept limits.

In the latest Soviet attack on Star Wars, a speech delivered Tuesday by the chief Soviet delegate to the 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament, Yuri Nazarkin said: "whatever its 'defensive' labels, (it) is designed to alter the balance of forces to the advantage of the United States."

He reaffirmed the new Soviet position that a deal on medium-range missiles no longer is conditional on agreement about Star Wars.

Pravda, the Soviet Communist Party newspaper, quoted Gorbachev on Tuesday as calling a medium-range weapons agreement a "tremendous" step toward others on arms reduction and regional conflicts.

His proposal would affect the 316 U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles deployed in Western Europe and Soviet SS-20s. Western officials estimate 441 SS-20s are deployed in the Soviet Union.

Gen. Sergei F. Akhromeyev, the Soviet army chief of staff, said Monday that 243 were aimed at Europe. The rest presumably are in Asia.

Committee wants remembrance for students killed in Vietnam

By BRUCE DOLSBERRY
Collegian Reporter

Although K-State has memorials for students who died in World War I, World War II and the Korean War, some people are hoping to construct a fitting memorial for students killed during the Vietnam conflict.

The only memorial honoring Vietnam War casualties now is a 1969 plaque in the Union, said Bill Arck, director of the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services at K-State. Arck, who originated the idea and planning for the memorial, said his involvement in the project stems from his serving in the Vietnam War.

The committee, comprising Arnold Air Society members, an honorary for K-State's Air Force ROTC cadets, was formed in January to investigate the possibility of erecting the memorial.

Gary Haulmark, sophomore in political science, is chairman of the committee.

"We feel there is a need for a memorial to honor those who died in the Vietnam War and hope to get the appropriations and materials necessary," Haulmark said.

The committee has received approval from the University administration to pursue the project, Arck said. University facilities planners identified the campus quadrangle north of Nichols Hall and west of McCain Auditorium as the most likely spot for the memorial.

"We have contacted the College of Architecture and Design and the construction science department to get ideas from students," he said.

Arck said the college will probably sponsor competition to determine what design should be used.

Although the project has University approval, it will not be funded by the University. The committee will seek financial support from local and campus groups, veterans' organizations and individuals, Arck said.

Cooking Slow and Easy

Illustration by Gary Lytle

By DANA BRADLEY
Collegian Reporter

For the busy life of the college student, especially the apartment dweller, the Crockpot or slow-cooker offers an affordable, easy and nutritious answer to eating.

Food prepared in slow-cookers can be fixed before students leave for campus and will be ready to eat upon their return at the end of the day.

The slow-cooker is economical to operate at an average rate of 3 to 4 cents a day. The actual cost will vary with the appliance and local utility rates. However, low wattage over a long period costs less than high wattage over a short period.

Nutrition is a common concern today, and slow-cookers provide the convenience of cooking meats, main dishes, cakes, vegetables, pasta, beans, puddings and breads without the hassle of constant supervision.

Crockpots allow meat and vegetable combinations to cook unattended for eight to 10 hours. Food cooked in a slow-cooker does not burn if left longer than required, and the natural flavors and juices are retained. Tender cuts of meat cook with less shrinkage and remain moist. Another benefit is the food is heated, but the kitchen stays cool.

Features to look for when purchasing a slow-cooker are a wraparound heating system, transparent glass cover, removability of inner vessel, proper size and easy care.

The wraparound heating system replaces stirring necessary in conventional cooking. The absence of the "hot spot" of heat on the bottom provides even distribution of heat throughout the pot.

A transparent glass cover helps the cook check the progress of the food being prepared. Lifting a non-transparent cover allows moisture and heat to escape, possibly causing the food to dry out and burn.

Crockpots come in a variety of sizes, allowing for different needs. The 3½-quart size is the most popular. When looking for a proper size of pot, potential owners should choose a cooker they can keep at least half filled when in use.

For convenience in cleaning, a removable vessel or an immersible appliance with a detachable heat control unit is best. A detachable cord will also add to the ease of cleaning and carrying.

Care and warranty are important features. Ease and time required for cleaning are essential to choosing a slow-cooker. Small appliances are usually accompanied by a 30- to 90-day warranty.

Higher purchase prices are associated with sheathed liners, immersible design, removable inner vessels, detachable heat control, larger size, higher wattage, Teflon lining, porcelain exteriors and multipurpose use.

If the recipe calls for 15 to 30 minutes of cooking time in a conventional oven, the slow-cooker would require one to two hours on high or four to eight hours on low.

A time of 35 to 45 minutes of conventional cooking would require two to four hours on high or six to eight hours on low.

A time frame of 50 minutes to three hours would require three to five hours on high or eight to 18 hours on low. For more specific instructions it is best to refer to the instruction pamphlet for the particular model.

The history of "pit cooking," as the slow-cooking method was previously called, goes back as far as prehistoric times. Pits were dug in the ground, lined with flat, overlapping stones to restrict seepage and then filled with water. The water was heated by adding hot stones from a fire.

Another method of "pit cooking" was to line the pit with heated stones, and place the food wrapped in leaves and seaweed on the stones. The pit was then covered with vegetation and more hot stones, and the food was allowed to cook.

The "pit cooking" method was also used by the American Indian and later became known on the seacoast as the clambake.

The slow-cooker as it is known today was introduced in 1971.

Soups, stews preserve 'melting pot' history

By SUSAN STAGGENBORG
Collegian Reporter

Soups and stews chase away many a chill and are a convenience food for many busy cooks.

Soups have been a part of world cuisine as long as fire has been known to man. Before man learned to make fireproof pottery, ancient cooks prepared soups in animal skins or seashells over an open fire.

Because there were no spoons before the Middle Ages, soup was sipped from the bowl, or bread was dipped into it. This method of eating was known as "sop" or "sup," the origin of the word "soup."

The American Indians developed the soup concoction using available foods such as beans, corn, pumpkin and meat from the daily hunt. They placed the ingredients in watertight skins, added water and placed it on white-hot stones to heat the soup.

The colonists brought large iron kettles to the New World and used the soup pots as a catchall for bits of meat and vegetables that often cooked all day.

Many soups start with a beef or chicken stock. What is added later is left to the imagination. Grandma's chicken soup has come a long way.

Commercially prepared soups can be condensed, dehydrated or frozen, making them convenient for people on tight schedules.

Old favorites such as tomato, chicken noodle and vegetable beef are being joined by "gourmet" and "homestyle" soups.

Consumer Reports, March 1987, found that soups lack nutritional value if eaten as a meal, but are better nutritionally if eaten with a meal.

Soups have high amounts of sodium, from 700 to more than 1,000 milligrams per serving, according to a Consumer Reports test.

According to Consumer Reports, cream soups are higher in calories because milk adds to the calorie content. Calories are lowest in condensed soups and mixes, which are mostly water. These soups range from 70 to 120 calories per serving.

The two varieties of Eastern clam chowders emerged under political strife. New England cooks contended that their chowder should never contain tomatoes. In 1939, Maine's Legislature passed a bill prohibiting the use of tomatoes in that state's chowder.

The debate started as one politician claimed the addition of tomatoes was a subversion on the part of the "reds." So emerged the white New England Clam Chowder and the red Manhattan Clam Chowder.

Soups are a symbol of the great American melting pot. As immigrants came to this country over the centuries, they brought with them their foods and cooking methods to make the soup pot a symbol of the American spirit.

IRISH POTATO SOUP

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 large onion, finely chopped
1/8 teaspoon thyme leaves, crushed
4 medium potatoes, cubed
1 cup water
1 teaspoon salt
3 cups milk

In a 3-quart saucepan over medium-high heat, cook onion with thyme in hot butter until onion is tender. Stir in potatoes, water and salt; heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low. Cover; simmer 20 minutes or until potatoes are fork-tender. With electric mixer at low speed, beat mixture until smooth. Gradually add milk, stirring constantly. Over low heat, heat just to boiling, about 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Yields 5 cups.

Stews are in a different class than soups. They are much heartier than soups and can be used as a main course.

Each part of the world has its own version of stew, and each American region has its particular specialty.

Brunswick Stew is a Southern dish. In Brunswick, Ga., or Brunswick, La., the South formulated this spicy stew. Although it is not considered authentic if it does not contain squirrel or rabbit meat, most modern cooks use chicken as the meat ingredient.

In the summer, a stew may contain fresh garden vegetables. A winter stew may contain hardy root vegetables and game meat.

Chuckwagon Stew followed every cattle drive across America as it was prepared over an open fire with a minimum of ingredients.

The stew was named for its inventor, Charles "Chuck" Goodnight. During cattle drives, all the food had to be packed into the wagon, so the cook had to use imagination to vary a diet consisting largely of bread, beans and beef.

Gumbo is a Creole specialty from Louisiana, a mixture of French, Spanish, African and American Indian influences. Gumbo can include chicken, ham, shrimp, oysters, crab and sausage.

Soups and stews offer warmth on a cold day and ease of preparation for a busy cook. Commercial soups are a good source of nutrition, but nothing tastes like homemade.

OLD-FASHIONED BEEF STEW

2 pounds beef
1/4 cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons salad oil
2 cups water
3/4 cup tomato juice
1 bay leaf
1 teaspoom thyme, crushed
4 potatoes, cubed
6 carrots, cut into 1 inch pieces
2 stalks celery, sliced
½ pound small whole onions

Cut beef into 1-inch pieces. In paper bag, combine flour, salt and pepper. Add meat a few pieces at a time; close bag and shake to coat. Repeat with remaining meat. In 5-quart Dutch oven over medium-high heat, cook meat in hot oil until browned on all sides. Stir in water, tomato juice, bay leaf and thyme. Reduce heat to low. Cover; simmer 2 hours, stirring occasionally. Stir in potatoes, carrots, celery and onions. Over medium heat, heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low. Cover; simmer 30 minutes or more until meat and vegetables are fork-tender. Yields 9 cups.

Vending machines now offering more nourishment for those needing hasty, inexpensive refreshment

By SUSAN STAGGENBORG
Collegian Reporter

Although campus vending machines offer nutritional snacks among the junk food fare, most vendo users don't spend their quarters on health food.

Although new refrigerated vending machines offer fruit, yogurt and sandwiches, people grabbing a quick, inexpensive snack still tend to choose more traditional vendo fare such as candy and chips. Refrigerated items are often more expensive, but they offer more nutritional value.

"As long as you are eating a balanced diet, (vending foods) are all right," said Paige Sultemeier, service dietitian for Derby Food Center. "If not, you'll get the calories and fat.

"Ideally, you should get two proteins, two cups of milk, four fruits and vegetables, and four servings from the bread and cereal groups every day," Sultemeier said.

Foods that do not fit into these groups are usually classified into a miscellaneous fifth food group. Foods such as candy bars, potato chips and cakes fall into this category, Sultemeier said.

People who eat out of this group are eating foods of the least value to the daily diet. These foods contain the most calories.

"Candy bars are OK if you are getting the nutritional needs elsewhere in the diet," Sultemeier said. "You don't want to replace good foods with candy bars."

Any calories left over may be eaten out of the fifth food group. If a person is on a diet, this group should be cut out first, Sultemeier said.

The peanuts and sunflower seeds found in vending machines are a good source of protein, but they are high in sodium, which has been linked to hypertension, one of the symptoms leading to heart disease and stroke. People with diets high in sodium frequently suffer from hypertension.

A bag of peanut M&M's has 177 calories and is relatively low in fat and sodium, and one Reese's Peanut Butter Cup contains 130 calories and is moderately high in sodium, according to "Food Values of Portions Commonly Used," revised by Jean A.T. Pennington.

The best bet at the vending machines is a package of crackers. They contain the lowest calories and also fit into the bread and cereal group, Sultemeier said.

Group to demonstrate Arabian culture

Students to present area's food, music

By TERESA TEMME
Staff Writer

An Arabian Night will bring the mystique of the Middle East to Manhattan at 7 p.m. Saturday, complete with Arabian food, music, dancing and a traditional wedding ceremony.

The Arab Student Association will sponsor the event in Cico Park.

Hisham Hawari, senior in electrical engineering and member of the association, said the purpose of the event is not to raise money, but to present Arab culture. The idea for the evening was created to educate students about countries of the Middle East.

"It is mainly an event in which everyone can get together and share their culture," Hawari said.

The evening will begin at 7 with a dinner featuring several types of Arabic food. During the dinner a slide show and narration will highlight each Arab country and its culture.

Following the dinner, four dancers will entertain the audience with traditional Arab dances, a fashion show will give a view of Arab dress, and later in the evening the audience will be invited to attend a mock traditional Arab wedding ceremony, he said.

Throughout the evening, Arabic music will provide a Middle Eastern atmosphere for the audience. Hawari said the specific events should last two hours, but everyone is invited to stay and dance to the Arabic music. He said most of those who have come to the event in the past enjoyed dancing to the music.

Hawari said Arabian Night has been held for the last seven or eight years, except for last year when the group sponsored a smaller event. The cost per person is $6.

Rania Farraj, junior in business management and member of the association, said any money left after costs are paid will go into the association's funds and will be used to bring speakers to the campus in the future.

Farraj said there are 22 members in the association and almost every member is helping to put on the event.

"Everyone has a different job to do," Farraj said.

She added that the association has existed for more than 20 years and, "some members' fathers even used to study here at K-State."

Farraj said the association came up with the idea to sponsor Arabian Night about eight years ago in order to share their culture among themselves and with other students.

The tickets will be sold by association members in the Union all week. Raffle tickets may also be purchased in the Union during this time. Winners of the raffle will be announced Saturday night, and the prizes include three traditional Arab items: a woman's dress, carpet and scarf.

Farraj and Hawari said tickets will not be sold at the door on Saturday evening because the dinner and events will be under way.

Reagan chooses Webster to direct CIA

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Tuesday chose FBI Director William H. Webster, who brought the bureau out of a crisis nine years ago, to take over the embattled CIA.

Webster would replace William J. Casey, who resigned after undergoing surgery for brain cancer.

Reagan had nominated the CIA's acting director, Robert M. Gates, to take over the top spot. But the president withdrew that nomination Monday after it became clear Gates would face stiff Senate opposition because of the Iran-Contra affair and the CIA's involvement in it.

The nomination of Webster, on the other hand, received quick praise from Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who called him "a highly regarded professional who will bring much-needed credibility to the CIA."

Reagan, in a statement released at the White House, said, "Bill Webster will bring remarkable depth and breadth of experience, as well as an outstanding record of achievement, to this position."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president called Webster at 10:20 a.m. EST Tuesday and offered him the job. Webster "said he wanted some time to consider this and would let us know as soon as possible," Fitzwater added.

Webster called back just after 6 p.m. — after news of the selection leaked out — and accepted.

Fitzwater said there were "no candidates yet" to replace Webster at the FBI.

Webster, leaving FBI headquarters late Tuesday, said it was "a call from the president" that made him decide to take the job.

"The president asked me to do it and I'm pleased to do what I can in line of duty," Webster said.

Justice Department sources said a debate was still under way over who would be nominated to take over the FBI, but that the leading candidate was U.S. District Court Judge Lowell Jensen, who had served as deputy attorney general in the Reagan administration before being appointed to a judgeship in San Francisco.

Before coming to Washington, Jensen served for many years as a county prosecutor in Oakland, Calif. He worked in that office with Edwin Meese III, now Reagan's attorney general.

Jensen, questioned by reporters in San Francisco after a jury trial session on a patent case he was hearing, said, "I am not a candidate for the top FBI job."

"I am completely satisfied with my position here and I am looking forward to serving" on the bench, to which he was appointed last July. He said he had had no contact from Washington about the FBI job but he refused to respond directly when asked if he would turn down a presidential appeal to take the job.

Other sources said some consideration was being given for the FBI post to John Simpson, head of the U.S. Secret Service.

One knowledgeable administration source said the FBI choice might not be made immediately, in order to give officials time to at least review a larger list of candidates.

Webster had first been approached for the CIA job last month when then-White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan first sought a replacement for Casey.

At that time, associates of Webster said he would be very interested in taking on the challenge presented by running the CIA during the current investigations of its role in the Iran-Contra affair, but that he did not want to push Casey out of the job. This was before Casey resigned.

Women's basketball alive, thriving in Salina

By TIM FITZGERALD
Special to the Collegian

SALINA — Collegiate women's basketball is alive and thriving here, the new home of the Big Eight Conference women's postseason basketball tournament, and it looks as if it is here to stay.

Just think, if the Big Eight coaches would have had their way, the tournament would still be in Kansas City, Mo.

But after overwhelming fan response to the new site, the coaches have altered their views.

"I'm a rookie in this league and this is beautiful," said Nebraska coach Angela Beck after the Lady Cornhuskers drew more than 2,000 for their first-round game with Oklahoma State.

"The crowd is here and the atmosphere is great."

In the past, the tournament was held in conjunction with the men's tournament in Kansas City's Kemper Arena. Last year's women's title match between Missouri and Colorado was played before only 560 spectators.

Despite playing before a limited audience and to sparse press coverage, conference coaches voted unanimously to keep the tournament in Kansas City. But Big Eight athletic directors decided to look elsewhere.

Denver, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Okla., Des Moines, Iowa and Omaha, Neb., were all passed over in favor of much-smaller Salina and the Bicentennial Center.

The move has made directors and conference officials look more than just smart, it has brought income to the conference — a rarity in women's athletics.

Rough estimates place the tournament's profit between $10,000 to $20,000 for both the city and conference.

First-round and semi-final games Saturday and Sunday were witnessed by between 4,000-5,000 fans. The championship game Monday night between intrastate rivals K-State and Kansas was nearly a sell-out (6,150) in the 7,645-seat arena.

In comparison, K-State's Lady Cats attracted 2,180 in 11,250-seat Ahearn Field House for a game with Missouri Feb. 25 that had an outcome in the Big Eight's final rankings.

By the tournament time Saturday, 1,180 of the 1,250 $15 tournament passes had been sold.

John Ryberg, director of the Salina Chamber of Commerce's convention and visitors bureau, said the city's break-even point was selling 1,100 of the passes.

"I had no idea we would get this kind of turnout," Ryberg said.

After Salina broke even, the conference pocketed the next $3,000 to cover its expenses. Profit from sales of $3 general admission tickets was split between the host city and the Big Eight.

The shocking attendance figures came as a stark contrast to which most women's coaches have grown accustomed.

"This is fantastic," Kansas coach Marian Washington said. "This is so much better than I expected. The reception has been outstanding, and the tournament has run very, very smoothly. It can't help but help the tournament. I hope that it stays here."

"This is really heartening because it's depressing to play in front of 200 people," Beck added. "When there's a crowd, it really helps the players."

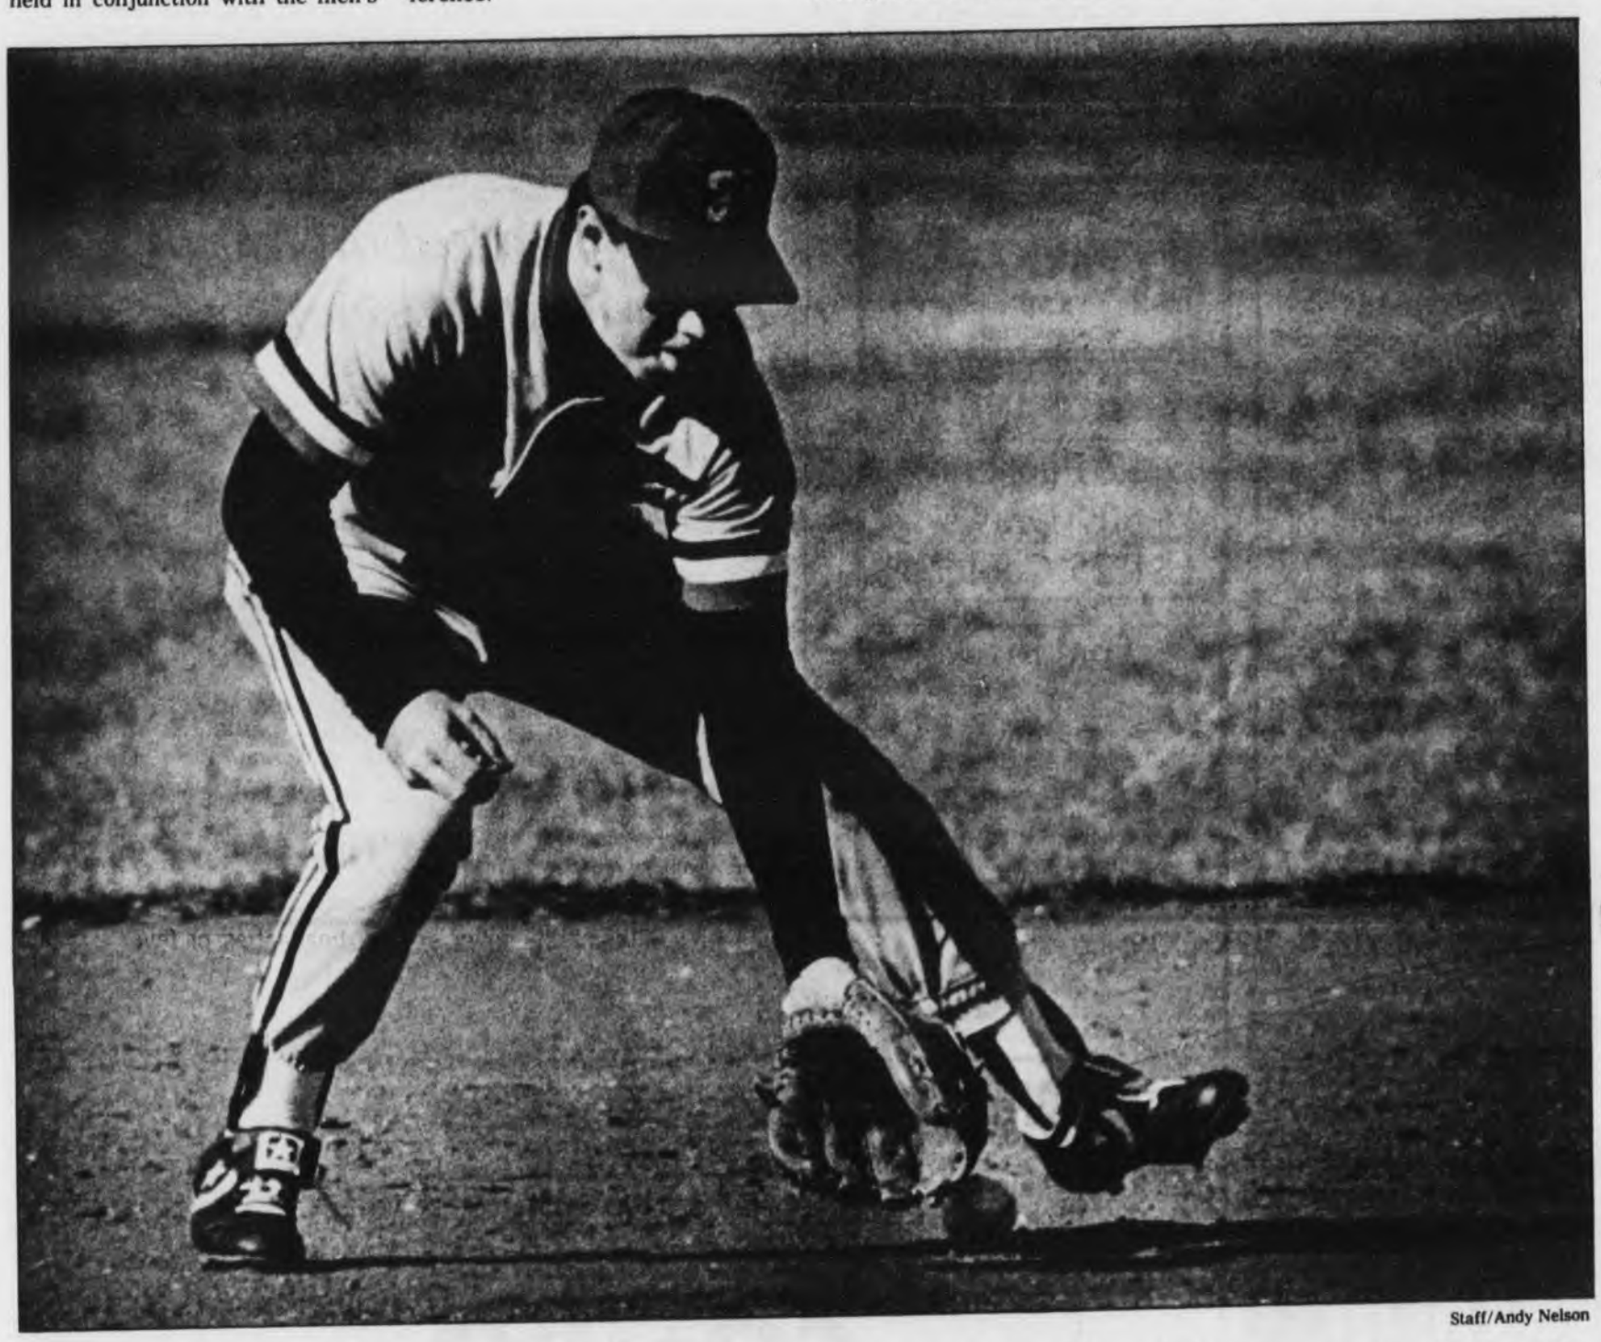
Coaches' concerns in moving the tournament site centered on accommodations. The women's teams were treated the same as the men except that opening-round games were played on respective campuses. And despite small turnouts at Kemper, some schools were playing in front of their largest audiences of the season.

But with the near sell-out Monday, the 40,000-population city at the heart of Big Eight country should have no problems renewing its one-year contract with the conference.

"(Salina has) just covered every aspect of the tournament," said tournament director Julie Ferguson. "They've covered every detail very well. Attendance has been incredible."

Added Lady Cats' coach Matilda Mossman, "I think the people in Salina have promoted it a lot better than the people in Kansas City did."

This though is not entirely a case of a community throwing its weight behind a new event. It would appear Salina loves its women's basketball.



While more than 4,000 fans were watching first-round matches Saturday, another 1,900 spectators were packed into Marymount's Smoot Gymnasium to watch the women's NAIA District 10 championship game between the Spartans of Marymount and Washburn.

Not only was Monday night's crowd which viewed the championship game between K-State and Kansas the largest crowd to ever watch a Big Eight women's game, it was the Bicentennial Center's largest basketball crowd.

The women's tournament surpassed attendance figures for the facility which have included NCAA men's and NBA exhibition games, a Harlem Globetrotters show and an exhibition between the United States Pan American Games team and an NBA all-star squad.

This year's tournament has been deemed only an "experiment" by the conference, but it can only be termed a successful test

"It's a noble experiment on both sides," Ryberg said. "It can't be any worse than it has been for (the Big Eight). They're already ahead dollar-wise."

Friends University third baseman Robbie Doshier misses a ground ball hit by K-State batter Leo Seiler in the fifth inning of the first game of a double-header Tuesday at Frank Meyers Field. Doshier was charged with an error on the play. The Wildcats swept the twinbill 14-4, 15-5.

Instant replay calls spoils sports on TV

TOM MORRIS
Sports Editor

When Pierre de Coubertin founded the modern Olympic Games, he did so for more than one reason. In addition to establishing national fervor and loyalty, the Frenchman said there were just too many machines.

Because people were relying too much on industry — a substitute for individual human effort — de Coubertin proposed the Games to revive personal commitment and loyalty.

Today's sporting events could use de Coubertin's touch because "Big Brother," in the form of instant replay, has invaded athletics as we know it.

As NBC executive producer Michael Weisman said in the March 2 issue of Sports Illustrated, "Technology is supposed to improve sport, but right now, technology is 'running' sport."

Professional golfer Craig Stadler lost second place and a $37,333.33 paycheck at the Andy Williams Open because of "Big Brother." Viewers who were watching third-round highlights called in and pointed out Stadler had illegally built his stance by kneeling on a towel to protect his pants from staining.

Nothing short of a "foot wedge" would have helped Stadler in that situation, let alone shattering one of golf's golden rules by kneeling on a towel. What is even more absurd is the PGA missed the call, but still disqualifed Stadler 24 hours after it happened.

If there isn't a time limit on what can be changed by instant replay, as it seems with the Stadler case, then St. Louis Cardinal baseball fans rejoice: correct Don Denkinger's miscall at first base during the sixth game of the 1985 World Series, and let Whitey Herzog's crew have another shot at Kansas City.

Obviously, the instant replay idea isn't working. How many times did we see NFL referees holding a finger to his ear, waiting for the instant-replay official to rule on a replay? And who could forget Mr. Replay himself, Brent Musburger, at the UNLV-Oklahoma game in Norman?

When officials tried to decide whether a UNLV basket had come before the halftime buzzer and, if so, was it a three-pointer, Musburger was in the thick of the deliberations saying yes to the first inquiry, nay to the second.

Later, CBS showed a different replay that clearly indicated the shot was a three-pointer. Poor Brent, stuck behind a microphone and unable to wear a "zebra's" uniform. He kept wondering aloud whether he should tell the officials.

By the way, UNLV lost by a point, but the replay didn't matter. Two-point vs. three-point calls can't be corrected via TV replay. Once again, TV overstepped its boundaries as a presenter of sports.

If athletics are going to continue to rely on instant replay, then let's do it without network involvement. Let the PGA, NCAA or NFL and other organizations worry about reviewing tape. As senior writer Rick Reilly said in the latest Sports Illustrated, "there is a wonderfully simple answer. The networks should give total control of replays to game officials."

Better yet, let's punt instant replay officials. Just as in de Coubertin's time, we are relying too much on industry as a substitute for individual human effort.

'Cats dominate visiting Friends Falcons

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

Domination was the name of the game Tuesday at Frank Myers Field as K-State's baseball team crunched Friends University in both games of a double-header, 14-4 and 15-5.

"After the initial start, I thought we settled down and played well. We did a great job of base running and taking the extra base when the opportunity was there," Coach Mike Clark said.

The Wildcats got off to a shaky start in the first game, allowing the Falcons a two-run lead in the first inning.

Clark said part of the Wildcats' lack of concentration was due to a sick pitcher and part was due to weak hitting.

"(Starting pitcher Paul) Iseman was sick with the flu all night, but after the first inning he settled down and threw pretty well," Clark said.

"It's a big adjustment, because the pitchers that (Friends) threw today weren't the caliber we've been hitting against in our intrasquad games and against Missouri Western, so it was kind of a big adjustment. The kids were just rushing things and not being real selective," he added.

Iseman didn't tell Clark he had been sick because it was his first start of the season.

"I didn't find out about until after he threw," Clark said. "We know he can throw a lot better, but it's something we can build on. Being sick, it's something we can understand."

Iseman gained control, as did K-State. But after Iseman hit three batters in the first five innings, Clark decided to give senior Mike Hamacher some needed experience on the mound.

Hamacher, who played first base until the pitching change, made his first appearance on the mound as a Wildcat.

"Mike's got a lot of potential as a pitcher, but the only drawback he has is that he hasn't thrown since he was a senior in high school," Clark said. "We're going to keep using him, and hopefully by the time the Big Eight season comes around, he'll be a big contributor."

As was the case in the first game, the second was decided by the 10-run rule two innings before the scheduled end of the contest.

Unlike the first game, the 'Cats didn't give the Falcons even a little room to fly in the nightcap.

The game was pretty much decided in the first inning when junior first baseman David Chadd drove in a two-run homer.

Winning pitchers were Iseman and Zack Kimball for K-State.

Promising outfielder attempting comeback

By The Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Jim Eisenreich, once the star of the Minnesota Twins organization, is back in professional baseball with the Kansas City Royals, hoping to resume a career that appeared to be over five years ago.

Eisenreich, 28, was a promising outfielder with the Twins in 1982 when he was sidelined by a neurological disorder.

Eisenreich opened the 1982 season with the Twins and was batting .310 after 29 games before a fateful night in Boston.

He had always been taunted while growing up in St. Cloud, Minn., because he twitched, hummed and sniffed with what was since has been diagnosed as Tourette's Syndrome.

Now, three years later, he's back for another try at the game everyone says could be his pathway to fame and fortune.

League's top players praised by OU coach

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Anyone who still believes all the top athletes in the Big Eight wear shoulder pads and not sneakers should study the 1986-87 Associated Press all-Big Eight team, says Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs.

Four of the five first-teamers are juniors. They include some of the most talented and consistent athletes the Big Eight ever produced. What's more, say many knowledgeable observers, the Big Eight's top 10 basketball players would give a good account of themselves in a showdown with the best from any league.

"I said before the season started that I thought we had some outstanding talent in this league," Tubbs said. "We're as good as any conference. You could take four or five players out of our conference who could play on any team in the nation. We have a lot of guys you could build around."

Danny Manning of Kansas and Missouri's Derrick Chievous were

Manning, Grant earn honors from AP

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Manning, poised to become the top scorer in the proud history of Kansas basketball, has been named for the second consecutive season the Associated Press Big Eight player of the year.

The 6-foot-11 junior was the choice of all but two voters among a panel of media observers who regularly cover the conference. By an even bigger margin, voters selected Oklahoma's Harvey Grant as Big Eight newcomer of the year.

Drawing one vote each for player of the year were Jeff Grayer of Iowa State and Derrick Chievous of regular season champion Missouri.

"They're great players, and that's why I'm so thrilled for Danny," said Kansas Coach Larry Brown. "Grayer had a tremendous year. Derrick Chievous has had a phenomenal year. But those kids should not feel slighted because there just aren't many players in the country who would be player of the year if Danny was in their conference."

While adapting to the loss of three seniors off last year's Final Four squad, Manning averaged 23.1 points and 9.5 rebounds in leading the Jayhawks to a runnerup tie with Oklahoma.

"It's been an adjustment for him," Brown said. "When you consider we lost Archie Marshall to an injury, we lost, in effect, four starters off last year's team. So it put a lot of responsiblity on Danny, and he's handled it really well."

Often described as a "6-2 guard in a 6-11 body," he was his team's biggest scorer in all but five games, handed out 58 assists and blocked 35 shots. No third-year player in the nation has matched his 788 career rebounds and he is one of only four juniors with more than 1,700 points.

Manning is No. 1 not only with writers and coaches, but other players as well. In a poll of Big Eight players during the season, he was everybody's first choice.

"Manning does so much for his team, contributing in every aspect of the game," said Matt Bullard of Colorado. "And if you needed points in a hurry, he's the kind of player you'd want to lolk for."

"He has tremendous basketball skills," said Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr. "There are so many things he does so well."

The 6-9 Grant did even better than Manning's average of 9.5 rebounds. He finished the regular season with 10 per game to lead the conference in his first season since transferring from junior college by way of Clemson University. Grant also averaged almost 17 points.

He was selected newcomer of the year on all but one ballot. Missouri's Nathan Buntin drew the other vote.

Grant has a close relative who plays a little basketball, too. He and twin brother Horace Grant enrolled at Clemson together after building a huge high school following in Sparta, Ga. Harvey decided the next year to strike out on his own but Horace, still at Clemson, is a top candidate for player-of-the-year honors in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Water

'60s, he added.

"So who knows how much of that went in there?" he said.

Even today, Harden said, it is impossible to monitor every item brought to the landfill.

"We don't inspect and open up every little white and green bag that comes out," he said.

None of the contaminated wells contained radioactive wastes, Harden said.

"Most of it's just wild stuff," he said. "All the chemicals down in water mix together, just like taking Junior's chemistry set and mixing all the chemicals together and stirring them up."

Payment for the new water program will probably be a negotiation between the residents and the city, Harden said.

"It's probably not going to be a freebie, but it's probably not going to be a 100 percent cost (for the residents) either," he said.

Other residents near the landfill are worried because their wells have not yet been tested.

"I came over here (to her neighbor's house) and saw all the mess with the water, then I wanted my water tested," said one resident who lives directly southeast of the landfill. "I have children, and I wanted to know what was in my water, so I went to the county and asked that our water be tested."

Harden told her they had been turned down by KDHE, she said.

Even if tests are run Thursday, she said there is no guarantee the water won't go bad after the testing.

"We don't know when our wells are going to go bad," she said. "They could be good today and bad a month from now. Sooner or later, the problem is going to spread out. We don't want to be drinking the water when we find out."

The contaminated water did not taste bad two years ago, but had a foul odor, said one of the homeowners.

"I bought the place two years ago, and the more I drank the water, the more I held my nose shut," she said.

The KDHE has known about the contamination since late 1985. Residents complain that the problem could have been solved at the same time the Hunter's Island water system was built.

"It's not just a small inconvenience," one resident said. "I can't cook with the water and I'm not even supposed to bathe in it."

"I guess (nothing was done) until everybody started making noise," a neighbor said. "And what noise we made, we had to make it by ourselves."

"That's when (Riley County) started to pay attention, when they should have paid attention two years ago," said another.

The residents say they aren't trying to point the finger at anyone. They just want good water.

"We don't want to make the county mad so they drag their feet," one said. "But we're afraid of our water."

One resident who isn't afraid of speaking out is Pratt.

"The county is definitely responsible for the contamination," he said. "I will sue if they don't get good water out here before my other well is contaminated."

Pratt owns a small trailer park with four mobile homes on the property that are drawing water out of a well 150 feet from his contaminated well.

He said it is only a matter of time before that well is also contaminated.

"The more water you draw, the faster the water moves underground," he said.

Pratt said the county doesn't seem to be concerned about the neighborhood.

"We don't have any big business, we're not rich. We're just average people out here," he said.

Pratt said Harden told him last November the problem would be taken care of within three to six months.

Residents in the area are hoping they won't be forced to move.

"People out here like their homes. We like our neighbors, and it's a nice quiet area," said one. "Besides that, I've got a lot invested in my house."

The question they are asking is how long will it be before action is taken.

Harden said he is meeting today with an engineer to discuss plans for a water system.

"If they test the water Thursday, that's fantastic," Pratt's neighbor said. "But then how long will it take before anything is done?"

Books link waste, bad water

By The Collegian Staff

Although hazardous waste disposal is not a new issue, two authors have published recent statistics regarding a link to groundwater contaminaton.

In a book published in 1984, Jonathan King documented what he termed "the poisoning of America's drinking water."

In a chapter about town landfills, King noted several factors contribute to a state of hazard for groundwater by contamination through municipal dumps.

He said until federal regulations went into effect in 1980 dumping hazardous chemical wastes into municipal landfills was allowed.

Until 1986, companies considered "small generators" (those producing less than 2,200 pounds of hazardous waste a month) were allowed to dispose of it in the nearest city dump. "Small generators" are currently considered those which produce 200 pounds of hazardous waste a month and are allowed to dispose of it in town dumps.

King said in 1984 a New York state department estimated half of its 420 operating municipal landfills were contaminating groundwater.

A second author writing on groundwater contamination published "Citizen's Handbook on Groundwater Protection" in 1984. Wendy Gordon, of the Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., listed six waste disposal sources and seven non-waste disposal sources as contributing to groundwater contamination.

She included ponds used for treatment, landfills, injection of wastes through wells into deep aquifers, rivers or streams, septic systems or cesspools, and landspreading as waste disposal sources of groundwater.

Gordon said of the 93,000 landfills in the United States 75,000 are classified as on-site-industrial and not much is known about them. Another 18,500 are municipal and spread across the country.

Election

Maughmer, supervisor of the local Southwestern Bell office, said the future commission should run the city with a realistic approach.

"The city needs to live within its financial limits," he said. "The city also needs to finish its prepared agenda."

Maughmer said several projects need to be carried out, such as the downtown development, Quality of Life bond issue and the Seth Childs Road traffic problem.

Eversmeyer and Clarenburg received a little more than three-fourths of the popular vote for the school board seat.

Eversmeyer, a guidance counselor at Manhattan High School and former English teacher, said she thought being a teacher was an asset to her campaign.

"I felt I had excellent support from the community," she said. "As I talked to people, everybody seemed to be overwhelmingly supportive that there should be a teacher on the board."

Clarenburg, professor of anatomy and physiology, and current school board vice president, stressed continuity in his quest for the school board seat.

"I plan to ask the voters if they are satisfied," Clarenburg said. "If we are going to maintain a satisfactory board, we need continuity."

He also said he supports a better plan for high school students who are not college bound.

Those no longer in the Manhattan City Commission race are Walter F. Gatsche Jr., owner of a Manhattan bonding and private investigation agency, and Stanley A. Crowder, K-State Union clerk. Gatsche had 7.32 percent of the vote and Crowder carried 1.56 percent.

Allen Nesbitt and Gary Turner, both Manhattan businessmen, are no longer in the USD 383 School Board race. Nesbitt received 13.71 percent of the vote and Turner had 10.65 percent.

both unanimous first-team selections by a panel of media experts. Oklahoma senior Tim McCalister, the highest-scoring guard in conference history, is the only non-junior on a first team which also includes Jeff Grayer of Iowa State and Kansas State's Norris Coleman.

Heading the second team is senior point guard Cedric Hunter, Kansas' all-time assist leader. Others are Iowa State's Tom Schafer, Kansas State's Mitch Richmond and Darryl Kennedy and Harvey Grant of Oklahoma.

Chievous, a 6-7 junior from Jamaica, N. Y., carried Missouri to the regular season title. He led the Big Eight with 25.9 points per game while averaging almost nine rebounds and established himself as one of the game's deadliest free-throw shooters. He's hit 218 of 268 foul shots for more points by free throws than any other player in the country except Kevin Houston of Army.

Coleman's protracted eligibility squabble with the NCAA has kept him in the news almost as much as Lt. Col. Oliver North. But finally freed to suit up at the end of the non-confeence schedule, he averaged more than 23 points and nine rebounds in 15 games.

The fluid, 6-5 Grayer has been one of the most consistent players in the nation for three straight years at Iowa State. As a sophomore, the Flint, Mich., native averaged almost 21 points and became the first player in Iowa State history to reach 1,000 points in his first two seasons.

Students to sing in opera

By LAUREN BRUNO
Collegian Reporter

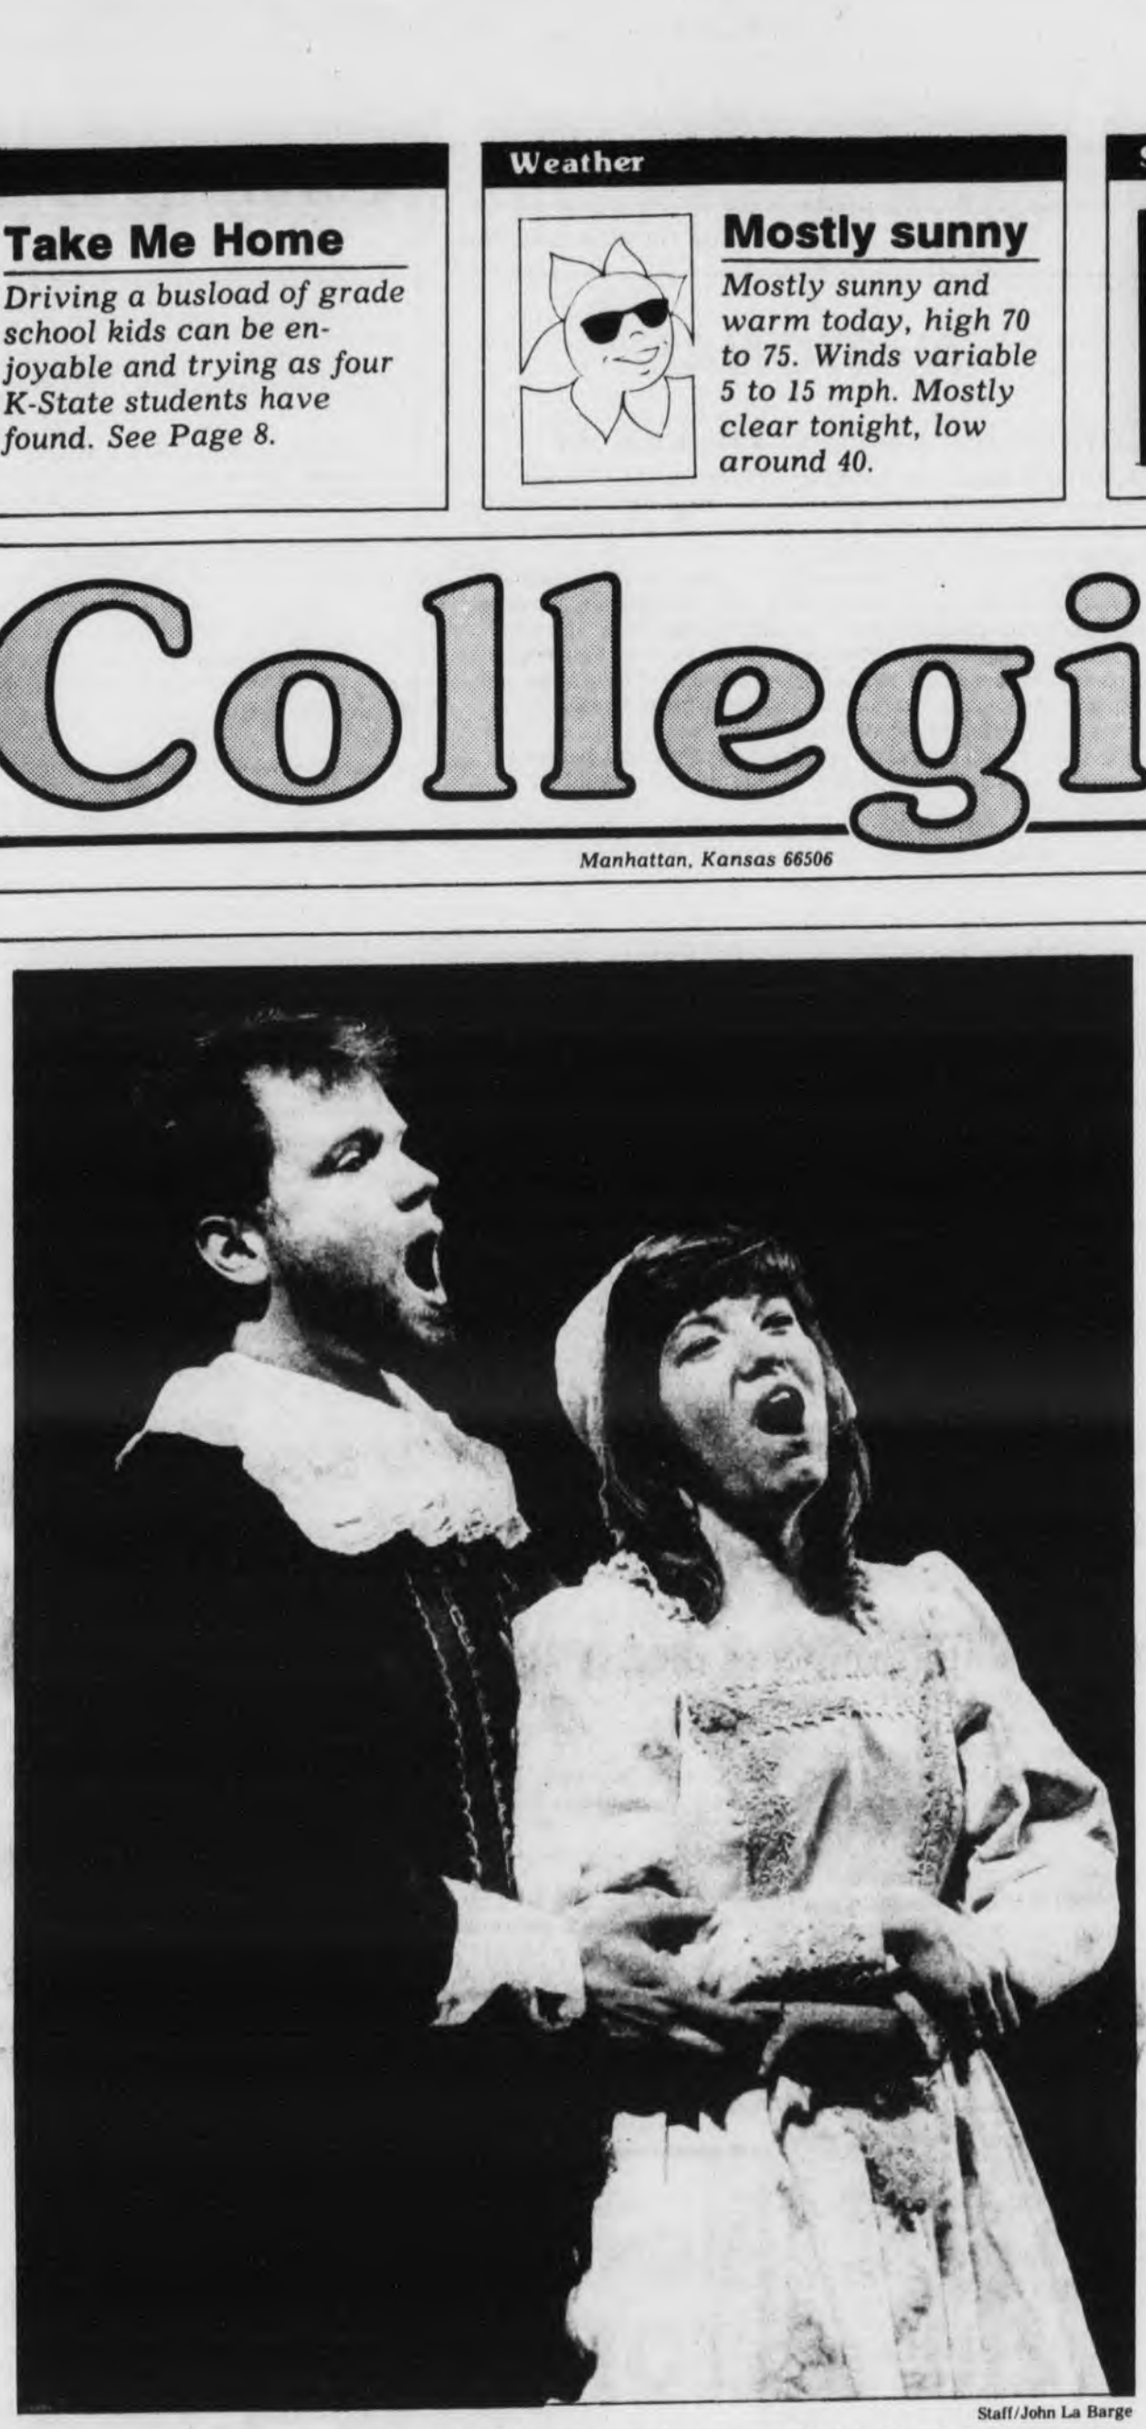
A weekend performance of "Merry Wives of Windsor" will showcase some of the University's finest operatic voices.

Maintaining vocal strength requires regular practice, said Glenn Gurh, graduate student in music, who will play a leading role in the K-State Opera Theatre performance at 8 p.m. tonight through Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

"It's like exercising: You must do it every day or the muscles atrophy," Gurh said.

An operatic voice is not any different from any other musical voice except that power is necessary to fill the auditorium, he said.

The training of most opera singers begins at the college level and if the voice is promising, training continues at the graduate level, said Jerry Langenkamp, professor of music.



"A great voice cannot be created by technical procedures. An operatic voice is definitely the result of natural talent," he said. "A great voice is the product of psychology and background.

"An operatic voice must have a certain size to it. It must have beauty, flexibility and be true to pitch," Langenkamp said.

A singer must perform a variety of exercises each day to keep his voice in shape. Each person has different problems with his voice to work out, making practices very individualized.

In an hour lesson, half the time is spent singing scales and using the voice and the other half on discussing the specific problems of the individual's voice, Langenkamp said.

Development of an operatic voice takes hours of daily training to reach a professional level. Beginning today, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" includes the singing talents of Jon Secrest and Deb Huyett.

Reagan admits policy mistake

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan acknowledged Wednesday night that his once-secret Iranian initiative "deteriorated" into an arms-for-hostages deal.

"It was a mistake," he said.

Noting he had not said much about the affair since November, Reagan said, "I've paid a price for my silence in terms of your trust and confidence, but I have had to wait, as have you, for the complete story."

Declaring himself "angry" and "disappointed" with "some who served me," Reagan said: "As personally distasteful as I find secret bank accounts and diverted funds, as the Navy would say, this happened on my watch."

Reagan's remarks shed no light on the many mysteries of the Iran-Contra affair and said others will have to find out where the Iran arms proceeds actually went. He did not mention by name any of the key figures in the Iran-Contra affair, such as his former national security advisers, John Poindexter and Robert McFarlane, or fired NSC aide Oliver North.

The Oval Office address marked Reagan's first response to the Tower commission's criticism of his detached management style and ignorance about the details and consequences of his arms-to-Iran policy.

Responding to the speech, Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said, "It went part way" but that "the president should have recognized it was his orders that authorized arms sales to Iran."

Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kansas, said the controversy "isn't behind him yet, but it's a start." He said future aid to the Contra rebels is now "hanging by a thread."

Dole added, "Some wanted an apology; my own view is he shouldn't have gone that far. He didn't." In backhanded criticism of Reagan for not addressing the subject earlier, Dole said, "This would have been a great speech for the night before Thanksgiving."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., called the speech "window dressing," adding, "After all, this is the fourth meeting the president has had with the American people and he has yet to state what happened."

In his 10-minute, nationally broadcast address, Reagan said, "a few months ago, I told the American people I did not trade arms for hostages. My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not."

Once again Reagan said he didn't know in advance about the diversion of arms proceeds to the Nicarguan rebels even though, "as president, I cannot escape responsibility."

He defended his management style for its success in the past and said, "I'm taking action" on personnel and national security policy. Reagan lauded his recent appointees and said he'd told his advisers, "I expect a covert policy that if Americans saw it on the front page of their newspaper, they'd say, 'that makes sense.'"

Addressing the families of American hostages in Lebanon, Reagan said, "We have not given up. We never will. And I promise you we'll use every legitimate means to free your loved ones from captivity."

Reagan echoed the Tower commission in saying he did not ask questions his aides enough about the specifics of the Iran initiative.

"As the Tower board reported," Reagan said, "what began as a strategic opening to Iran deteriorated in its implementation into trading arms for hostages. This runs counter to my own beliefs, to ad-

Kansas ACT scores rank 11th in nation, study determines

By SHELLY SHAFFER
Collegian Reporter

A recent report released by Secretary of Education William J. Bennett concerning American College Testing scores ranked Kansas test takers above the national average.

The ACT score and teacher salary averages were ranked by state and released in February.

The Kansas ACT score average is 19.2 and ranked 11th in the nation. The national average is 18.8.

The average ACT score for freshmen entering K-State last fall was 21.4, said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for educational and student services.

The overall ACT score helps K-State identify students who may need academic assistance, he said.

K-State is an open school, and the ACT exam is not a requirement for admission. However, it is useful in advising students, Lynch said.

The test also alerts K-State to the general academic interest trends of incoming freshmen. This information aids K-State's preparation for freshmen in the fall, he said.

K-State uses ACT scores along with high school grade point averages and other tests to determine which students get scholarships.

"We don't have any other information to go on," said Jerry Horn, associate dean in the College of Education.

ACT scores do not measure an individual's motivation, organization and time management skills, or dictate what personal commitments they have for things other than school, Horn said.

Manhattan High School students' ACT exam average score was 20.5, said Dave Koran, department head of counseling at Manhattan High School.

"We work very hard advising students and prepare them for the ACT test by giving students a good basic education," Koran said. "There are also print materials, videotapes and computer software to aid students studying for the ACT test."

While the majority of freshmen are prepared, Lynch said K-State has a fair percentage who are not.

The test can signal that someone may need additional help. The earlier a person receives assistance, the chances of succeeding in college increase, Lynch said.

"You don't do well on the (ACT) test by accident," he said.

If a discrepency arises between a student's ACT score and actual classroom performance, the adviser can use that information, which tells him something else may be going on.

Research suggests 50 percent of doing well in college is due to past education, educational achievement to date, ability and environment. This is what the ACT exam measures.

The other 50 percent is an individual's drive and motivation, and the test does not measure this, Lynch said.

"For the state average, Kansas schools consistently rank above the national average in nearly every measure of the effectiveness of public education," Koran said. "So it would only seem to follow that those responsible for that kind of performance be rewarded in an above average fashion.

"Our schools have been so good for so long, we've taken it for granted. Perhaps now the public is learning just how good they are compared to the nation's schools in general," he said. "The taxpayer may be more inclined to approve higher taxes to pay for that quality."

Judge sentences man for kidnap, rape

Victim gives testimony at local trial

By JUDY GOLDBERG
Staff Writer

A Riley County man was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for aggravated kidnapping and 15 years to life for rape, on charges stemming from the abduction of two K-State women in October.

Nordell F. Glover, R.R. 1 Box 28, kidnapped, raped and held a gun to the 19- and 21-year-old women near Tuttle Creek Dam and Reservoir and then released them on a nearby road.

Glover pleaded guilty to the charges Jan. 15.

Glover's crime was "immense and tremendous, not only for the victims, but for society as a whole," said Presiding District Judge Jerry Mershon. "He is a...clear and present danger to society."

"I have never had to go through this much pain," she said. She said she no longer feels safe outside or with men.

"My feelings about society have been completely turned around," she said.

Glover pointed a gun at the victim and when she asked him why he "kept asking me if I wanted to live and I said 'Yes,' and didn't say any more," she said. He pointed the gun in the other victim's mouth and "said 'the trigger was very happy,'" she said.

Glover's attorney Chris Biggs cited what he believed were possible catalysts to Glover's crime. He said Glover grew up on a farm and the current farm crisis has lead people to do things that are "hard to explain." He characterized Glover as a workaholic and a person who kept his emotions inside until he eventually "exploded."

"He never learned to let off steam a little at a time," Biggs said.

Glover had also owned unsuccessful businesses, and on the day he abducted the women his application for a job had been turned down.

When he saw the women "he thought (they were) laughing at him," Biggs said. This "perhaps caused frustrations that day."

Mershon said the women did not in any way provoke Glover.

Glover read from a prepared statement apologizing to the victims, his family and friends.

"I am sorry," he said, "with my past experience, I should have sought help."

Glover was sentenced and jailed for first-degree sexual assault in 1980 in Nebraska, said Riley County Attorney William Kennedy. Reading from official court papers of the Nebraska trial, he said Glover sexually assaulted a victim and held a knife to her throat. He was also a suspect, but not charged, in similar incidents, Kennedy said.

Before receiving his sentence, Glover told the Nebraska judge he was sorry and would never do it again, Mershon told the court. But in 1985, two years after his release, he committed a similar crime.

Glover's apology "falls shallow — without meaning, particularly in light of the fact that he said it would never happen again in Nebraska," Mershon said.

Mershon said he based his decision in part on a psychiatric evaluation of Glover that showed he had a defect in his personality and was "not likely to respond to psychiatric treatment with any certainty."

The victim testifying said if Glover was released he would probably abduct and kill his next victim.

"I felt like he came so very, very close to killing us both that I feel like the next time it happens again, that he's not going to spare their (victims) lives at all," she said.

Kennedy and Biggs agreed to the charges against Glover, but disagreed on the order in which they should be administered. Biggs asked Mershon to sentence Glover with the two counts concurrently (sentences to be served simultaneously) and Kennedy asked that they be given consecutively (sentences to be served one after the other).

Mershon sentenced Glover with consecutive counts and Glover will be eligible for parole in 15 years.

Negotiators present arms reduction plan

By The Associated Press

GENEVA — U.S. arms negotiators offered a draft treaty Wednesday for removing medium-range nuclear weapons from Europe and challenged the Soviets to agree on eliminating them worldwide.

The American presentation, ordered by President Reagan, came on what was to have been the last day in the seventh round of the U.S.-Soviet arms talks that began two years ago.

U.S. spokesman Terry Shroeder said teams dealing with medium-range missiles would continue meeting indefinitely. He said the other two negotiating groups, on long-range (strategic) weapons and the combined fields of defense and space, would continue through Friday.

Maynard Glitman, who leads the U.S. team on medium-range arms, said the American proposal embodies tentative agreements reached at Reagan's summit with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Iceland last October.

He said those included a limit of 100 warheads deployed on the territory of each superpower, with the Soviet missiles assigned to Asia.

Glitman added the United States also would like to eliminate the remaining 100 weapons on each side if the Soviets would agree. That point was not included in the draft, he said, but "if the other side wanted to go further, I'm more than positive that we'd be more than happy to do so."

Before the Soviet delegation arrived at the U.S. Mission for Wednesday's hour-long meeting, Glitman held an unusual meeting with a pool of reporters to answer

Bill offers open meeting exemption

TOPEKA — A proposal to allow governmental bodies such as school boards, county commissions and city councils to meet on a social basis without violating the open meetings law was endorsed Wednesday by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

The bill originally was designed to allow an exemption to the open meetings law when public officials are discussing sensitive topics related to security of public buildings and for public officers and employees.

However, Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, managed to amend the bill to allow governmental bodies to meet on a social basis, or travel together, as long as no official business is transacted or binding action taken.

He said his concern stemmed from his hometown where the school board struggled with an invitation from one of its members to eat pizza one night after a meeting.

"There was considerable worry and consternation about eating pizza together," Martin said. "These people ought to be able to get together socially, for dinner or a beer, without getting into trouble over it."

Martin said the key is that no official business can be discussed or transacted during the social gatherings.

The bill now advances to the full Senate for consideration.

Wildlife agency order may succeed

TOPEKA — Several lawmakers said Wednesday that Gov. Mike Hayden's attempt to create a department of wildlife and parks probably will be successful.

Lawmakers on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the chairman of the House Energy Natural Resources Committee said the Legislature will accept Hayden's executive order to reorganize the Fish and Game Commission and the Parks and Resources Authority into a new state agency to be called the "Department of Wildlife and Parks."

In hearings before both committees Wednesday, only one person, a Hallowell resident, spoke against the proposal. Members of the Senate committee spent much of their time discussing whether they wanted to amend the executive order.

If the order takes effect, the new agency would be headed by a cabinet-level secretary appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. A seven-member board would advise the secretary, and one undersecretary would direct the administration of the agency and another its actual operations.

Hayden has said he would keep most of the operations in Pratt and most of the administration in Topeka.

The order will take effect July 1, unless either the Senate or the House votes to reject it. The two houses have until April 11, 60 calendar days after the order was submitted, to reject it.

Committee reworks school aid bill

TOPEKA — The Senate Education Committee began Wednesday to rework a House-approved plan that closely follows Gov. Mike Hayden's proposal for providing aid to the state's 304 school districts next year.

The bill keeps the same 2 percent to 3.5 percent budget increase limitations for 1987-88 that are currently in effect.

It would require $22 million in new state aid — $17 million of it to make up cuts the Legislature made for the current fiscal year in January — and would mean a $28.8 million statewide property tax increase if all districts raised their budgets the full amount allowed for 1987-88.

Commuter plane crash kills 19

ROMULUS, Mich. — A commuter airliner carrying 19 people crashed on landing Wednesday at Detroit's airport and smashed into a catering truck, killing nine people on the plane and injuring 20, including 10 on the ground, officials said.

Catering service employees and other workers on the ground were injured as the burning plane slid along after plunging into the pavement off the runway and burst into flames shortly after 2:30 p.m.

The twin-engine Fischer Brothers Aviation aircraft, operating as Northwest Airlink Flight 2268, smashed into the catering truck and pushed it into another catering truck before coming to rest near a terminal, officials and witnesses said.

The Casa 212-200 turboprop left Mansfield, Ohio, and stopped in Cleveland en route to Detroit Metropolitan Airport, Northwest Airlines said.

The pilot, first officer and seven passengers died, said Jim Vollman, director of the Wayne County Office of Public Services. All the rest aboard were injured, he said.

Weather service sends false alarm

WASHINGTON — The National Weather Service on Wednesday suspended warning tests until officials can correct a computer problem that has resulted in several false warnings.

The Weather Service headquarters in Washington ordered local offices to stop the tests on the agency's national weather wire.

The action came a day after a false tornado warning was issued in Dodge City and only a few days after similar problems in Long Island, N.Y., Washington, Chicago and Brownsville, Texas.

The agency's Dodge City office sent a bulletin at 2 a.m. to news organizations in Kansas and Oklahoma urging residents of Barber County to seek shelter immediately.

Spokesman Donald Witten said the troubles started after local weather service offices were sent new computer programs designed to speed up warnings when severe weather conditions occurred.

The program discs include prepared messages, he said, with local forecasters needing only to fill in the names of endangered cities or counties and provide any necessary localizing information.

When the meteorologists tried out the new discs, they were supposed to include the statement "This is Just a Test," but the phrase did not get transmitted in several instances, Witten said.

Peace-song composer dies at 76

LOS ANGELES — Vern Partlow, a publicist and journalist who composed and sang folk songs, including one of the first peace movement songs, "Old Man Atom," has died. He was 76.

In 1945, shortly after the United States bombed Hiroshima, Partlow wrote his grim, whimsical plea for an end to war with this plaintive coda: "Peace in the world or the world in pieces."

Five years later, as the chill of the Cold War spread, some radio stations prohibited broadcast of the song.

The New York Times editorialized that banning the song because the Soviet Union had developed its own nuclear arsenal was "a new high in absurdity."

After the furor, Partlow, who was employed as a political columnist at the Los Angeles Daily News, was asked to declare publicly that he was not a member of the Communist Party. He refused on principle and was fired.

Cab drivers establish fund for victim

By PAT HUND
Campus Editor

Bell Taxi drivers will donate 10 percent of their gross wages today to support a fellow driver who remains in critical condition after a Jan. 4 stabbing.

Glenn Puett, president and general manager of Bell Taxi Transportation in Manhattan, said most of the lease drivers plan to donate money to defray the hospital costs and support Chuck Primm as part of the designated "Chuck Primm Day." Puett said he will then match that amount, which will be used to support Primm's family and pay for medical expenses.

While driving for the taxi company, Primm was stabbed more than 25 times by two unidentified assailants on Jan. 4 on Whiskey Lake Road, about a mile north of the Interstate 70-Kansas Highway 18 exit.

Primm is still listed in critical condition, according to his sister, Rosezella Potter, University custodial worker.

Because his lungs are so badly damaged, he can only breath with the support of a respiratory system in the intensive care unit at Irwin Army Community Hospital at Fort Riley, Potter said.

"(Rehabilitation) is going to be a long time," Potter said. "He's still in critical condition."

Potter said Primm cannot talk because he is connected to the life-support system, but he is able to distinguish voices and see images despite being under heavy sedation.

In addition to contributions from the taxi company, Kris Kelderman-Hedke, coordinator of victim assistance for Riley County Community Corrections, said donation cans will be placed at Dutch Maid supermarkets and Mini Marts throughout Manhattan.

She said the money will be placed in a savings account at the Kansas State Bank, 1010 Westloop Place.

"My role is to act as an advocate for the family," she said.

To pay for medical expenses, "we needed to raise funds independently," she said.

"We're pretty tight with money right now," Potter said.

Because he might not be mobile when he gets out of the hospital, Potter said there might be extra expenses incurred to pay for special medical equipment.

Puett said that no extra precautions have been taken as a result of the incident. He said he once considered installing a protective window between the front and back seats, but he has ruled out the idea.

University to sponsor cattlemen's conference

By STACEY NANNINGA
Collegian Reporter

Over 750 cattlemen and ranchers are expected to attend the 74th annual Kansas State University Cattleman's Day Friday at the Brandeberry Sports Complex, located south of the football stadium.

This year's event will focus on international factors concerning the cattle industry as well as research taking place in Kansas.

Jack Riley, professor of animal sciences and industry and Cattleman's Day program chairman, said the afternoon will begin with a session concerning possible export markets at 1:10 p.m. The featured speaker will be Enrique Sanchez Granillo, regional director of agriculture and livestock research, Chihuahua, Mexico, who is scheduled to give insights into the cattle and grain export prospects for U.S. producers to Mexico.

A session concerning the impact of the European economic community on the U.S. cattle industry and how a buyer's market, crop and livestock subsidies affect the cattle industry in the United States will be conducted by Mike Wilkinson, director of Chiltern Beef Ltd., and Marlow Barrow, author and nutritional consultant from England.

Finishing the afternoon will be the keynote speaker, Topper Thorpe, general manager of Cattle Fax, a marketing analysis service. Thorpe will discuss the "new beef industry" and how the trends toward larger operations, branded beef, value added products and other developments will affect the way cattlemen will produce beef.

The Stockman's appreciation supper will be held tonight at the Holiday Inn/Holidome, 530 Richards Dr. Honored stockman for this year's dinner is Don Good, head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry. Good is being honored for his 40 years of service to K-State and the livestock industry. Cattleman's Day is also being dedicated to Good for his many years of service.

Riley said there will be more than 30 commercial exhibits at this year's event as well as 30 exhibits by researchers and graduate students in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

Cattleman's Day will begin at 8 a.m Friday.

The morning session, beginning at 10:45 a.m., will feature six K-State researchers discussing research projects taking place at K-State.

Senators to elect officers, consider KSDB bill

By The Collegian Staff

Election of students to the positions of Student Senate chairman, vice chairman, and Faculty Senate representative will take place at tonight's meeting.

Those nominated for chairman are: Matt Queen, junior in chemical science; Candy Leonard, junior in human ecology and mass communication; and Wally Brockhoff, junior in agricultural economics.

Candidates for vice chairman are Eirene Tatham, senior in construction science, and Doug Folk, junior in electrical engineering.

Nominations will continue tonight, and candidates for offices will speak before a formal vote is taken.

In other action, Senate will hear the first reading of a bill designed to create a student fee line item for KSDB-FM. The separate line item will be 85 cents for full-time students and 50 cents for part-time students.

Mike Riley, senior in political science and co-sponsor of the bill, said KSDB cannot charge for advertisements and must rely on donations and student monies in order to operate.

If the bill is approved next week, Riley said the new line item will generate approximately $25,000 in one year, starting with the 1987 fall semester.

In addition, Senate will review a resolution requesting the University to adopt a written policy concerning the surveillance of activities by students, its employees and guests.

The resolution requests that any existing records held by the Department of Public Safety be destroyed unless the materials are evidence in criminal cases.

Officers arrest Georgia brothers for poisoning of 123 trees

By The Collegian Staff

Two brothers from Georgia were arrested last weekend in connection with the killing of 123 honey locust trees planted along Interstate 70 near Junction City, Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish said Tuesday.

Doug and Gary Price, Tunnel Hills, Ga., were arrested on charges of criminal damage to property, use of noxious matter, trespass and conspiracy to commit criminal damage.

Formal charges have not been filed by the county attorney's office, but charges will be filed before preliminary hearings March 11.

Investigators believe the trees were killed because they blocked motorists' views of a business from the interstate. The two brothers would not identify the business.

Other individuals may be involved in the crime, Deppish said.

"The two men have indicated that more people are involved. We are not at liberty to reveal who they are until arrests have been made," Deppish said.

The trees were killed between April and June 1986. A small strip of bark was removed, holes were cut and a chemical was injected to kill the trees, he said.

Officials began an investigation after several anonymous tips.

Several people notified the Geary County sherriff's office that trees were dying. Many wanted to know the reason and what was going to be done about it, Deppish said.

The trees are valued at $51,000, but will cost much more to replace, Deppish said. The trees are about 15 to 20 inches in circumference and were planted during President Lyndon B. Johnson's administration as part of a beautification and windbreak program. The trees are located between Junction City and Grandview Plaza.

The two brothers were in a band playing in the area at the time of the offense. They were performing in the area again last weekend when they were called in for questioning which led to their arrest, Deppish said.

Designation of English needn't pose problem

With the recent proposal of a bill declaring English as Kansas' official language, it's necessary to look at what this law will do for the state and its ethnic residents.

State Sen. Bill Mulich, D-Kansas City, said the bill's purpose is to promote English and mandate informing and educating residents in English.

Mulich may have a point in saying there needs to be some uniformity for administrative purposes. With the growing number of hispanic populations in the United States, this could be necessary to encourage ethnic communities to join society and gain more opportunity in the workforce. The law may forewarn those coming to live in the state that English is necessary to join the mainstream.

But Mulich also says the bill is not meant to hurt bilingual programs, while adding "there's only so much money to go around."

This bill should not be considered to take any funding from the foreign language programs, nor should it discourage the speaking of foreign languages in Kansas. Americans often have the view that English is all that's necessary. Learning one or more foreign languages would do all of us a great bit of good, promoting understanding between countries and U.S. ethnic groups.

Although most countries in the world have an official language, many of them require a second language in all levels of schooling.

It would be a loss to inhibit the speaking of other languages which add color and diversity to a land primarily made up of immigrants and their descendents. Nebraska and Indiana have passed bills declaring English as the official language, while California, with its large Spanish-speaking population, voted down the bill last year.

This shouldn't deter foreign residents from coming to our country to live and shouldn't leave them out. The idea of Anglo supremacy has gone far enough in this country.

Gates shows integrity by declining CIA post

Senators questioned Gates' involvement in the scandal, and while President Ronald Reagan supported his nomination, the senators were not so easily convinced. Senate leaders had warned that the nomination could be rejected and a lengthy confirmation proceeding would prolong national focus on the arms deal, a topic Capitol Hill would like put to rest.

Reagan's hope for a more positive image to aid his beleaguered presidency could not have been fulfilled with the appointment of Gates, and the aide knew enough to step aside in an attempt to salvage at least a bare minimum of respect for himself and the administration — if that is possible in light of the involvement of so many top officials in Washington.

A Wichita native, Gates is attempting to aid in the rebuilding process of an administration gone awry. More of those involved need to follow Gates' lead to do some White House cleaning. Fresh faces and a fresh perspective could only do the nation — and its leaders — some good.

The appointment of former FBI Director William Webster to the position is a step forward for the rebuilding of faith in the administration, although there remains much to be proven before the American public can begin to trust and believe in it again.

Boy who gave up TV should be inspiration

Benjamin Barreaux of Newark, N.J., could have been considered a true television junkie. He and the tube would spend about six to seven hours a day together.

Many American youngsters spend their free time overdosing on television. Benjamin's mother was so concerned about the time her son spent in front of the television that she bet him $500 that he could not go a year without watching television.

Fooled ya, ma.

Benjamin made it through the year. Not only is he $500 richer, but he is now quite well read. He spent his year away from the tube reading endless library books and magazines.

According to his mother, he's also developed into quite a military historian.

Switching from playing with toy soldiers to reading about real ones does wonders for the mind.

Most of America's young television junkies could greatly benefit from following Benjamin's lead.

There may not be a cash reward at the end of the line, but there will be a reward much greater than that: knowledge, combined with an increased sense of creativity and imagination.

Humanity imperative in racing

"The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth and every bird of the air and upon everything that creeps on the ground..." Genesis 9:2.

CATHERINE SAYLER
Guest Columnist

Here in Kansas, the heart of the Bible Belt, one would expect elected leaders to get beyond the book of Genesis in the ethics of animal stewardship. At the very least, one would not expect to find legislators so audacious as to assist God in the task of creating fear and dread in other life forms.

The Kansas House of Representatives, motivated not by religious ethic, but by temptations of increased revenue, defied expectation last week by refusing to prohibit the use of live lures in training racing greyhounds in Kansas. The "live bait" issue is part of the pari-mutuel wagering law that is on its way to the Kansas Senate for final approval.

For years, greyhounds have been trained to race using live rabbits, kittens and guinea pigs because many owners think the dogs must "taste blood" in order to run their best.

The trainer breaks the rabbit's legs for puppies so that the rabbit can't run while the puppies maul it. For older animals, the rabbits are released in a fenced yard to be ripped apart by the dogs or tied by its front legs onto a mechanical arm and dragged around with the dogs in hot pursuit. Approximately 10,000 rabbits were used as live lures in Kansas last year.

Last fall, when the issue of live bait surfaced during the debate of pari-mutuel betting, the National Racing Greyhound Association assured Kansans that live lures are not necessary to produce winning racers. Trainers denied using live lures in testimony before legislative hearings. The statements of an Abilene veterinarian, who told of truckloads of rabbit carcasses dumped at an Abilene landfill, were ignored.

This February, when Rep. Ginger Barr of Auburn proposed to legally ban live bait, greyhound trainers changed their story so starkly that perjury charges should be filed against them for their false testimony last fall. Suddenly, live bait is "all part of the sport" and to prohibit live bait would significantly reduce the number of dogs trained in Kansas.

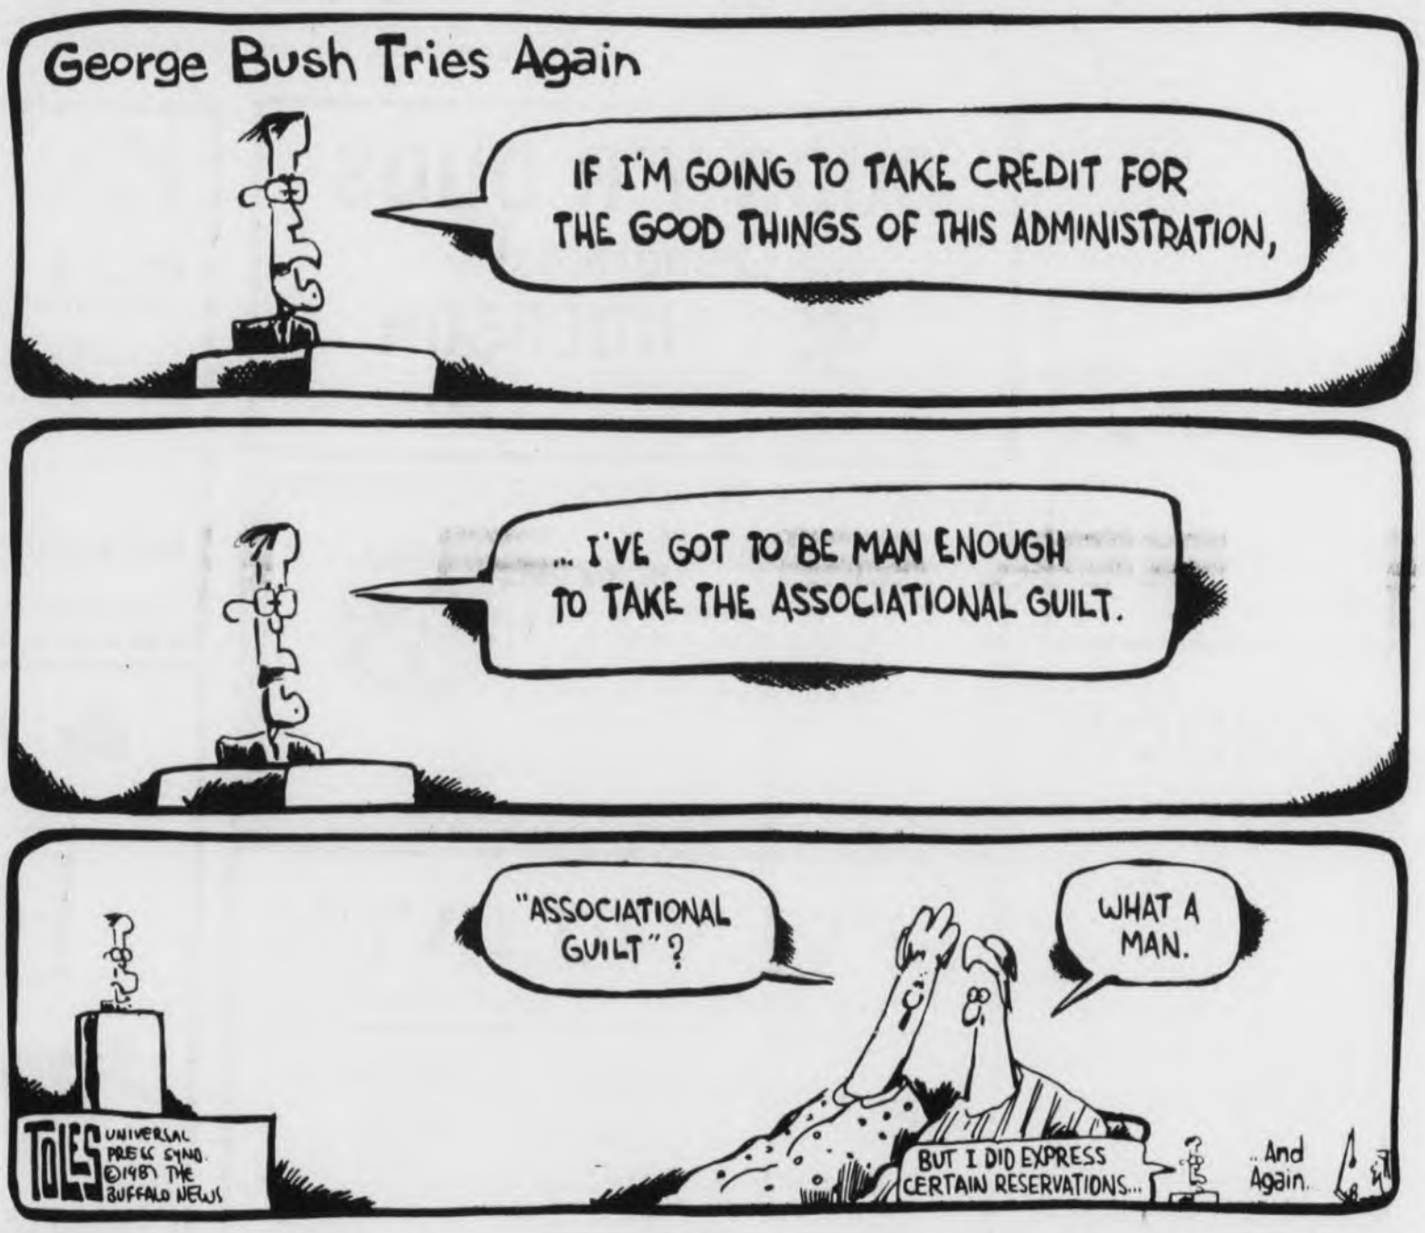
Of the 18 states allowing pari-mutuel betting on greyhounds, 12 specifically ban live lures.

Greyhound racing advocates have tried to make the practice palatable to those concerned with humane treatment of animals by limiting the bait to "non-domestic" animals, i.e. Texas Jackrabbits that are periodically rounded up and killed. Supporters believe that since the rabbits are going to die anyway, they might as well be "put to use" first.

Since many rabbits die slowly from transportation stress and since the death that awaits the rabbits here in Kansas is not humane or "natural" by any standards, the objection to using Texas rabbits is no different from that of using kittens.

Few realize that the live bait issue goes beyond the simple question of humane treatment of animals and ultimately reflects on Kansas' respect for the sanctity of life.

Livestock is Kansas' largest industry. As the nation becomes more concerned with the humane treatment of the animals it eats, it is in Kansas' best interest to show that Kansans, too, are concerned with the ethics of taking animal life.



An animal life taken for the health of the nation can be justified to most. An animal life taken merely to increase state gambling revenues leaves meat eaters across the nation with the uneasy feeling that Kansans gave little more concern to the beef they eat than they did to the hapless rabbit.

There are, of course, other animal welfare issues that need attention in Kansas. Live bait, however, is the issue in the spotlight and the one that must be acted on today.

The issue will go to the Kansas Senate soon, and all concerned should let their senator know their objections. Trainers in states which prohibit live lures attest to the success of training racers without the "taste of blood."

The "need" to train with bleeding, screaming animals is nothing more than the violent fantasies of trainers who refuse to abandon tradition. Mahatma Gandhi's statement about nations can well be applied to Kansas: "The greatness of a nation and its moral progress can be judged by the way its animals are treated."

Classroom slumber takes talent

I've been pondering a problem lately — sleeping in class. Actually, the problem is people keep waking me up. It's not the sleeping that is troublesome, but the silly antics, which would embarrass even the most ludicrous of men, that accompany sleeping.

I often find myself squirming in a variety of positions trying to find some way to keep from getting comfortable. I open my eyes quickly to jolt myself awake but it doesn't help. I try to listen closer hoping to hear something that will catch my attention. I even try pinching the back of my hand, but nothing seems to help.

I suddenly realize my eyes are shut. I open them and see the scribbled mess that is supposed to be my notes. I quickly go back over the last couple of lines repairing the fragmented sentences. I think to myself, "I can't believe I'm this tired." My notes look like I took them with a siesmograph.

Several methods of falling asleep exist, and a few need to be mentioned for future reference. One simple way to pass off into unconsciousness is by a casual bobbing of the head — shoulders if it's a morning class. This situation usually causes the head to drop forward slightly, often followed by a sudden and sometimes violent recoil. The backlash has been known to lose caps and even glasses. In one reported incident, a dozer received a concussion after hitting the desk behind him.

With the bob method, note-taking usually stops; however movement of the hand may not. Thus, drawing on the desk may occur, and once in a class with long tables, a man began writing on my paper. Luckily, I was able to wake him up, before he scribbled on me, with a fist placed an inch down and an inch and a half back from his right temple. For some reason he never sat next to me again.

Another way some people doze in class is by quietly placing their cheek in their hand with the attached elbow on the desk. This is an excellent method and thus provides support for the head, keeping the upper body somewhat erect to give the instructor confidence that his class is still with him. This way of sleeping is sometimes referred to as the "Decoy Position." These students' instructors, who realize their class is somewhat dull, will often clap their hands or rap on the chalkboard with a ruler to signify the end of class.

RON HONIG

One must remember, however, that muscles tend to relax while asleep. Failure to keep this in mind may find you collapsing onto your desk or possibly the floor. Some time ago, a friend relayed a story of a student who fell asleep on his hand in class. The student was on the front row, and when his arm gave way the entire contents on his desk exploded onto the floor, causing the instructor to be slashed on the shin by the corner of an edition of "Phillip's Differential Equations."

Of course, for the student who really doesn't care if people see him sleep, simply laying the head on the desk will suffice. Ideally, a wrist watch equipped with an alarm should be worn. If not, be prepared to wake up in the middle of a lecture on textiles and their effect on the world meat market.

Finding a way to sleep in class is easy, but finding a solid method of staying awake is not. Students go to great lengths to stay alert during lectures and a variety of remedies have been tried.

Taking a class with your friends or just taking a friend to class may help. I guess for that matter going to class with an enemy might tend to make you keep one eye open as well. But generally, sitting next to a friend will keep you awake if you talk, laugh or mess around enough. This is not foolproof, however; I've seen an entire row fall asleep, and it's not pretty.

I've tried bringing a cup of coffee or a can of soda with me. This kept me stirred, not from the caffeine but from trying to balance the hot cup of coffee between my legs. Drinking large amounts of coffee or popping a No-Doze before class usually keeps me aroused, but I'm so wired I'm almost able to take notes standing up.

My adviser suggested red-hot candies occasionally to inhibit the slumber. This works well, but I don't care much for candy in the morning unless I could find sausage-flavored Lifesavers.

I have heard of people listening to loud music. Soft music, of course, would probably put one to sleep. But if you're going to listen to music you might as well stay home because you're not going to get anything out of the lecture anyway. And when the person turns up the song too loud people start dancing and carrying on. I can never make heads or tails out of a geography lecture when they're doing that, especially with that darned strobe light going.

Class isn't the only place where people catch up on their rest. I once snuck up on an entire pledge class sleeping in the library.

Besides getting actual sleep at night, I haven't found the perfect method for getting my rest. I am convinced, however, that it probably involves money. I've had days when I have nodded off in every class. Surely there will come a day when falling asleep in class will put me in a compromising position with a not-so-compromising teacher who will use me as an example of who not to be like. And probably rightfully so.

'Rock Alike' contest to help MS research

By STEVE LAWRENCE
Collegian Reporter

To the casual observer it might seem that Van Halen, Queen, the Rainmakers, the Beastie Boys and other groups are performing on the stage of Brother's Tavern.

However, it will only be students stepping in these famous rock stars' shoes for a night to help raise money in the second annual Students Against Multiple Sclerosis Rock Alike contest to be performed after spring break.

The Rock Alike contest is like the television show, "Puttin' on the Hits," said Gretchen Wagner, senior in journalism and mass communications and director of public relations for SAMS.

While the participants are on stage they are judged on how well they lip-sync and how well they replicate the looks of the rock star they're impersonating, Wagner said.

In addition to the stage performance, the participants will be judged by the amount of money they raise for SAMS through donations collected from sponsoring individuals and businesses.

The students will compete to win a trip to the regional competition at which they will have a chance to win a trip to the national competition. The national winner will be broadcast on MTV.

Wagner said both the performance and the donations are considered when picking a winner of the contest, but the person who raises the most money is sent to the regional competition.

"Last year we had someone win the lip-sync, but they didn't win the competition," Wagner said.

The entry fee for the competition is $150, she said.

"If you don't pay the entry fee you can't win the contest, but you can still participate," Wagner said.

SAMS will help defray the entrance cost by allowing those who wish to enter to sell SAMS sweatshirts, Wagner said.

The money from the event goes toward research for multiple sclerosis, a neurological disease striking more than 200 people between the ages of 18 and 24 every week, Wagner said.

"The whole idea of SAMS started nationally because college-age kids are affected," she said.

The Rock Alike competition started on just a few campuses across the country to spark interest, she said. Now the competition is at many major colleges.

Last year 120 campuses held the competition, and this year that number has grown to 250 campuses, according to an MTV promotional tape.

Brothers to perform piano classics in McCain

By The Collegian Staff

Brothers Anthony and Joseph Paratore will display their piano-playing expertise at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The Paratores will perform classics such as Mozart's "The Magic Flute Overture," Schubert's "Fantasia," and Barber's "Souvenirs," as well as Gershwin melodies from "Porgy and Bess" and "Rhapsody in Blue."

The Paratore brothers began their career by winning a first place award in a duo-piano category in 1974 at the Munich International Music Competition. They were the first American duo pianists to win this award. Since then the Paratores have performed with European orchestras as well as with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and the Detroit Symphony.

They have performed on several television programs including the "Today Show," "The Tonight Show" and European programs. The Public Broadcasting System presented a national broadcast of the Paratores practicing at home and interviews with the performers, said Stephen Riggs, McCain director.

The Paratore brothers have also appeared in numerous celebrity series throughout the United States, including the Distinguished Artists Series at New York's 92nd Street Y, Chicago's Orchestra Hall, Washington's Kennedy Center and on several university campuses.

The Paratores both graduated from Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, later finishing at Juilliard in New York.

Ticket prices range from $11 to $14 for the general public and from $6 to $10 for students and senior citizens. Tickets will be available at noon Sunday in the McCain box office.

Court sentences Navy employee to life

Officials say man sold military secrets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former civilian Navy intelligence analyst Jonathan Jay Pollard was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for selling Israel hundreds of secret U.S. military documents in what prosecutors termed one of the nation's worst spy cases.

"No, no," screamed his wife, Anne Henderson-Pollard, and she collapsed to the floor after U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson announced the life term for her husband.

His wife, 26, received a five-year prison term for conspiring to receive embezzled government property and being an accessory after the fact to possession of defense secrets.

Federal prosecutors said Pollard gave Israel thousands of pages of classified documents, which could fill a room the size of a large closet.

"This defendant has admitted that he sold to Israel a volume of classified documents 10 feet by 6 feet by 6 feet," Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles Leeper told the judge.

Leeper urged the judge to "consider what further unauthorized disclosure of classified information we can expect" from Pollard in setting the sentence for Pollard's conviction of conspiracy to commit espionage.

"It's clear that his perspective has been so skewed, his view so warped (that) at the first opportunity he is going to go about the business of telling everything he knows to Israel," Leeper added.

In pleading for the court to grant his wife leniency, Pollard, 32, said: "Unfortunately I sacrificed her, inadvertently, but the end result is here on the altar of political ideology."

"I put my wife in a situation where I called upon her and without any sense of self-preservation she responded," Pollard said. "I had no right to do that at all."

After the sentencing, Henderson-Pollard's screams from a holding cell could be heard in the courtroom.

U.S. Attorney Joseph diGenova said of Pollard, "It's highly unlikely he will ever see the light of day."

"Mr. Pollard, in connection with his Israeli handlers, compromised the most significant amount of classified information that has ever been compromised in an espionage case."

Pollard's defense attorney, Richard Hibey, said, "There is no evidence that any information that Mr. Pollard gave to Israel was given to the enemies of the United States."

Outside the U.S. courthouse, diGenova said that the judge had obviously ignored defense "pooh-poohing" of government arguments that Pollard's spying had seriously damaged national security.

Asked about the nature of Israel's cooperation in the investigation, diGenova replied: "Selective."

Pollard pleaded guilty last June 4 to espionage charges for selling top-secret military intelligence that included satellite photos, data on Soviet weaponry and ship movements.

"The breadth and volume of the U.S. classified information sold by defendant to Israel was enormous, as great as in any reported case involving espionage on behalf of any foreign nation," federal prosecutors said in a recent pre-sentencing report.

Pollard, who has cooperated in the investigation that resulted in Tuesday's espionage indictment of Israeli air force officer Aviem Sella, tried to portray himself as a loyal American who was helping Israel's self-defense.

Professors cut costs, repair roof

By CHRIS HALL
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to cut costs on the new KSDB-FM radio transmitter, professors in radio and television used their carpentry skills Wednesday to build a new roof for the transmitter house.

The antenna from which KSDB-FM will soon transmit was donated by KAKE in Wichita. The roof of the house needed to be repaired because it leaked, said Lee Buller, assistant professor of radio and television and KSDB-FM adviser.

"The old roof was flat. They are expensive and have a tendency to leak anyway, so we decided to put a pitched roof up," he said.

Buller said a $600 to $1,000 estimate for the job was obtained from professional contractors. KSDB-FM paid $300 for the materials, and professors used their own tools.

'We figured we had the tools, we had some people with roofing experience — we might as well do it ourselves.'

— Lee Buller

"We figured we had the tools, we had some people with roofing experience — we might as well do it ourselves," he said.

Buller did carpentry work in college. Dave Wentworth, graduate assistant in journalism and mass communications, and Gary Pettet, chief engineer for KSDB-FM, have done roofing work, as well.

Other crew members were Bill Adams and Dave Deitch, assistant professors of journalism and mass communications; Paul Prince, associate professor of journalism and mass communications; and Brian Finegold, sophomore in radio and television and record company liaison for KSDB-FM.

The men began work at 7:30 a.m. and hoped to finish by dark. Buller said they had planned to do the job last Saturday but postponed it because of rain.

"The roof is really going up quick," Wentworth said.

Staff/Andy Nelson

Paul Prince, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, saws a 2-by-4 while building a roof Wednesday for KSDB's transmitter shed.

The crew used replaceable shingles on the roof so it could easily be redone if necessary. But Buller said these should last 25 years.

Equipment is planned to be installed in the building in two to three weeks, he said. Then a professional tower crew will re-rig the tower.

Buller said he hopes KSDB-FM can start transmitting from the new antenna on March 25. The new transmissions will be broadcast from a different frequency — 92 instead of 88.1. The increased tower height and increased power will enable KSDB-FM to reach a wider audience, he said.

Korean strife may affect Olympics

By The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Just 18 months before the Olympic torch is lit in Seoul, South Korea's rival political factions are entering the final, critical rounds in a world-class bout of brinksmanship.

The outcome of the match-up between the military-dominated government and the main opposition party will set the mood for the 1988 Seoul Summer Games — and set South Korea's political course for years to come.

Some in the opposition talk ominously of Olympic disaster next year if the generals this year deny them the kind of permanent democracy they want.

"The Olympic Games would not be possible," one well-placed member of the opposition New Korea Democratic Party asserted in an interview. "The people of Korea would disavow the Olympics."

Knowledgeable observers are skeptical. Korean pride in staging the sports extravaganza would overwhelm any attempt at a boycott by the political opposition, they say.

But the U.S. Embassy, always influential here, is nonetheless pressing both President Chun Doo-hwan and his rivals to reach a compromise soon, to end decades of authoritarian rule and take the tension out of the Olympic countdown.

One proposal the Americans view favorably: establishing an interim, "reconciliation" government of all parties to guide this U.S.-allied nation of 41 million people through next year's nervous days in the camera eye of the world.

If Seoul's political plans are shaky, its Olympic preparations are solid. South Korea's ruling generals have taken on the task like a military campaign.

Across the half-mile-wide Han River from central Seoul, on flatlands where silkworm plantations once flourished, a landscaped collection of stadiums and gymnasiums has taken shape. Only an indoor swimming pool and housing for Olympic athletes and the visiting press remain uncompleted.

An eight-lane Olympic Expressway has been laid down along the Han's southern banks. Seoul's new subway system has been extended. Some tile-roofed slums, considered eyesores, have been demolished.

In their eagerness not to offend Olympic tourists, the authorities have even ordered restaurants serving "health stew" — a traditional Korean favorite otherwise known as dogmeat — to move to premises away from main streets.

Dozens of policemen, many armed with M-16 automatic rifles, already keep a close watch on the idle Olympic Park, guarding against anti-government student protesters, North Korean saboteurs or other threats.

"Most Koreans regard the Seoul Olympics as the most glorious event in their 5,000-year-old history," Park Seh-jik, president of the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee, said in an interview.

Park, a retired general and onetime deputy director of the national intelligence agency, said he also hopes the 24th Olympiad will be a "stimulus for political development."

Study links use of farm antibiotics to spread of drug-resistant germs

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Use of antibiotics to keep farm animals healthy can also make people sick by promoting the spread of drug-resistant germs from the barnyard to the dinner table, a study concludes.

The study "documents that farms are a major source of antimicrobial-resistant salmonella infections in humans," said Dr. John S. Spika. "One can say that antimicrobial use on farms has a direct impact on human health."

In their research, doctors traced germ-laden hamburger from people who got food poisoning through the food chain to worn-out dairy cows that were slaughtered for meat.

The hamburger was tainted with a particular form of salmonella bacteria that was blamed for 675 cases of food poisoning, including two deaths, in California in 1985. Although the outbreak ebbed somewhat in 1986, it caused two more deaths.

Farmers routinely add low levels of penicillin and tetracycline to the feed of beef cattle, pigs and chickens to keep them healthy and make them grow faster. They also use higher doses to treat animal diseases.

Spika, a researcher at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, said the study raises questions about the use of human antibiotics to treat farm animals, as well as the widespread practice of slaughtering old and sick dairy cows for hamburger.

When antibiotics are used widely, bacteria can become impervious to these drugs. Overuse of antibiotics by people is widely blamed for this, but the contribution of drugs on the farm is controversial.

In the California outbreak, the salmonella bacteria were resistant to five drugs, including chloramphenicol, which is used to treat severe salmonella infections in humans. The researchers believe that some California dairy farmers used chlorampenicol to treat sick cows, even though this use is illegal.

The study was described in a report in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine; The New York Times reported earlier on a draft of the study.

Farm industry spokesman noted that the report did not delve into the routine use of antibiotics in animal feeds. That practice is being examined by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which is considering banning it.

"The study fails to show that salmonella bacteria that are resistant to antibiotics are any more of a public health concern than non-resistant organisms," said Steve Kimbel of the Animal Health Institute, an industry group. "This study involves the unapproved therapeutic use of an antibiotic never approved for use in food animals in the United States."

At American Cyanimid, which makes animal antibiotics, Dr. Richard H. Gustafson said, "I think this says nothing about the low-level use of antibiotics in animal feeds."

However, Spika said too much is made of the distinction between therapeutic and sub-therapeutic use of drugs on the farm.

"The end result is probably the same from the standpoint that heavy antimicrobial use results in resistance," he said. "And it's that resistance that we are most concerned about from the standpoint of public health."

Richmond has star potential

Coaches select Big Eight's future standouts

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

Big Eight Conference men's basketball fans have been treated to a season of thrills, upsets and great individual performances. Virtually every team in the league boasts one player who stands out above his teammates.

During the course of the season, standout players and the eight coaches were asked who they would want on a Big Eight all-star team.

The answers they gave are very compatible: Danny Manning of Kansas, Missouri's Derrick Chievous, Norris Coleman from K-State, Iowa State's Jeff Grayer and a pair from Oklahoma — Tim McCalister and Darryl Kennedy.

These players are the cream of the conference crop — big scorers and leaders with big names. All the players mentioned above are juniors, with the exception of McCalister and Kennedy, and may or may not return for a final season of Big Eight competition.

Should these players not return, who will step to the forefront and establish himself as a big name in Big Eight basketball?

Conference coaches were asked who the future leaders of Big Eight basketball will be. They were asked to select one returning player from their own team and combine him with four others to form a "best of the rest" squad.

Conference coaches agree the league has its stars now, but realize there will be others to take their place. Results of some of the coaches' selections indicate Big Eight fans have a lot to look forward to when the Mannings, Colemans and Grayers move on.

Kansas coach Larry Brown: Jayhawk forward Archie Marshall would lead Brown's squad. Marshall has not played this season because of a knee injury, but Brown has high expectations for the 6-foot-6 forward.

Brown would also take K-State junior college transfer Mitch Richmond, a second-team, All-Big Eight selection this year.

Oklahoma guard Ricky Grace and forward Harvey Grant fill two more spots. Brown cited Missouri's Lynn Hardy, Oklahoma's Todd Christian and Colorado's Scott Wilke and Matt Bullard as being other players who could fill his fifth spot.

K-State coach Lon Kruger: Richmond leads Kruger's top five. He also chose Grant — "I think he's outstanding. He can do it all," — and Wilke — "he's the best big man in the league," Kruger said.

A pair of Missouri freshmen, Nathan Buntin and Lee Coward, round out Kruger's lineup. He also said Grace, Kansas freshmen Mark Randall and Kevin Pritchard and Missouri's Hardy are players who could emerge big next year.

Nebraska coach Danny Nee: Nee chose Henry Buchanan to head his list. Buchanan, a junior who averages eight points per game, gives floor leadership to the Cornhuskers, Nee said.

Again, Richmond is a wanted man.

"He has the potential of being a real star in our league," Nee said.

Nee said Wilke and Bullard were "solid players," as is Buntin. In addition to Pritchard, he said Kansas has "really good young talent" in Randall and Keith Harris.

Iowa State coach Johnny Orr: Orr selected a Cyclone redshirt, Mike Born, to top his squad.

He also tabbed Richmond, Grant — "I think he's the best center in the league right now," Wilke and Bullard. Hardy, Orr said, is a plus for Missouri

Chievous providing Missouri leadership

BIG 8 CONFERENCE

PLAYER PROFILE
DERRICK CHIEVOUS
MISSOURI

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The game for Derrick Chievous is all business.

That it was his basketball ability which got him out of the tough New York City neighborhood where he was born is not lost on the 19-year-old junior, who will become the highest scorer in Missouri history.

Nor is the irony that he can play like he can because of where he came from.

"New York City is the foundation of all basketball," said the impish-looking Chievous, his voice dropping an octave or so on foundation for emphasis.

"Basically, that (ability) comes from playing on the playgrounds of New York where you're playing with super, super players. It's playing against great players and conjuring up in my mind what they do and what I should do in certain situations, like when I'm trapped or when I'm caught up in the air. I want to take what he did (another player) and I want to make it better."

Although Chievous would hate the prefix mis to be attached to his name, his slightly weird personality is part of the character that has allowed him to make the transition from Jamaica, the Queens to middle Missouri.

He'll admit to being different.

"The way I was raised by my mother was, 'Don't worry about other people,'" said Chievous, his soft brown eyes looking out from underneath a baseball-style cap pulled tightly over his head, the bill twisted slightly off-center.

"Worry about yourself," he said, "it's worked pretty well for me."

His trademark is the Band-Aid he always wears. No word yet on the million-dollar advertising contract he is sure is coming from a Band-Aid maker.

Big Eight arenas have been filled with his characteristic shout, a cry of anguish which lets officials know they have missed seeing him fouled.

Ask Chievous his favorite place to play.

"Memphis State," he said. "They have bee-yoo-tee-full women. In the stands, along the sidelines, everywhere.

"I remember getting ready to go down there and someone telling me, 'You won't be able to concentrate on the game.'"

He scored 23 points and grabbed eight rebounds that game, numbers very close to his team-leading 24.6 points and 8.9 rebounds a game. He leads the Big Eight in scoring with 737 points in 30 games, getting 26 points Feb. 11 as the Tigers beat then 17th-ranked Kansas.

Chievous, 6-foot-7, twice has scored 34 points in games this season. He is Missouri's career scoring leader with 1,895 points, bypassing Steve Stipanovich's career mark of 1,836 points.

When Chievous gets the ball, he takes it straight to the basket. The shot can come from anywhere, and he almost always shoots it leaning into defenders. That style has sent him to the free throw line 268 times so far, and he has made 218 free throws this season.

Chievous doesn't want to talk about leadership, but he clearly is the dominant player on a team that has no seniors, four sophomores and three freshmen. Missouri has beaten Oklahoma when the Sooners were ranked ninth, and lost at Oklahoma on a 3-point shot with three seconds left.

The Tigers lost a one-point decision to No. 15 Kansas at Kansas before beating the Jayhawks at home.

Missouri, 21-9 overall and winners of the Big Eight title at 11-3, suffered its three conference losses by a total of eight points.

"As far as my individual performance goes, I'm not too happy," Chievous said. "I think I should be doing more. As far as the team goes, we're winning, so I'm content to be low-key.

"They (teammates) will tell me, 'You're not working.' I'll tell (freshman guard) Lee Coward, who I think has a tremendous amount of potential but doesn't always work as hard as he can, 'You're not working.'

"When we're in a huddle, we're just getting little things cleared up. Sometimes players will tell me I'm not playing. Sometimes I'll tell some players they're not playing."

Chievous looks at the future in terms of financial security. He is not wedded to the idea of a professional basketball career if something else, such as broadcast journalism, would pay more.

It was Missouri's School of Journalism that brought him to Columbia, and he was an honor student in broadcast journalism his freshman year. He is relaxed in front of the camera and remarkably candid with his teammates in interviews.

Missouri forward Derrick Chievous is one of the most dominating players in the Big Eight and leads the conference in scoring with a 25 points-per-game average. He was named to the All-Big Eight first team Tuesday.

Cagers gun for NCAAs in tourneys

By The Associated Press

Temple's Owls are not looking for retribution, simply trying to get ready for the NCAA tournament.

The No. 8 team in the country will play West Virginia Thursday night at Philadelphia in the championship game of the Atlantic 10 Conference tournament, one of several conference tourneys that will open or continue Thursday.

Temple, 30-3 is a cinch for a tournament berth, win or lose Thursday night. The Mountaineers, 23-6, could find themselves on the outside looking in if they lose the title.

The Owls' lone conference loss was administered last week by West Virginia, 64-61, on the same floor, Temple's McGonigle Hall, where the home team had won 33 straight games.

"We're looking at it as a game against a team we've never seen before, as far as I'm concerned," said Temple Coach John Chaney in denying there is any "get even" aspect to the meeting. "I think we're looking at the fact that as we approach the NCAAs, that we go into the NCAAs with a winning note."

Also on Thursday, No. 1 Nevada-Las Vegas plays Long Beach State in a first round Pacific Coast Athletic Association contest.

"I think obviously we're the favorite, but I think there's many teams in there that could beat us," said UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian. "You know are kids are going to have to go down there (to The Forum in Inglewood, Calif.) and play well."

The Rebels are 31-1 overall and went 18-0 in PCAA regular-season play. Ron Palmer, coach of the Long Beach State team, resigned Monday, citing the pressure of the job. But Palmer will coach the 49ers, 12-18 and 7-11, through the tournament.

Another tournament getting underway Thursday is the Big East, with Boston College meeting Connecticut at Madison Square Garden in New York. The other eight teams in the powerful conference, including No. 7 Georgetown, 10th-ranked Syracuse and No. 11 Pittsburgh, play Friday.

Two games will open the Pacific-10 Conference tournament Thursday night in Los Angeles, with Arizona State meeting Washington State and Oregon playing Southern Cal. No. 18 UCLA plays Friday.

Stewart earns Big Eight's coaching title

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Norm Stewart of Missouri, the Associated Press Big Eight Coach of the year after winning his sixth conference title, would like to divert a trickle of the millions flowing in from the NCAA basketball television contract into a scholarship fund for players.

"Let's set aside at least a little of it for the kids, the participants, to continue their education," Stewart said. "Would that be so hard to do?"

The dean of Big Eight coaches in his 20th season, Stewart prevailed over Kansas State's Lon Kruger and Kansas' Larry Brown for coach of the year laurels as selected by a panel of media observers.

Picked anywhere from fourth to sixth in pre-season polls, his youthful team hung together in the final week as Oklahoma and Kansas went into a nosedive and won Stewart's sixth regular season title.

"You have to admire the job Norm did with his team this year," said Kansas Coach Larry Brown. "Who else are you going to vote for as coach of the year?"

Led by Derrick Chievous, a unanimous first-team selection on the all-Big Eight team, the Tigers go into the post-season tournament this week with a 21-9 record, Stewart's 11th 20-victory season.

"What we accomplished this year reflects entirely on the players," he said. "They accepted one another and played together, and that's the main part of it when you're in a group competitive situation."

Without one senior starter and questions at guard, Stewart's 1986-87 edition of the Tigers was not expected to offer much challenge to Oklahoma and Kansas.

"We felt all along we had the ingredients," Stewart said. "We had guys coming back like Derrick, Mike Sandbothe and Greg Church. The guard position was something of a question mark, but then (freshman) Lee Coward came in and picked us up there.

"Then on the inside play, the guys were able to offset a lack of bulk and did a good rebounding job. There have been some things happen that usually happen in good years. And it's always pleasurable when it happens. It's definitely fun to see a young team come together like this."

But what's to become of Church, Sandbothe and the others if they want to continue their education after their eligibility is up? Stewart would like to see financial assistance provided from the television contract.

Beginning next season, CBS will be paying a reported $167 million for three years, an increase of about 70 percent from the current pact.

Tournament money now goes directly back to the participating schools and the operating budget of the NCAA.

"It wouldn't be hard to take a small percentage of that and set it aside for the participants," Stewart said. "We could tell them, 'This will be here to help you complete your education.' What would be wrong with that?

"We ought to say, 'Hey, for what you've done for us, we're setting aside some of this television money for you to complete your education. Or, if you want to go to graduate school after your eligiblity is over, we're going to help you.'"

Like most coaches, Stewart is disgusted that schools voted in January to eliminate one assistant coaching and reduce the basketball scholarship limit from 15 to 13. The Big Eight Conference, including Missouri, voted in favor of the cuts.

"Taking away two scholarships and a coach just isn't going to make much sense," he said.

"It's a knee-jerk reaction to some of the things that have been happening. Cynics always point out the imperfections. Well, nobody claims to be perfect. We've had setbacks, yes. But we don't need a knee-jerk reaction that takes away from the area that produces the revenue. We don't need to take away a young man's opportunity to come into the coaching profession and we don't need to take away from the educational opportunities of these kids."

Strength in schedule major selection factor

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Strength of schedule is the most important factor in determining which teams get at-large invitations to the NCAA postseason basketball tournament, the chairman of the NCAA basketball committee said Wednesday.

"We try to be as fair as we can, especially for a school that has been in a conference that has been rated very weakly," Dick Schultz, athletic director at Virginia, said during a news conference conducted by telephone.

"We take a look at their non-conference games to see if they have really made an attempt to schedule teams in the top 50 and how they have done in those games. Strength of schedule is very important, especially when we get down to the finer points. We'll take a close look at quality wins and quality losses. Sometimes a close loss on the road is more important than a close win at home."

A committee of nine people will select teams for the tournament in three days of meetings in Kansas City. The 64-team bracket, which includes 29 teams which get automatic bids, will be announced Sunday.

The tournament will be seeded so that teams from the same conference will not meet each other at least until a regional final.

"We've taken a look at that and this this year we're going to try to go back to the old policy of not replaying conference games until the finals of the regionals."

SCHOOL BUS

Doug Jordan picks up one of the 45 school children on his morning route east of Manhattan. The drivers pick the children up at school and return them home in the afternoon.

It's Thursday morning, and while some are just getting up, bus drivers have been on the job for hours.

After arriving at work at 6 in the morning, drinking coffee and just starting to wake up, drivers begin their daily check of more than 30 items of safety under school bus hoods.

At 7 a.m., the buses roll out through a designated route around the Manhattan area picking up little kids and big kids. The noise level gradually increases with each stop until all of the children are delivered to school.

All this work before 8 a.m. Then at 2 in the afternoon, the process reverses.

All this can make for a very long day.

For Doug Jordan, senior in animal sciences and industry and employee of the transportation department of USD 383, it's the attitude of the driver that will ultimately determine what kind of day it will be.

"If you don't have any patience with the kids, it can make for a very long day," Jordan said. "On the other hand, if you just let kids be kids then you'll be surprised as to how quick the day can go."

Jordan is not the only driver who believes a good day is one that goes smoothly without accidents.

"A good day is as long as you can make it through the route, without any of the kids getting hurt and making it back to the bus terminal safely — regardless of what the kids think," said Kevin Seibert, a Manhattan resident and employee of the transportation department of USD 383.

The drivers of the buses really do care about the children's safety.

"There are a lot of drivers who don't really pay attention to the stop sign on the side of the bus," said Phil Morris, senior in electrical engineering and employee of the transportation department of USD 383. "It's kind of irritating to see these people do that. I worry about the little kids getting off the bus. They may not see the car coming, and I have to take responsibility and make sure they don't get hit."

For Harvey Helms, senior in dietetics and employee of the transportation department of USD 383, the job fit "so well" into his schedule — last semester.

"You go to work in the morning, then go to class and then come back to work after class," Helms said.

This semester, however, he has been classified as a substitute driver because of class schedule conflicts.

Before one can become a bus driver, a written test and a driving test must be completed prior to the official interview for employment. The written test serves as an indicator of attitudes and knowledge about motor vehicle regulations, safe driving techniques and student management. The driving test serves as an indicator of technical driving abilities, confidence and good driving habits.

After being hired, a driver goes through a five-day training period involving five tests and seven films. Then they may or may not be certified as a driver, depending on their test scores.

A driver, after being hired, has several responsibilities to meet regularly.

Daily — school bus drivers are required to make a daily pre-trip inspection of their assigned bus, taking note of all defects.

Monthly — drivers are required to attend safety meetings as provided by their employer.

Within 90 days after the date of hiring and every three years thereafter — school bus drivers are required to complete the American Red Cross Multimedia First Aid Course and either the National Safety Council Driving Course or the American Automobile Association Driving Improvement Program.

While the driver must officially complete these requirements, there is one unofficial requirement most drivers said is as essential — a sense of humor.

"You've got to have a sense of humor," Helms said.

"You've got to remember that kids will be kids. They may find something funny in anything," he said. "You have to be patient and let them do what they want, within reason. Normally a lot of the problems will work themselves out quietly."

As for noisy days, Helms finds he can already tolerate them. "They can be pretty noisy, but I've got a kid, and I'm pretty used to the noise level already."

questions.

He said the United States was presenting a "full treaty text" that contained "a lot of detail."

The only incomplete area dealt with verification, he said, adding that one point he did not specify remained to be worked out with NATO allies.

British and West German government sources said the allies were discussing how to regulate on-site inspection of missile dismantling on both sides.

Any agreement would apply to an estimated 441 SS-20 missiles on the Soviet side and 316 U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles NATO has deployed in Western Europe.

Asked whether he thought the U.S. draft had full NATO support, Glitman replied, "Yes, I think it does."

He said officials of the alliance had been briefed on an outline several weeks ago and had an opportunity later to look at the text.

He would not anticipate possible Soviet objections to the draft and said: "With goodwill on both sides I think we can resolve them."

Questions of verification and limiting shorter-range systems could be difficult, he said, but there are broad agreements in principle in both areas.

Glitman confirmed the U.S. proposal also deals with shorter-range missiles and declared: "We believe they have to be an integral part of the treaty and they have to be constrained."

Western European governments have expressed concern about Soviet superiority in such weapons and both sides have said negotiations would begin immediately after a medium-range agreement.

Soviet SS-21s, SS-22s and SS-23s have ranges of up to 330 miles. The United States says it does not have weapons of that range in Western Europe.

Sen. Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat who is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said earlier this week that the current ratio was 800-0.

Max Kampelman, chief of the U.S. delegation, plans to visit Brussels on Thursday to brief NATO allies. Glitman said he would accompany Kamelman to the consultations and return to Geneva early next week.

Talks on medium-range weapons were given a boost Saturday when Gorbachev said he was dropping insistence that an agreement be linked to other areas, particularly the American space-defense project commonly called "Star Wars."

Opera

"No more than one hour a day should be spent on singing," he said.

Preparation for the opera began in January. Students spent four to six hours a day in preparation for the performance. Those with a professional interest in opera spend the same amount of time rehearsing even when they don't have an upcoming performance.

"From three to four hours a day are spent in mental preparation and physical preparation for a performance," said Eugene Thomas, graduate student in music and lead performer in the opera.

Training is a very disciplined process. Undergraduates are required to take classes in languages and dictation, Thomas said.

To ready themselves for a production, students must memorize lines and work to maintain vocal sound while moving on the stage, he said.

A person's voice isn't mature until the age of 30 or 35, and he or she can't go professional until that point, Thomas said.

The most powerful voices in opera today are Luciano Pavarotti, Placido Domingo and Leona Mitchel. Pavarotti has popularized the world of opera.

Speech

ministration policy and to the original strategy we had in mind.

"There are reasons why it happened, but no excuses. It was a mistake," he said.

It wasn't clear if this statement would satisfy some leaders of both political parties who had urged in advance that Reagan frankly state that he'd made a mistake in selling arms to Iran.

Former Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, who headed the panel that investigated the Iran affair, interpreted Reagan's remarks as constituting a direct admission of error. "A man is never more credible than when he admits to a mistake, and this the president has very manfully done tonight."

Reagan never directly admitted to a mistake himself, saying, "Now what should happen when you make a mistake is this: you take your knocks, you learn your lessons, and then you move on."

Looking back over the Iranian initiative, Reagan said, "One thing still upsetting me, however, is that no one kept proper records of meetings or decisions. This led to my failure to recollect whether I approved an arms shipment before or after the fact.

"I did approve it," Reagan said. "I just can't say specifically when."

Reagan said he had intended his opening to Iran as a means of developing relations with those who might succeed the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

"It's clear...that I let my personal concern for the hostages spill over into the geopolitical strategy," Reagan said. "I asked so many questions about the hostages' welfare that I didn't ask enough about the specifics of the total Iran plan."

Democratic presidential candidate Gary Hart said, "The president has begun to face the problems which shook the foudnations of his adminstration's foreign policy and we must commend him for it.

"But more than a single speech is required to restore the public's trust in our government. The administration must now pursue arms control, a peaceful solution to the Nicaraguan war, a consistent policy toward terrorism and a foreign policy that respects America's interests and obeys the law."

Referring to the Tower report, Reagan said, "I'm often accused of being an optimist and it's true I had to hunt pretty hard to find any good news in the board's report." He said the report was "well-stocked with criticism," and that he found its findings "honest, convincing, and highly critical, and I accept them."

However, he said he was relieved that the Tower panel said the president "does indeed want the full story to be told."

"I take full responsibility for my own actions and for those of my administration," Reagan said. "As angry as I may be about activities undertaken without my knowledge, I am still accountable for those activities."

Referring to the Tower commission's criticism of his management style, Reagan said, "The way I work is to identify the problem, find the right individuals to do the job and then let them go to it." He said that system brings out the best in people and "in the long run you get more done."

However, he added, "when it came to managing the NSC staff, let's face it, my style didn't match its previous track record. I have already begun correcting this."

He pointed to his meeting Tuesday with his overhauled National Security Council staff and said he told them, "I wanted a policy that was as justifiable and understandable in public as it was in secret."

He said he told his aides, "There'll be no more freelancing by individuals when it comes to our national security."

Reagan drew attention to his appointment of former Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker to replace Donald Regan as chief of staff. Regan was criticized in the Tower commission as being primarily responsible "for the chaos that descended upon the White House" once the arms sale became public.

Reagan also noted that Frank Carlucci became his national security adviser early this year, and that he nominated FBI Director William Webster on Tuesday to run the CIA.

Housemother receives national award

Staff/Gary Lytle

By KARI COMPTON
Collegian Reporter

To become "mom" for 50 young men might not appeal to most women, but Ruth Craig will be nationally recognized for it.

"I read all the books and traveled all I wanted, and I decided I didn't like being retired anymore," she said.

The housemother at Delta Tau Delta fraternity, 1001 Sunset Ave., has been selected as an outstanding housemother of the national fraternity and will be featured in the May issue of Rainbow, the organization's national quarterly magazine.

Craig said her favorite aspect of being a housemother is the respect she receives from the men.

"I enjoy being a part of the family," she said.

Craig, a housemother for one year, said she considered it an honor to be part of a feature article in the fraternity's publication.

Dave Keller, editor of Rainbow, said five national chapter consultants visited the fraternity's 120 chapters and chose Craig as one of the outstanding housemothers in the country.

"I asked all (the consultants) who I should feature in an article on outstanding housemothers, and each one of them mentioned her name," he said.

The article on Craig will be the first in a series of feature articles on four or five of the Delts' outstanding housemothers across the country, Keller said.

Chapter consultants decided that Craig was an outstanding housemother for several reasons.

"The men of the house have a genuine respect for her. They really like her, or there wouldn't be that kind of respect for her," Keller said.

Craig said her job as housemother includes serving as hostess at dinners and parties and general overseeing of house activities.

Craig's enthusiasm played an important part in her selection, Keller said.

Jim Hise, junior in hotel and restaurant management and president of the fraternity, said Craig supports the fraternity and all the members' activities.

"She is involved with everthing we do," Hise said. "She goes to all our parties and to all our basketball and football games."

"I go to the basketball and football games because I like them, the boys like them, and we can talk about them," Craig said.

Craig also supports the fraternity by being available for the men to talk to.

"They can come visit me in my apartment any time. We've often had long rap sessions," she said.

The final reason for Craig's selection was her respect for education, Keller said.

"Craig has a great respect for the academics," he said. "She is always emphasizing education to the men of the house, and they seem to respect her for that."

"I want them to get and to keep their grades up," Craig said. "It's something I believe in."

While being a housemother to a fraternity is a busy job, Craig remains active in the community. She is involved with blood mobile drives, the K-State Club, the K-State Book Club, and she has helped with the St. Andrews Golf Tournament in Clay Center for the past 18 years.

"We don't want to say that Craig is the best housemother in the whole country because there are quite a few good housemothers, but she is certainly top-notch," Keller said.

Chemist to receive membership

Chemistry professor William Fateley will be awarded an honorary membership in the Coblentz Society at the Williams-Wright awards symposium in Atlantic City, N.J., on March 11. He has an international reputation for research involving spectroscopy, a sensitive method of studying spectra.

Fateley is one of the first two scientists to be awarded an honorary membership in the society.

Research leads to professorship

Janet S. Butel, a 1963 graduate in the Division of Biology, has become the first woman ever appointed to an endowed professorship at the Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, Texas.

Butel's research, which involves the study of tumor virology, has brought both Butel and Baylor national attention. She has been studying tumor viruses for more than 20 years.

Manufacturer recalls scuba gear

Halkey-Roberts Corp., manufacturer of carbon dioxide inflater mechanisms used in scuba diving equipment, is recalling a device used to fire the carbon-dioxide cartridge, also called the carbon-dioxide detonator.

The function of the carbon-dioxide inflater is designed to pierce the detonator, releasing carbon dioxide.

However, under severe conditions and abuse when used in salt water, the piece has been found to break, preventing the carbon dioxide from being released.

The black plastic device usually has "Roberts" printed on one side and a number combination of 480 on the other side.

George Halazon, associate professor of community development and scuba diving instructor, said most manufacturers use this type of inflater or have used it in the past. He said he is replacing the devices in this area free of charge. For more information, call 532-5840.

Stephan to help launch appeal

Attorneys dispute new ruling

By The Associated Press

BURLINGTON — Coffey County District Judge James J. Smith has declared unconstitutional the amount of compensation paid by the state to attorneys representing indigent clients.

The ruling has created an "emergency" situation, according to Steve Boyce, Coffey County attorney, who has called in Attorney General Robert T. Stephan for help in launching an appeal.

Smith's decision stems from a case brought before him by Garnett attorney Orville Cole, who asked to be excused from representing an indigent client facing drug charges in Burlington.

Cole asked to be removed from the case saying he can't afford to represent the client, A. Dewayne Buckridge, who was ...ing 16 people arrested last November. Buckridge is facing 11 counts of conspiracy to sell drugs.

Cole said the $26.50 paid him from the Indigents Defense Fund is not enough to even cover his share of the office overhead, much less compensate him for the hours he spent on the case. Cole placed his office overhead alone at $27.10 in his two-man partnership.

The judge agreed Tuesday, saying it was unreasonable for the state to ask Cole to donate his time and money to represent indigent clients and he removed Cole from the case.

"The amount reimbursed Mr. Cole and attorneys in like situations is less than the office overhead costs that they accrue," Smith said.

"Mr. Cole alleged that this was a taking of his services and a denial of the equal protection rights of the United States. After listening to the evidence, I agreed with him, so therefore I relieved him of his appointment of Mr. Buckridge."

Smith said the state should not expect attorneys to subsidize the state's defense of indigent clients. He said the state must provide attorneys "reasonable compensation" for their time and efforts. He placed reasonable compensation in the range of $68 per hour.

"I found that (the state) could not require attorneys to represent indigent clients unless they pay a reasonable compensation," Smith said. "I found it was an unconstitutional taking of their property."

The state now has 30 days in which to provide Cole with "reasonable compensation" for his skills or find an attorney who will accept the state's payment of $26.50 per hour.

"Obviously, no attorney is going to agree to do that on his own, so we have no way to prosecute indigent defendants right now," Boyce said in describing the emergency situation. "Probably 90 percent of our felony defendants are indigent and do need an appointment of council."

Boyce said he expects Stephan's office will take an appeal to the Kansas Supreme Court. If so, Smith said he will grant a stay in the drug case. Otherwise, Buckridge will be released and the charges dropped.

Cast to perform opera of Shakespearean play

By The Collegian Staff

The songs and sounds of Windsor Forest will prevail in McCain Auditorium Thursday night with K-State Opera Theatre's rendition of "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The opera, presented by the K-State Players and the Department of Music, runs from Thursday to Saturday with performances beginning at 8 p.m.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor," directed by Melissa Riggs, instructor of speech, is a comedy about an old, overweight drunkard, Falstaff, who writes propositions to two women. After comparing letters, they realize he has written the same proposal to each of them. The two decide to play a trick on him, which leads to another and another.

The opera has "a very picturesque score as far as the orchestra is concerned," said Adrian Bryttan, assistant professor of music and conductor of the opera orchestra.

The music illustrates the different scenes very well, from the elves' dance in Act 3 to the drinking song in Act 2, he said.

Referring to the chattering wives in Act 1, he said, "The singing calls for very agile voices to put across these moods."

Otto Nicolai wrote the opera in German in 1845 as "Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor," taking the story from William Shakespeare's play, "The Merry Wives of Windsor." The opera will be performed in English.

The cast includes Glenn Guhr, graduate student in music, as Falstaff; Veronica Caine-Victor, senior in music, as one of the wives; Chris Thompson, senior in music education; Eugene Thomas, graduate student in music; Debra Huyett, junior in music; Jerald Patterson, sophomore in music education, and Donald Livingston, senior in music.

Thursday, Kathleen Pfister, senior in music, will play Mrs. Page, the other wife, and Kathy Lamberson, junior in music education, will play the part Friday and Saturday.

Tickets for orchestra seating are $6 for the general public and $5 for students and senior citizens. Balcony seating is $4 general public and $3 for students and senior citizens.

Schultz said. "The schools are going to have to realize that this is going to mean some traveling. There are going to be schools from the same conference in the same regional, but they are not going to meet until the regional finals."

Schultz said 20 victories would not guarantee a team a spot in the tournament.

"I don't think there is a magic number," he said. "We've had teams in the tournament with 17 wins or 18 wins, but those were teams that played a really tough schedule and had a good success rate."

Players will be tested for drugs for the first time this year. Schultz said he expected results would be ready before second-round games. He said players testing positive would be ineligible for further play.

Teams that make the Final Four would earn about $1.3 million, Schultz said. He said each game played is worth roughly $200,000 to a team.

First-round games are scheduled March 12 and March 14. The Southeast Regional will be played at Kentucky and the East Regional will be played at the Meadowlands in New Jersey on March 19 and March 21. The Midwest Regional will be at Riverfront Coliseum in Cincinnati and the West Regional will be at the Kingdome in Seattle on March 20 and March 22.

No-fault insurance law gains tentative approval in House

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A measure that would revise the state's 14-year-old no-fault insurance law gained tentative approval Wednesday in the Kansas House along with five proposals governing juvenile offenses.

The no-fault insurance bill would increase the amount of damages people could suffer before being allowed to bring lawsuits stemming from automobile accidents. The measure would increase that threshold from $500 to $1,750.

It also would more than double the minimum personal injury protection benefits required for Kansas auto insurance policies.

Insurance companies have estimated that by beefing up the benefits, automobile insurance premiums in Kansas might increase as much as 8 percent. However, that claim is disputed by legislative supporters of the bill, who say the proposed changes should result in virtually no increase in premiums.

The supporters, led by Rep. Rex Hoy, R-Mission, said the measure is necessary to update the minimum benefit figures and the lawsuit threshold to reflect inflation since the original no-fault insurance bill was enacted in 1973.

The measure advanced for a final vote on Thursday along with the package of legislation governing runaway children and juvenile offenders.

Under terms of one of those bills, the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services would be authorized to take custody of children who routinely run away from home.

Other provisions of the bill, which were recommended by the Attorney General's Task Force on Missing and Exploited Children, would allow the SRS to place children in a secure detention facility if they violate a court order requiring them to stay in a foster home.

In addition, the House also gave first-round approval to bills that would:

— Make a crime of sheltering and concealing a runaway, punishable by up to one year in jail and a $2,500 fine.

— Establish a new crime of furnishing alcoholic beverages to minors for "illicit purposes."

The measure, aimed mainly at pimps who use alcohol and other drugs to induce runaway children into prostitution, also prohibits furnishing illegal drugs and drug paraphernalia to minors for similar purposes. Violations would be punishable by up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

— Include 10- to 14-year-old children in the state's traffic code and allow traffic offenses committed by those youngsters to be handled in juvenile court.

— Allow the Kansas State Historical Society to take charge of juvenile court records if they would otherwise be destroyed. The historical society would be directed not to disclose the records for at least 70 years — Specify that when a person pays child support, any payments in addition to the court-ordered amount would be credited to future payments.

ASK disapproves of admission bill

By CHRIS DOLL
Staff Writer

Associated Students of Kansas does not support a bill that mandates requirements for guaranteed admissions to Kansas Board of Regents schools, said Mark Tallman, director of legislative affairs for ASK.

Two bills under consideration in the Kansas House would toughen the open admission policy at the schools.

The Regents now recommend high school students complete three years of mathematics, three years of social studies, three years of natural sciences and two years of foreign languages to be prepared for college.

Tallman said many high schools in the state do not educate the students about these recommendations, or do not have the resources to offer the students the required classes.

"There are many high school students who are not aware of the recommendation or do not have the opportunity to fulfill them," he said.

The bill is sponsored by Denise Apt, R-Iola, who heads the House Education Committee where the bill is being considered.

Students could still be admitted if their class ranking and test scores were considered adequate, but they would not be guaranteed a place in the freshman class.

The other bill would allow each school to set its own admission requirements, subject to approval by the Regents.

Currently, the schools admit any Kansas resident who graduates from an accredited high school, said Barbara Dawes, associate director of admissions at K-State.

"I think we would probably raise the academic level of our students," Dawes said. "It would also mean a lot fewer students. Fewer students means few programs and fewer faculty."

Since the recommendation includes a foreign language requirement, 65 of the 304 Kansas school districts would have to add the program to comply, said Harold Blackburn, commissioner of the Kansas Department of Education.

Schools have been asked to add foreign language programs, he said.

Dawes can also see drawbacks in the bill.

"You would have to consider the discrimination possibilities," she said. "It would be very difficult not to be accused of discrimination."

Schools setting their own requirements may disrupt the high-school educational system, she said.

"If enrollment is down you could relax requirements a little. When it increases and money is tight you could cut back in the number," she said.

Tallman said ASK neither opposes nor supports the bill which would allow schools to set their own requirements. The University of Kansas section of ASK, however, may ad-

Report links S. Africa to Contra aid scheme

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — U.S. officials and the South African government have worked together for more than three years to provide military equipment to the rebels fighting the government of Nicaragua, according to a report broadcast Wednesday.

The operation was run by former CIA director William Casey outside of normal channels and involved aircraft and flight crews, said ABC News.

The network, citing State Department and intelligence sources, said the first direct contact on the matter occurred when the CIA's then-Latin America division chief Duane Clarridge traveled secretly to South Africa to solicit aid for the rebels, known as the Contras.

The CIA denied the trip, the network said.

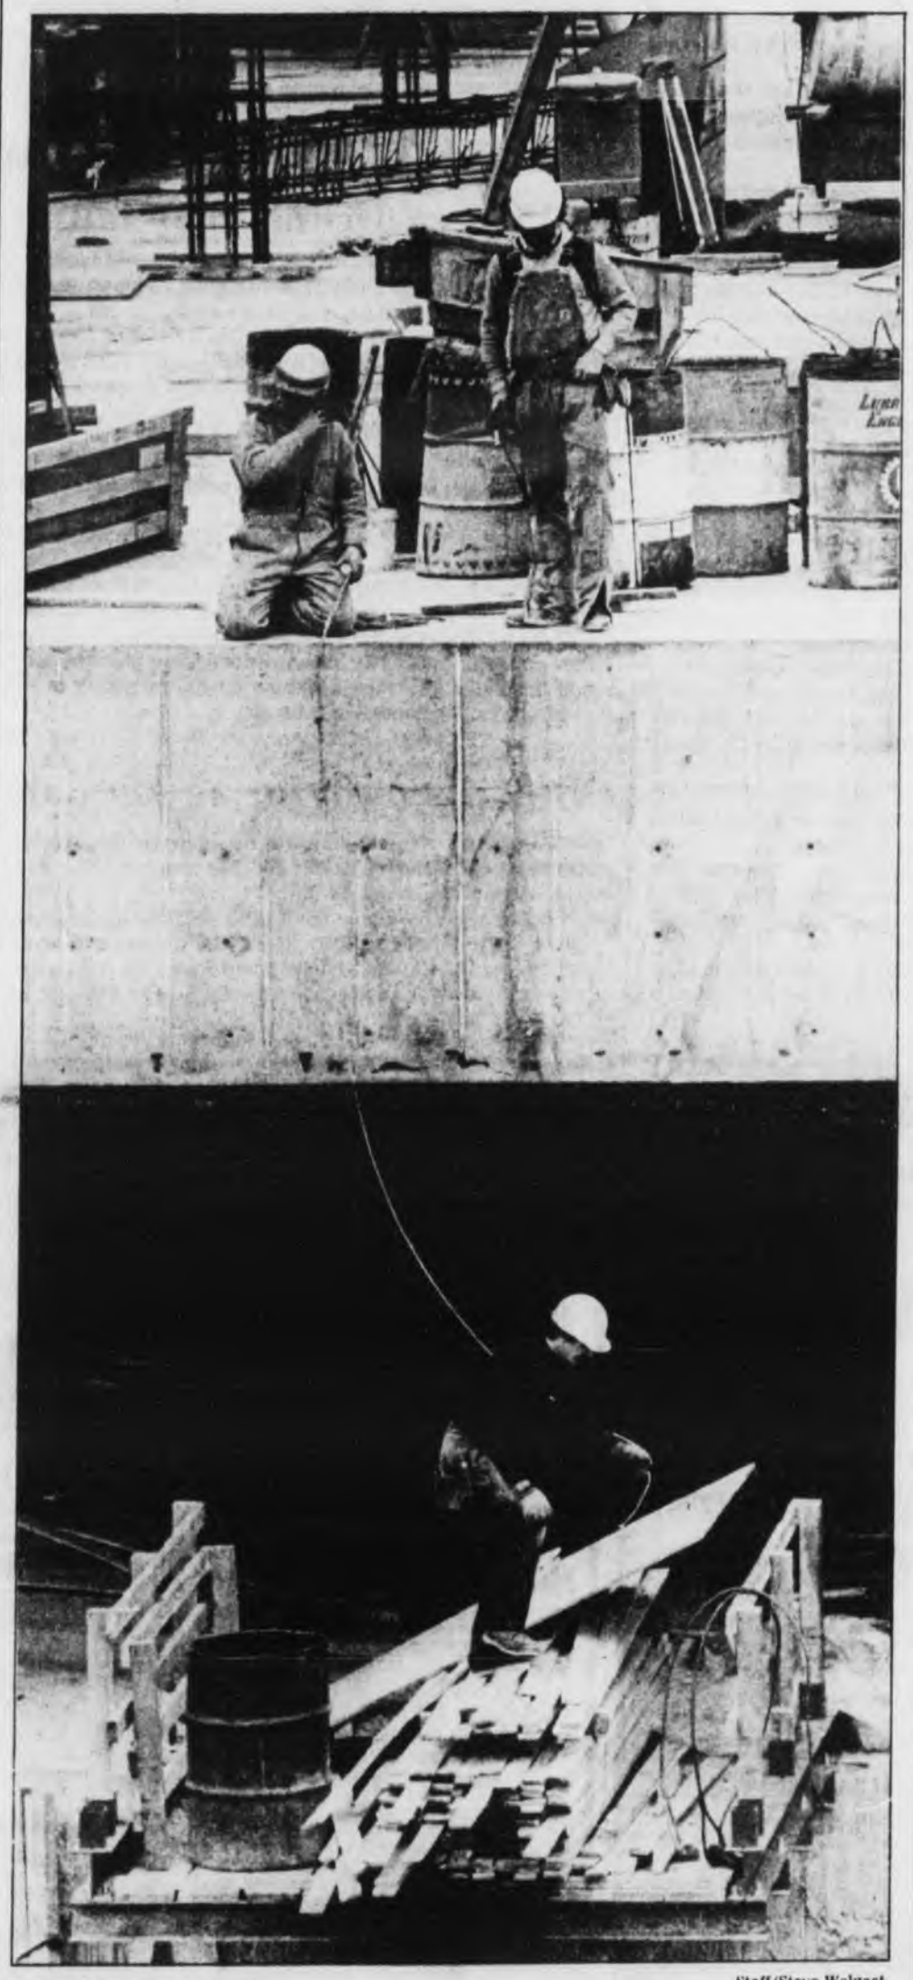
The report did not pinpoint the time of the trip, but said it occurred as Congress debated economic sanctions against South Africa. President Reagan vetoed proposed sanctions in September 1985, but Congress later overrode him.

The network said that at the time of the trip, Clarridge reported directly to Casey and was the agency's point man for the Contras.

Several months later, South Air Freighters, a South African cargo company, opened an office in the United States, said ABC. It said U.S. officials told it South Air was involved in covert activities for the South African government.

On the same day South Air incorporated, it signed a lease with Southern Air Transport, known for its past relationship with the CIA, the report said.

South Air provided planes to Southern Air that were used to fly weapons to the Contras, the network said.



In 1984, Casey met Saudia Arabia's King Fahd on the French Riviera and sought to persuade him to provide covert aid to the Contras or to the rebels in Angola as well as oil to South Africa, ABC said. It did not say whether Fahd agreed to the proposals.

Two years later in March, Casey made another secret visit, this time to South Africa, said ABC.

The network said sources told it that at the time, South African assistance to the Contras was being discussed in high level policy sessions in South Africa and in Washington.

"We're very interested in that trip, and what took place in that trip," said Rep. Lee H. Hamilton, D-Ind., who heads the House select committee investigating the Iran

Scientists cite SDI fallacies, development

By KIM GREER
Collegian Reporter

The belief that the Strategic Defense Initiative program could destroy an enemy missile before it leaves the Earth's atmosphere is a misconception, a professor of physics said Wednesday.

"People think this is going to be a magic shield — nothing will go through...This isn't true," said Al Compaan, one of three people from K-State who traveled to a SDI conference Feb. 22-24 in Washington, D.C.

Talat Rahman, associate professor of physics, and Theo Zoros, a research associate in physics, also attended the Scientists, Educators and the Strategic Defense Initiative Conference, organized by the Union of Concerned Scientists.

For SDI to be fast enough to destroy missiles, laser technology must be used, said Compaan, who works with lasers and has knowledge concerning their capabilities.

"I know enough about lasers to know we don't have the capability to destroy a missile, not at long range," he said. Compaan and Rahman also disagree with President Ronald Reagan's insistence that SDI is intended to be a defensive system.

Instead, Compaan and Rahman said they think SDI, also known as Star Wars, is intended to be an offensive weapon, and they think this is also what the Soviets believe.

"The root of the objections of most scientists is that the program is going to endanger the security of the United States and escalate the arms race," Compaan said.

Verification of research findings is one of the main problems Compaan and Rahman have with SDI development. For the system to perform as Reagan states it will, SDI must be completely automatic, Compaan said. He said the difficulty in writing computer software to enable SDI to perform its defense and maintenance functions makes the whole program "impossible."

Another problem is the unproven effectiveness of SDI. Rahman said the reports of 90 to 95 percent effectiveness are too optimistic.

Rahman said this is one of the best opportunities Reagan has had to further the cause of nuclear disarmament because the Soviet Union is in an era of change under the leadership of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Gorbachev has put himself in a vulnerable position by making repeated peace-making gestures toward the United States, Rahman said. She cited the self-imposed halt of Soviet underground nuclear weapons testing for the past 18 months as an example of such a gesture. She said this is "a plea to the United States (to stop nuclear testing)."

Compaan and Rahman said most members of the UCS would like to see SDI used as a "bargaining chip" in the ongoing arms talks at Geneva, Switzerland. They said Reagan has the chance to leave behind him a legacy: a nuclear arms reduction.

Compaan and Rahman became involved with the UCS more than a year ago when they circulated a pledge within the Department of Physics.

House gives pari-mutuel gambling bill first round approval

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After nearly three hours of debate Wednesday, the Kansas House gave first-round approval to a bill that would implement a constitutional amendment voters approved in November to legalize pari-mutuel gambling on horse and dog races.

The measure advanced for final action Thursday after receiving tentative approval on an unrecorded voice vote. Lawmakers considered a dozen amendments during debate and adopted six of the changes.

However, a controversial provision that establishes a special tax rate for combination horse and dog racing facilities survived the debate intact. The House voted 74-48 against an amendment that would have removed tax breaks in the bill for dual horse-dog tracks.

It also establishes the rules under which nonprofit corporations will be licensed to conduct races, sets out who will receive portions of the pari-mutuel gambling money and establishes restrictions designed to guard against criminal activity.

Because the proposal originated in the House, it still will have to be run through the Senate during the remaining weeks of the 1987 session.

Under the measure, the "takeout," or portion not returned to the betting public in the form of prizes, would be 18 percent on regular win, place and show wagers. For so-called exotic bets, the takeout would be 22 percent.

On regular bets, the state tax on greyhound races would be 5 percent while the tax at combination tracks and for horse races would be 3 percent. A similar portion of the takeout on exotic bets is reserved as the state's share.

Besides the state, the takeout money is divided between owners of the animals and the track operators, who share their money with the nonprofit groups sponsoring the races.

Some greyhound owners have charged that moves to lower the tax on greyhound races or to establish a special rate for combination tracks amounts to requiring the dog races to subsidize the less-profitable horse races.

However, horse owners and developers who say they want to build dual tracks say the lower rate is the only way to bring horse racing to Kansas on a significant scale.

Under amendments adopted by the House during Wednesday"s floor debate:

— The Kansas Racing Commission would be allowed to set rules on the use of live lures to train greyhounds for racing. Those include rabbits, other non-domestic animals and birds.

Rep. Ginger Barr, R-Auburn, succeeded in placing a provision in the bill in the House Federal and State Affairs Committee to prohibit use of live lures in training greyhounds. However, during floor debate, Rep. Jayne Aylward, R-Salina, succeeded in amending the bill to leave it up to the racing commission what training lures can be used, and establish regulations for their use.

— Organizations which apply for and receive dual track licenses by promising to operate both horse and dog racing tracks would have to build both tracks and make horse racing at least 20 percent of their program or face loss of their license

Cuts may cause Emporia State head to quit

By The Associated Press

EMPORIA — The president of Emporia State University, frustrated by budget cuts, said Wednesday he began considering taking a job outside Kansas because of the state's attitude toward funding for higher education.

President Robert Glennen also announced during his monthly news conference that the university's marching band will be disbanded this fall to save $97,000.

Glennen said he initially declined to be considered for the presidency of Southern Oregon State College in Ashland. He reconsidered after Gov. Mike Hayden announced his 3.8 percent, across-the-board budget cuts.

"The continual frustration involved with funding and budgeting in the state of Kansas, and specifically Emporia State" sparked an interest in other jobs, he said.

"Since I arrived here, I have been beseiged with budget problems on the campus, and it seems we're continually being stifled — just as we start to move forward — with some other type of setback," he said.

"I just basically feel it's difficult to be able to move the institution forward when you're continually running into activities that cause you to have to disassemble programs, cancel courses and cut faculty, staff, maintenance, and clerical positions," he said.

If limited spending for higher education continues in Kansas, Glennen predicted "an exodus of quality people" from institutions under the Kansas Board of Regents.

Committee endorses instant lottery

TOPEKA — Gambling on a state-run lottery, including instant-win tickets and more sophisticated computerized lotto numbers games, would begin in late summer under a bill endorsed Wednesday by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

Supporters envision a quick start up of the instant ticket phase of the lottery in hopes of pumping money into a troubled state economy by September.

Without dissent, the committee sent the lottery bill to the full Senate where debate and action are expected early next week. The committee's endorsement came after no discussion.

The House-passed bill implements a constitutional amendment voters overwhelmingly approved in the November general election. It creates an independent state agency to operate the lottery and a five-member lottery commission appointed by the governor.

It also would require that 30 percent of gross sales go back to the state to pay for economic development initiatives and other projects and 45 percent be returned to the public in the form of prizes. Secretary of Revenue Harley Duncan has estimated the lottery will generate $100 million in sales during its first full year of operation.

KPL seeks utility rate reductions

TOPEKA — KPL Gas Service announced today it will ask the Kansas Corporation Commission to approve reductions in its Kansas retail electric and natural gas rates totaling nearly $20 million for 1987 and another $12 million in 1988.

William E. Wall, KPL Gas Service chairman and chief executive officer, said the company proposes to pass through to its retail customers savings attributed to reduced federal income taxes, refinancing of first mortgage bonds and a buyback of preferred stock.

He said the rate reductions will mean a savings of about $24 this year for the typical Kansas residential customer who uses 750 kilowatt hours of electricity a month and about $2.25 in 1987 for those who use about 10,000 cubic feet of gas a month.

Noting that KPL Gas Service's rates already are below the national average and the lowest of the three major electric utilities serving Kansas, Wall said he expects the new rates to stay in effect for several years.

Investigators begin hospital audit

TOPEKA — Lawmakers ordered an emergency audit of the abuse reporting system at the Winfield State Hospital and Training Center Wednesday and two teams of auditors will be on site by Monday quizzing patients, staff and administrators about why the system failed.

The Legislative Post Audit Committee authorized the audit at the request of Rep. Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita, who said the Legislature needs to know as soon as possible what caused a breakdown in the system for reporting patient abuse.

Recent allegations of abuse of patients and intimidation of staff at Winfield led federal authorities to decertify the facility and cut off its $700,000 in monthly Medicaid payments, starting March 20.

Duncan told the Legislative Post Audit Committee an emergency audit of the Winfield facility was needed to determine "what went wrong with the current system of reporting abuse; how it failed and how we can improve it."

Duncan said he hoped the legislative auditor would be able to start immediately and return with at least a preliminary report by March 18.

"We need to know what kind of system is necessary to protect the residents from abuse and the staff from harassment and intimidation," Duncan said. "It may be necessary to change some of our statutes regarding abuse reporting.

Hostages now in Syrian custody

NEW YORK — Three Americans and an Indian who were kidnapped in Lebanon last month are now in the custody of Syrian army intelligence officials in Beirut, NBC News reported Wednesday.

Citing Middle Eastern and Western intelligence sources, the network said Americans Robert Polhill, Jesse Turner and Alann Steen, and Mithileshwar Singh, an Indian with resident alien status in the United States, were turned over to a senior Syrian intelligence officer, Col. Amir Taleh.

The report said it remains unclear who had kidnapped the four, all professors at Beirut University College who were seized from the campus on Jan. 24.

A previously unknown group, Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, on Jan. 28 claimed responsibility for kidnapping the four, and had demanded that Israel free 400 Arab prisoners. The group has released photographs and videotapes of the four hostages.

Asked about the NBC report, Dan Howard, a White House spokesman, said, "We have no independent confirmation at all."

At the State Department, spokeswoman Deborah Cavin said she also had no information on the report.

NBC reported its sources said that when it became known Syrian troops were going to move into Beirut in force last weekend, the hostages were turned over to Taleh in order to keep them out of the hands of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, or Party of God, which is believed to hold some other hostages in Lebanon.

Oil prices decline, may fall further

NEW YORK — Oil futures prices have slipped to levels not seen since December, and analysts say they could be headed still lower, at least in the short term.

In midday trading Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, futures contracts for April delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, had dropped 45 cents to $16.28 per 42-gallon barrel.

The price had not been below $17 per barrel since Christmas Eve, when it closed at $16.21, as markets continued to consider the impact of OPEC's Dec. 20 agreement to cut production to boost prices to $18 per barrel.

Among refined products, contracts for March delivery of heating oil were trading on the NYMEX at 43.90 cents a gallon, 1.11 cents below Tuesday's closing price, while unleaded gasoline for March stood at 45.00 cents, down 0.89 cent from Tuesday's close.

Andrew Lebow, of Shearson Lehman Brothers, said Tuesday that the two main reasons for the downturn were poor refinery profit margins and diminishing optimism about the ability of OPEC to hold to its production control agreement.

Officials push for ag sales abroad

WASHINGTON — Farm-state Republicans pledged Wednesday to press for an expanded export subsidy program this year to increase U.S. agricultural sales abroad.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said a group of House and Senate Republicans would seek to broaden and provide more money for the Export Enhancement Program, which uses government-owned commodity stocks to offer bonuses for grain sales to foreign customers.

The move could again trigger a confrontation between congressional Republicans and the Reagan administration over foreign policy implications of subsidies for "unfriendly" governments such as the Soviet Union.

Activist recommends checking Wolf Creek

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — An anti-nuclear power activist told lawmakers Wednesday the state needs to monitor operations at the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant, but a spokesman for the state's health agency said such a program would be expensive and duplicate what the federal government does.

Stevi Stephens, a lobbyist for the Nuclear Awareness Network, a Lawrence group, urged the House Energy Subcommittee to endorse a bill that would require the state Department of Health and Environment to do on-site monitoring at Wolf Creek. She said she did not trust the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission or the owners of the plant, who do the monitoring now.

However, Harold Spiker, a KDHE spokesman, said the bill could cost electricity users almost $1.1 million to start. He also said the program might not be effective and the bill is vague.

Under the bill, the department would start the program to evaluate the "environmental impact of nuclear power generation facilities." Wolf Creek is the only nuclear power plant in Kansas.

"I think there is a role for the state in the nuclear industry," said Rep. Ken Grotewiel, D-Wichita, the primary sponsor of the bill. "In this case, I think we need a higher standard of vigilance."

Stephens hauled several boxes full of records into the hearing room. She said it was evidence of safety problems at the plant and lack of quick notification of the public by the NRC and Kansas Gas and Electric Co.

"The entire concept of maintaining the status quo and not mandating that KDHE perform on-site monitoring at Wolf Creek, relies on trust," Stephens said. "I assert that such trust is extremely misplaced."

However, Spiker said his agency had no reason to doubt the reliability of the NRC's or the company's monitoring programs after reviewing inspection reports from the plant.

"We are not certain what would be gained by providing this additional state oversight," Spiker said.

Spiker also said the bill did not say what "on-site monitoring" would have to be performed. In addition, current law requires the department to avoid duplication of programs.

"The department is unable to decipher what the legislative intent is," Spiker said.

Senate to decide activity fee proposal

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will decide tonight on a proposal to restructure the student activity fee into three separate line items.

The student activity fee currently includes the Union, Student Publications Inc. and Recreational Services.

Brett Bromich, senior in marketing, said the separation is necessary because in the past Senate has not had time to evaluate these organizations' large budgets during the allocation process.

If the proposal passes, Senate will decide whether the Union and Student Publications should receive an increase in their line items.

If the restructuring bill fails, Student Affairs and Social Services Standing Committee will seek to increase the entire activity fee to accommodate the Union and Student Publications.

The bill states the increase is necessary because both the Union and Student Publications operated at a deficit during fiscal 1985-86 and are expected to do so again during fiscal 1986-87.

Dave Adams, director of Student Publications, said the combination of declining enrollment, loss of advertising, and the recently assessed administrative service charge has resulted in a need for an increase.

Senate will also hear second readings and vote on a resolution commending Gale Simons, professor of nuclear engineering, for designing a radiation dosimeter that detects the emission of low-energy beta particles more accurately than any other dosimeter.

Mark Tallman, director of legislative affairs for Associated Students of Kansas, will speak about the current bill in the Kansas House endorsing an increase in the fee-cost ratio for students.

University expenditures are incurred by the state and through student tuition. The proposed bill requests an increase in the percentage that students pay.

In other action, the current Senate will be presented with awards in its last session and the newly elected senators will be sworn into office.

The new Senate will vote on the approval of the 1987-88 Finance Committee.

Nominations for Senate chairman or chairwoman, Senate vice chairman or chairwoman, and Faculty Senate representative are also scheduled for discussion.

House finance plan may benefit urban schools

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House easily approved Wednesday a school finance plan which keeps tight budget limitations on the state's 304 local school districts and doesn't provide them much new state money.

The vote of 85-38 sent the measure to the Senate, which must act on the bill by March 28 under self-imposed deadlines set by the Legislature to speed up work on school finance proposals.

The Legislature must send a school finance bill to Gov. Mike Hayden by March 28. The purpose of the series of deadlines for action on the bill is to ensure it is passed ahead of the last-minute crush of legislation so school districts know what kind of budget increase limits and state funding will be available to them for the next school year.

They need this information to complete local contract negotiations with teachers each spring.

The school finance bill passed by the House differs only slightly from one Hayden proposed, but one of those differences is critical to some of the state's biggest school districts.

The bill has a provision which would allow the school districts to average their district wealth — one of the factors used in computing amounts of state aid received by local districts — for the past two years.

That helps the big districts because the smaller, rural districts have been losing wealth as the value of agricultural land declines. As the rural districts' wealth drops, the amount of state aid to which they are entitled increases. The more state aid they get, the less that is available to the urban districts.

Under the House plan, the Wichita school district would receive about $2.3 million more next year than under Hayden's plan. The Topeka district would get about $1 million more and Kansas City, Kan., about $1.3 million more. The Shawnee Mission district is not affected because it gets no general state aid.

The school finance measure keeps in effect for 1987-88 the same 2 percent to 3.5 percent budget increase limitations which were in effect during the current school year.

It would require $22 million in new general state aid to fund and would mean a $28.8 million statewide property tax increase if all districts raised their budgets the full amount allowed for 1987-88.

The House plan permits local districts to raise their budgets an additional one percent, subject to protest petition and a possible vote of taxpayers.

School districts could raise their budgets by 2 percent again next year if they are above the median in per-pupil expenditures in their enrollment category, or a maximum of 3.5 percent if below the median. The difference is designed to allow poorer wealth districts to increase spending so they can catch up with the wealthier districts.

Oil company changes policy due to lawsuit

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Royalty owners in five states, who own leases in natural gas fields produced by Phillips Petroleum Co., will be paid the interest rates of their home states, rather than Kansas, on $9.5 million of royalties owed them by Phillips, the Kansas Supreme Court ruled today.

The case centers on a class action lawsuit involving 28,100 royalty owners in all 50 states and several foreign countries.

However, the decision by Kansas' high court specifically affects the rate of those living in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Louisiana and Wyoming. To royalty owners in all other states and countries, Kansas' 15 percent interest rate will apply.

The case stems from action by Phillips in the mid-1970s to withhold interest payments to royalty owners while seeking natural gas rate increases before the then-Federal Power Commission.

When the rate increases finally were granted, Phillips paid the royalty owners the total amount withheld. However, the company did not pay interest on the money it held back.

Phillips' refusal to pay interest prompted Irl Shutts and others to sue the company and a class action lawsuit was brought on behalf of Shutts and 28,100 royalty owners, including residents of all 50 states, Washington, D.C., the Virgin Islands, and several foreign countries.

A Seward County judge originally ruled Phillips owed the royalty owners interest on the $9.5 million worth of royalty payments and the Kansas Supreme Court upheld that decision in 1984.

The state court ordered Phillips to pay a quarterly compounded interest rate of: 7 percent on royalty payments withheld prior to September 1974; 9 percent on payments between 1974-79; and 15 percent thereafter.

However, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the Kansas high court a year later, saying the laws of each individual state must be considered before interest rates are applied to the royalty payments. Where there are conflicts, the home state's laws should apply.

Although the Seward County District Court again held there was no conflict with other states' laws, the Kansas high court found a conflict does exist between Kansas' law and those in five other states and set new interest rates accordingly.

Rather than charging Phillips for the 15 percent rate mandated by Kansas law, today's decision requires the following rates: 18 percent in Texas; 15 percent in Oklahoma and New Mexico; 10 percent in Wyoming; and 7 percent in Louisiana. Although the rate is the same in Oklahoma and New Mexico, the supreme court used laws in those states to reach a decision.

Since Phillips did not challenge the application of Kansas' 15 percent rate to any other state, the supreme court assumed the company abandoned its appeal for those states.

Phillips, based in Bartlesville, Okla., produces gas in 11 states, including: Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, New Mexico, Wyoming, Arkansas, Illinois.

Child care personnel provide valuable help

If you thought the days when pioneers roamed the Midwest were gone, take a look at the KSU Child Care Cooperative. The cooperative has come under recent scrutiny because of an acquired debt, but one should step back and focus on the mission of the cooperative and the services being provided.

Two years ago, a building was given to the child care cooperative founders and that was all. The facility that exists now is a result of hard work and an abundance of dedication.

People interested in starting the cooperative went door-to-door for donations and visited Manhattan businesses asking for any kind of donation. Many donations were made and the cooperative began taking shape.

The pioneers started a much needed service for K-State. The cooperative allows hundreds of students the opportunity to attend college, and it is important to parents who work at the University.

The cooperative has agreed to eventually pay off its $30,000 debt through cuts in its budget and increased child care rates. A willingness to bail themselves out is another compliment to the cooperative personnel, especially in times when it is easier to simply declare bankruptcy and let someone else shoulder the financial burden.

The cooperative was started with great anticipation and need, but that enthusiasm couldn't make up for the lack of proper financial guidance needed to run a business. Now under the Department of Housing, the cooperative can receive this necessary guidance.

The pioneers of the cooperative are to be commended for their actions and dedication. Faculty, students and staff can take comfort in knowing their children are receiving quality care.

KU's self-serving ploy shouldn't be tolerated

A recommendation recently proposed by a University of Kansas task force advocating the elimination of the Board of Regents' open admissions policy is not designed with the welfare of the whole of higher education in Kansas in mind — it is designed to alleviate KU's enviable problem of too much enrollment.

Legislators must see through this thinly veiled proposal to limit in-state admissions at our state's "flagship" institution.

There are two bills proposed by the group. One would require students applying to a Regents institution to have taken a specific high school curriculum. If implemented immediately, as the task force suggested, the bill would decrease in-state student enrollment at KU potentially by thousands.

The other bill would allow each Regents institution to set its own admissions requirements. Never a more absurdly shortsighted proposal has reached Kansas legislators.

To approve the second bill would deny the very existence of a coordinated state system of higher education.

The former recommendation would damage K-State's enrollment in addition to ignoring the University's land grant mission — one of democratic education, where the common people have access to higher education.

It seems that KU is growing out of the Regents system — or at least that it wants to rise above that system. That attitude alone should be an affront to legislators pondering the merits of these bills.

KU's intent to become "the Harvard of the Plains" is overbearingly obvious. Its recommendations to the state legislators are nothing more than a selfish maneuver to benefit KU, and KU alone. The attitude that whatever is good for KU is good for higher education in Kansas is blatantly self-serving.

KU is attempting to solve an economic problem with a philosophical bid for elitism — a theory of education being a "right" and one that has long been rejected by public schools. In Kansas, especially, this bid should not be tolerated.

Tuition cost increases go beyond reasonable

For college students and parents financing an education, this news may come as no surprise: During this decade, the costs of college tuitions nationwide have risen faster than inflation. Nearly twice as fast.

The annual rate of increase in tuitions is nearly 10 percent, while the increase in inflation has been 4.9 percent annually during the '80s. Furthermore, this is greater than the 6.5 percent annual growth in personal incomes since 1981.

More than anything, what these figures represent is the notion that, year by year, the privilege of gaining a post-secondary education is one increasingly becoming reserved for America's wealthy. Such dynamic cost increases don't bode well for anyone — not for America's citizenry, and not for an education industry which threatens to price itself right out of existence.

SDI 'vision' is a pitiful illusion

AL COMPAAN
Guest Columnist

Nearly four years have elapsed since President Ronald Reagan called on the scientific community "to give us the means of rendering these nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete." The first five years of the Strategic Defense Inititative were to be used for researching the possibilities of such a visionary defense. Unfortunately, as one SDI study panel and research project after another reports its results, the compelling vision is rapidly degenerating into a threatening illusion.

However, the failure of one proposed laser scheme after another and the increasing financial problems within SDI cannot deter the myopic propagandists of Star Wars. Perhaps realism is too much to expect of a program that was conceived in the absence of competent scientific or technical advice. (The president kept the announcement of the program secret from his own scientific adviser!)

The vision of a nuclear-free world is so seductive, however, that a few reports of early "breakthroughs" were enough to sustain the early momentum. It was scarcely noticed that these demonstrations of presumably promising technologies had really degenerated into a "series of sleazy stunts," to use the words of a SDI scientist in a Livermore, Cal., weapons laboratory.

In a Materials Research Society meeting a year ago, I listened to Gerald Yonas, scientific director of the SDI Organization, describe how a recent demonstration was rigged to exaggerate the destructive power of a laser — and thereby provide exciting footage for evening news broadcasts. The test involved a high-power infrared laser melting a hole in a stationary Titan missile stage.

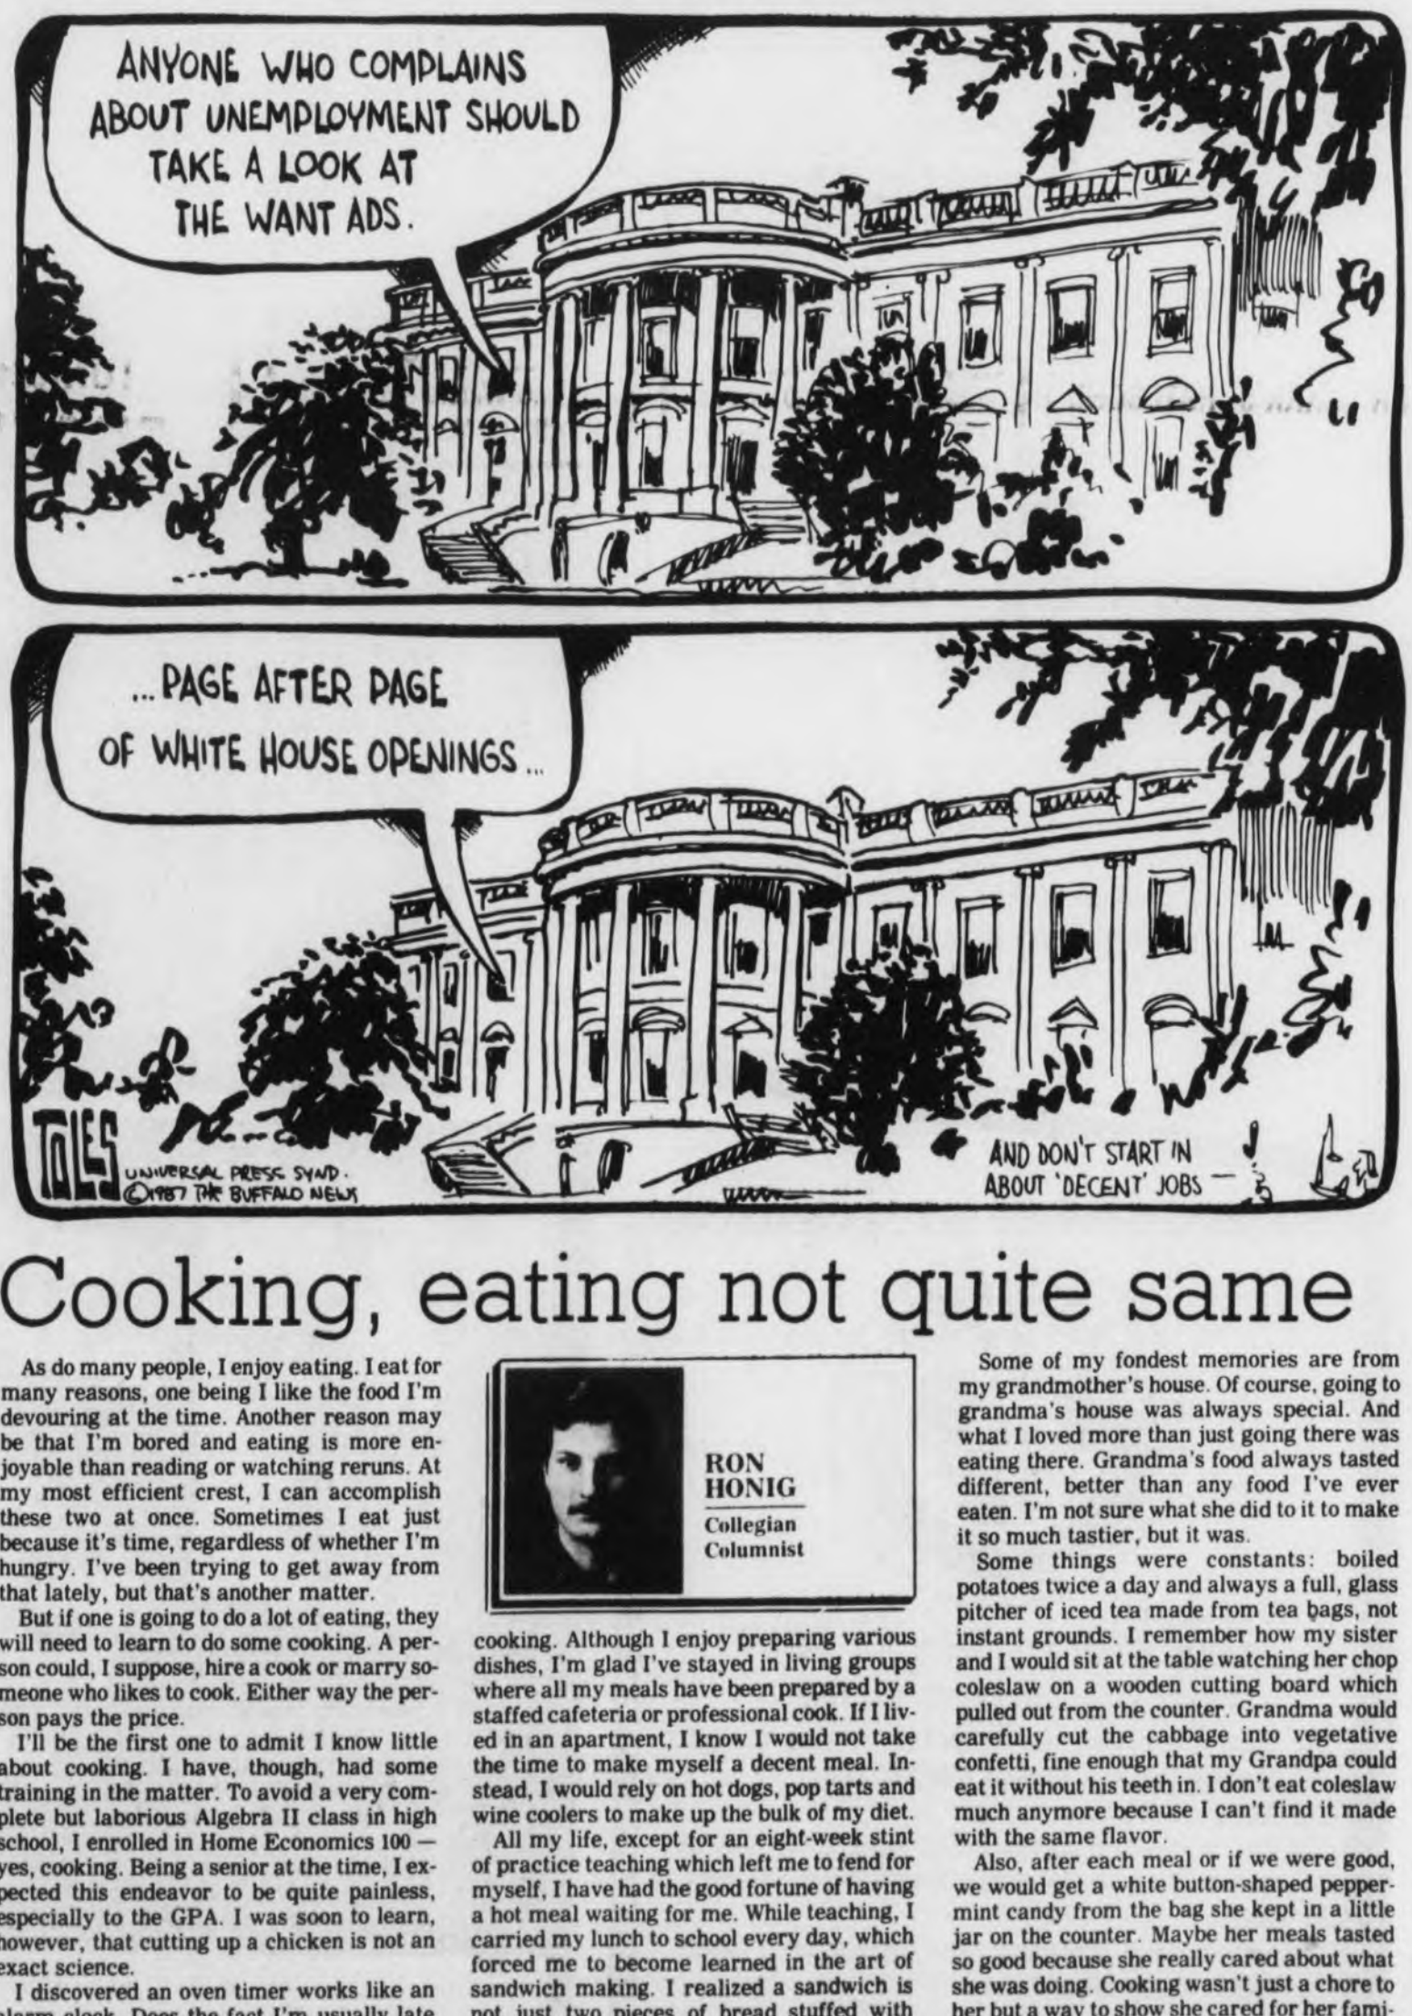
The drama was tremendously enhanced by pressurizing the inside and rigging stress cables to the outside so that the missile appeared to explode. We now have learned also that the laser involved was a discard from the defunct Navy "Sea Lite" program aimed at protecting ships from missile attack. After repeated failures, the Navy program had been scrubbed by Congress before SDI was even organized.

Another test extensively hyped by the SDI director, Gen. James Abrahmson, involved directing a ground-based laser at a target in the cargo bay of the space shuttle. You may recall that the first attempt failed and was repeated the second day. The cause of the failures has now been revealed, and it illustrates one of the most serious problems facing a Star Wars defense. The shuttle's computers mistakenly had been programmed to look for the laser on top of a mountain 10,023 nautical miles high! (The mountain top in California is really 10,023 feet above sea level.)

Thus at the time of the initial test, the cargo bay of the shuttle was pointed out into space since it orbits at only about 100 miles altitude! The additional irony is that several years ago the United States had already successfully targeted lasers on our own and Russian satellites. The test was a naked public relations stunt.

The best consultants to SDI have admitted that there is no foreseeable solution to the problem of constructing software which will work flawlessly without ever having been tested under the very hostile and unpredictable battlefield conditions expected during a nuclear attack.

In the face of these problems and a host of others, the managers of SDI no longer talk of the possibility of population defense. The goal has been quietly redefined. It will be built to defend land-based ICBMs, not people. Will someone please inform Ronald Reagan? In his State of the Union address, he was still hawking his rapidly fading vision of a nuclear-free world rescued by high technology.



Momentum is rapidly draining from the SDI program as key scientists and engineers leave the program, as a large majority of scientists express opposition and many pledge to refuse to accept its support even for relatively basic research, and as Congress wearies of approving yet another treaty-busting and budget-busting aerospace boondoggle.

How do Abrahmson and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger respond? They say 1987 will be a "watershed year" for SDI. The research has failed to produce more PR stunts which are considered politically necessary to maintain support, and in two years a new administration, Democrat or Republican, is likely to kill the program. The solution? Institutionalize SDI by beginning deployment now!! Of course, this is not the deployment of the vaunted Astroshield but of conventional rocket-powered ABM missiles to serve as a terminal point defense of our ICBM installations.

They insult us. Do they expect Americans to have forgotten totally the late 1960s deployment of the Safeguard ABM system around North Dakota ICBM bases? The Defense Department wisely dismantled it when it discovered that the electromagnetic pulse generated by the nuclear-tipped missiles would destroy the missiles' own radar guidance systems. Similarly, the present Russian "Galosh" ABM around Moscow is easily overwhelmed by our own MIRVed missiles.

The TV tonight reports that early deployment is possible because of the unexpectedly rapid progress of SDI. Orwellian NEWSPEAK.

Cooking, eating not quite same

RON HONIG
Collegian Columnist

As do many people, I enjoy eating. I eat for many reasons, one being I like the food I'm devouring at the time. Another reason may be that I'm bored and eating is more enjoyable than reading or watching reruns. At my most efficient crest, I can accomplish these two at once. Sometimes I eat just because it's time, regardless of whether I'm hungry. I've been trying to get away from that lately, but that's another matter.

But if one is going to do a lot of eating, they will need to learn to do some cooking. A person could, I suppose, hire a cook or marry someone who likes to cook. Either way the person pays the price.

I'll be the first one to admit I know little about cooking. I have, though, had some training in the matter. To avoid a very complete but laborious Algebra II class in high school, I enrolled in Home Economics 100 — yes, cooking. Being a senior at the time, I expected this endeavor to be quite painless, especially to the GPA. I was soon to learn, however, that cutting up a chicken is not an exact science.

I discovered an oven timer works like an alarm clock. Does the fact I'm usually late for my morning classes tell you anything? Despite small problems such as these, my partner and I made it through the class. The same could not be said, however, for a pair of freshman boys who had the misfortune of accidently substituting a cup of salt for a cup of sugar in a chocolate pudding recipe. The product (I hesitate to call it food) of their toil was a grainy paste with the strong flavor of over-cured bacon.

After I left for college, I did very little cooking. Although I enjoy preparing various dishes, I'm glad I've stayed in living groups where all my meals have been prepared by a staffed cafeteria or professional cook. If I lived in an apartment, I know I would not take the time to make myself a decent meal. Instead, I would rely on hot dogs, pop tarts and wine coolers to make up the bulk of my diet.

All my life, except for an eight-week stint of practice teaching which left me to fend for myself, I have had the good fortune of having a hot meal waiting for me. While teaching, I carried my lunch to school every day, which forced me to become learned in the art of sandwich making. I realized a sandwich is not just two pieces of bread stuffed with various ingredients. It's an edible sculpture. A memorial to delicatessens past.

I'm a firm believer the sandwich should center around the meat, which should not weigh less than one half of the weight of the sandwich. Almost any type of meat will do as long as it is tender enough to be easily bitten off so as to avoid an embarrassing incident resulting in a mustard covered chin. A quiche sandwich? If so it would probably be shaped like a paisley.

Some of my fondest memories are from my grandmother's house. Of course, going to grandma's house was always special. And what I loved more than just going there was eating there. Grandma's food always tasted different, better than any food I've ever eaten. I'm not sure what she did to it to make it so much tastier, but it was.

Some things were constants: boiled potatoes twice a day and always a full, glass pitcher of iced tea made from tea bags, not instant grounds. I remember how my sister and I would sit at the table watching her chop coleslaw on a wooden cutting board which pulled out from the counter. Grandma would carefully cut the cabbage into vegetative confetti, fine enough that my Grandpa could eat it without his teeth in. I don't eat coleslaw much anymore because I can't find it made with the same flavor.

Also, after each meal or if we were good, we would get a white button-shaped peppermint candy from the bag she kept in a little jar on the counter. Maybe her meals tasted so good because she really cared about what she was doing. Cooking wasn't just a chore to her but a way to show she cared for her family and doing the best she knew how. The sights and sounds of her kitchen are still with me today.

I have a long way to go before I master this cooking business, but I hope I continue to enjoy cooking as I grow older — one reason being it will make three periods of each day a little more enjoyable. Also I hope my kitchen is remembered for being a fun place to visit with a full cookie jar and a hot meal, or at least a cup of coffee.

Irish group performs jigs, ballads

By The Collegian Staff

Lively Irish jigs and reels flowed from the instruments of Cielidh, an Irish music group from Riley performing Wednesday in the Union Courtyard.

A Union Program Council Midday Arts presentation, Cielidh (pronounced kaylee), consists of musicians from the Manhattan-Riley area who play traditional music from the British Isles, mainly Ireland.

In Northern Ireland, "cielidh originally meant a bunch of neighbors who got together to discuss some political problem," said member Jack Hurlburt. "Back in 1890 some Irish musicians met in Bloomfield, England, and organized a musical get-together. Since then they've called it cielidh.

"We just get together to enjoy ourselves," Hurlburt said of the group of seven who claim Irish ancestry and play various instruments, dance and sing.

"We started out calling ourselves Life of Riley, but now we get together to play for our own amazement," making Cielidh a more fitting title, he said.

Instruments the group plays include a flat drum or bodhran, which is a raw goat skin stretched over an ash frame; a hammer dulcimer, a string instrument dating back to the Middle Ages; a mandolin, another string instrument introduced to Ireland in the last 40 years; a tin or penny whistle (once costing a penny), which comes in various keys and sizes; guitars, brought to Ireland by the Spanish after the fall of the Armada in 1588; a concertina, a small accordian-like instrument; and a fiddle, common in old Irish music, Hurlburt said.

Legislation for construction of highways draws criticism

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill calling for $477 million in new highway construction was derided Wednesday by some groups as incomplete and by others as too expensive.

Spokesmen for chambers of commerce in northwest Kansas cities said the plan discriminated against their part of the state. Truck stop owners and an Amoco Oil Co. lobbyist said a 5-cent increase in the state's gas tax, which would pay for the projects, would drive business out of Kansas.

In addition, the author of the proposal, Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Longton and chairman of the House Transportation Committee, repeated statements he made Tuesday that highway projects may have to be added to sell the proposal to the Legislature.

Crowell's committee heard testimony on his plan, which would authorize construction of $248 million worth of modern super-two highways across southeast Kansas — nearly all of the work recommended in January by a Kansas Turnpike Authority study of options for building new roads.

His plan also calls for several construction projects, including improvements along U.S. 54 from Wichita and Bucklin and completion of a four-lane section of Kansas 96 from Wichita to Hutchinson. The two projects are the only projects west of U.S. 81 included in the program.

The lack of the proposed "northwest passage" from Hutchinson to Hays via Great Bend angered most opponents of the bill. They cited recommendations for the proposed roadway in one of two feasibility studies the Legislature approved last year at a combined cost of $800,000.

"There is another Kansas west of Hutchinson and Bucklin," said Leroy Lyon, director of the Mid-Kansas Economic Development Commission in Great Bend. "I see no provision in (the bill) which indicates that those persons living west of Hutchinson or Bucklin will not be required to pay the additional taxes on fuels."

The western Kansas witnesses said they are backing a Senate bill that calls for $772 million worth of construction, or about 740 miles of highway improvements, also to be paid for by increasing the state's gasoline tax from 11 cents to 16 cents a gallon. The Senate bill includes the western Kansas projects.

Crowell said the Senate bill probably has a better chance of passing because it includes more projects. However, he said he does not intend to abandon his plan, despite the opposition.

"We intend to work this bill," Crowell said. "It's no great amount of work to add projects to this bill."

However, the truck stop owners and Dick Brewster, an Amoco lobbyist, voiced their opposition to any highway plan that would increase the gasoline tax.

Brewster said the bill would hit hardest in counties that border Missouri, which has a 7-cent gasoline tax. He said consumers would buy gas in Missouri at lower prices, or Kansas stations would be forced to give up some of their profits.

"The Kansas dealer will end up eating a couple or 3 cents, and you'll drive some out of business," Brewster said. "Amoco will not build any more stations on the Kansas side of the line."

Charles Newell, owner of a large truck stop in Newton, said increasing the gas tax would drive him out of business. He noted that Oklahoma's gas tax also was lower, at 10 cents a gallon.

"I don't think there's anyway we could compete," Newell said.

Study links genes to mental disorders

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A study of manic-depressive disease in three generations of a family has shown for the first time that defective genes can cause psychiatric disorders, and scientists say the finding could help them understand a wide range of mental illness.

"It's an extremely important opening into molecular genetics and molecular biology for the major mental disorders," said Dr. Darrel Regier of the National Institute of Mental Health.

The work should spur studies that lead to better understanding of such illnesses as schizophrenia and anxiety disorders, he said.

Previous studies had suggested that genetics could contribute to psychiatric disorders. But the new finding is the first demonstration of a genetic defect in a mental disease that shows no anatomical abnormalities in the brain, he said.

Alzheimer's disease, for which genetic links were recently reported, does include brain abnormalities.

The study traced the defective gene through three generations of an Old Order Amish family in southeastern Pennsylvania and determined that it lies within a narrow portion of the chromosome scientists have designated No. 11.

Members of the family who inherited the gene had an 85 percent chance of suffering manic-depression or related conditions during their lifetimes, said study co-author David Housman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

While the work will not immediately produce better treatments for the disease, it opens the door to further research that should lead to that goal, Housman said.

Manic-depressive illness, also called bipolar disorder, is estimated to afflict perhaps 2 million people in the United States at some time of their lives.

Generally it involves severe depression plus episodes of mania, which can include restlessness, racing thoughts and delusions of grandeur, or of hypomania, which is a less intense form of mania.

Nobody knows what fraction of victims get the disease from the gene identified in the Amish study. But even if it is only a tenth of United States cases, "you're talking about 200,000 to a quarter-million people," said Dr. Herbert Pardes, director of the New York State Psychiatric Institute.

The same issue contains two studies showing that the gene was not associated with manic-depressive illness in two non-Amish populations.

But a researcher for one of those studies said the Amish study is still important. If the Amish gene can be isolated and its role in the disease clarified, it will "give us a very important clue into how manic-depressive illness can be induced," which could apply to other mechanisms as well, said Elliot Gershon of the national mental health institute.

Budget problems delay school attendance bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The sponsor of a bill that would require Kansas children to attend school until they are 18 asked the House Education Committee Monday to postpone action on the bill until next year.

Rep. Sandy Duncan, R-Wichita, told the committee he had planned to submit the bill along with a proposal to finance alternative education programs statewide but dropped that plan because of the state's budget crisis.

"Next year I hope to present you a complete plan," he said. For now, he said, he simply wants to raise the compulsory age question for discussion purposes.

Kansas now requires children to attend school between the ages of seven and 16. But Duncan said at age 16 children should not be able to decide to drop out of school, which he said hurts them the rest of their lives.

"We allow minors to make a decision that profoundly affects the rest of their lives, the decision to end their high-school educations," Duncan said.

The dropout problem in Kansas and other states may become more severe as school districts adopt tougher standards and guidelines in response to national concern about the quality of education, he said. About 19 out of 100 Kansas students drop out of high school, he said.

Several Kansas educators said they support Duncan's proposals for alternative education and his concern with dropouts, but do not support requiring children to attend school until they are 18.

Dairy judging team wins first place for third straight year

By SUSAN STAGGENBORG
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Dairy Judging Team did it again.

For the third consecutive year the judging team won first overall at the intercollegiate judging contest in Fort Worth, Texas, Feb. 6.

"I was pleased with their performance; this group is interested in winning," said Charles Norton, professor of animal sciences and industry and team coach.

The team placed first overall against four other schools. The overall score is derived from oral reasons and placing scores.

The top winning team member, Chris Nikkel, sophomore in agricultural economics, was high individual overall, high individual in oral reasons and high individual in judging Holsteins and Brown Swiss.

Other team members and their placings are: Jim Smith, junior in business management, second overall, second in oral reasons, second in placing Brown Swiss and Jersey and third in placing Holsteins; Todd Williams, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, high individual in placing Guernseys and third overall; Scott Shuey, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, fourth overall, third in oral reasons and third in placing Brown Swiss and fourth in placing Holsteins.

Team members can receive 50 points in the placing portion of the contest. Placing is how well they rank a class of four dairy cows compared with how the official judge placed the cattle.

Another possible 50 points can be acquired by team members who give the best reasons, or defense, for their placings.

"We were better prepared for the competition than other schools," Norton said. This was mainly because the students compete over a two-year period, he said.

"Junior" members compete in one contest, and the next year, as "senior" members, they attend two competitions and the nationals in early October in Madison, Wis.

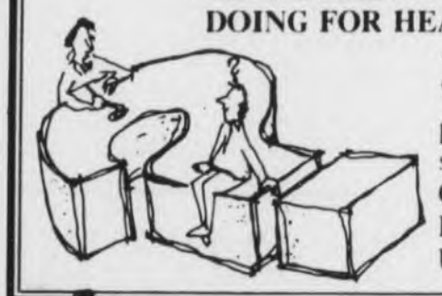
"We started the season a little early. We've been successful because of timing," Norton said.

Before the Fort Worth competition, the team members met every afternoon at the start of the spring semester. The training was intense because they did not look at live cattle, he said.

They practiced placing of dairy cattle and giving oral reasons by looking at pictures of various breeds of dairy cattle. The team makes use of the pictures because they are cheaper, and they are readily available.

Members of the judging team do not have to have a dairy background, Norton said. Many of the members have shown or judged beef cattle before and now want to know more about dairy cattle.

Team members are chosen from the dairy judging class taught by Norton. Those students who do well are asked to participate; others are taken on a volunteer basis.



The selected members compete in the fall at a contest in Memphis, Tenn., and at the second competition in Fort Worth.

Computer systems aid students in designing new fashions

Staff/Brett Hacker

Bernard Rueschhoff, instructor in clothing, textiles and interior design, uses one of three computer design systems in the College of Human Ecology which were purchased at the beginning of the 1986 fall semester.

By KIM GREER
Collegian Reporter

As computer designing invades the fashion industry, students in apparel design classes are learning to handle this newest asset with ease.

Students can use the computer systems to construct designs on computer screens, allowing them to see the design and make changes if necessary, said Bernard Rueschhoff, instructor in apparel design.

If students like the design, it can be saved on the computer for later use. However, if they do not like their work, Rueschhoff said, different types of sleeve, collar and pants designs can be keyed into the computer.

He said a computer system is "much faster than hand drawing...(and) more precise. It enhances (the students') design ability because it allows them to try different design components."

The College of Human Ecology bought three computer-aided design systems at the beginning of the 1986 fall semester.

In order to implement the systems, the college had to buy several pieces of equipment, including a hard-disk computer for increased information storage, an enhanced color monitor and a graphics board for clarity, a plotter to print out the final presentation, a graphics program, and a digitizer, or computerized sketch pad.

To perform these design functions, students use a "sketch mode" and a digitizer, drawing with a cursor on the digitizer. If the student would rather draw free hand, he can draw on the digitizer with a computer sketch pen. Using either approach, the design is displayed on the computer screen rather than on the digitizer surface.

"Most of the students adpated fairly easily to the computer," Rueschhoff said.

"(The students and the faculty) are pretty much feeling our way through it...We're trying to build on basic knowledge," Stolfus said.

The principles of the systems were taught as a part of the class, Rueschhoff said. Students had assignments related to the design program to help them learn how to use it.

Rueschhoff said he thinks the design program will be useful for students when putting together a portfolio.

Stolfus said students began using the systems during last fall to compile their portfolios. She said the use of the systems to assemble portfolio artwork will demonstrate flexibility to future employers.

The design program will enable the students to make better presentations, which will boost their chances for employment, Rueschhoff said, adding that the apparel industry is turning toward computerization.

Many apparel manufacturers are using computers to design garments, make patterns and cut out garment pieces because it is more efficient, he said. If the students can claim experience with computer-aided design, he thinks they will have an edge in the job market.

Rueschhoff said the total cost of the design systems was about $10,000. He said the computer system the department purchased has about 90 percent of the features of professional designing companies' computer systems. The average cost of a professional computer design system is $100,000, he said.

Rueschhoff is currently doing research on combining hardware and software systems to increase the flexibility of the college's computer-aided design systems.

Former bank president faces federal embezzlement charge

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — A former Inman bank president has been charged with embezzlement and misapplication of bank funds.

Charles S. Shoup, 43, of Eureka, the former president and chief executive officer of the Bank of Inman, was arrested Wednesday in Eureka, said Max Geiman, FBI spokesman.

Shoup, who was employed by the bank from Jan. 1985 to Jan. 1986, was indicted on five counts Tuesday by a Wichita federal grand jury, Geiman said.

The indictment alleges Shoup authorized the payment of five checks totalling $42,578, from his personal account at the bank although he knew the account lacked sufficient funds to cover the checks. The checks were issued between Dec. 18, 1985 and Jan., 18, 1986, Geiman said.

Shoup appeared before U.S. Magistrate John B. Wooley and was released on a $3,000 personal recognizance bond. His pretrial hearing was scheduled for March 4.

If he is convicted on all five counts he could be sentenced to a maximum of 25 years in prison and fined $25,000.

Event to showcase student programs

By JEANNETTE O'CONNELL
Collegian Reporter

A "Rendezvous with KSU" is scheduled for March 28 to promote University activities and heighten prospective students' interest in K-State.

Otherwise known as All-University Open House, the event showcases student life and programs at K-State, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement and director of enrollment management and chairman of the All-University Open House Coordinating Council.

Open House is the biggest campuswide event of the year, involving more than 2,500 students and faculty members and 20,000 expected visitors.

"It will be an exciting day," said Kelly Lamborn, senior in journalism and mass communications and student chairwoman of Open House.

The core of Open House is the academic displays set up by departments, colleges and campus organizations. Student life exhibits will be located in the Union along with admissions information, financial assistance and student services information.

Each college will sponsor a display from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. A list of display locations and times will be in a University Relations handout distributed the day of Open House.

There will be campus tours and a bus running to the Veterinary Medicine Center. Fraternity and sorority houses will be open and other special entertainment and musical groups will be performing throughout the day.

Other events planned include the Little American Royal in Weber Arena, an ice sculpture competition in Seaton Courtyard, a petting zoo in the Veterinary Medicine Center and jumps by the parachute club in Memorial Stadium and intramural fields.

"Our Open House is such a big deal that other schools look at it and wish they had a program like it," said Bosco, who has been involved with the program since it began nine years ago.

The goal of Open House is to inform prospective students and their parents of the educational opportunities available at K-State. Other goals are to inform the general public of the educational philosophy and ongoing research at the University and to facilitate career exploration for those currently enrolled at the University.

To analyze the effectiveness of Open House, a survey evaluation of visitor reaction is taken through the mail. All K-State students surveyed who attended Open House in the last two years indicated that it was a worthwhile experience.

The evaluation also showed that 43 percent of prospective students indicated that they were more likely to enroll at K-State after attending Open House. The results of the evaluation, done every year after Open House, indicate favorable visitor reactions, Bosco said.

Early guests can also visit the College of Engineering's annual parade at noon March 27. Engineering displays will also be open 5:30 to 9 p.m. that day and all day Saturday.

An all-University dance sponsored by the KSU Student Foundation and the Union is scheduled for 8 p.m. March 27 in the Union Catskeller.

Planning for Open House began last fall, when initial contacts were made. Media planning and designing also began at that time. As student chairwoman, Lamborn is in charge of the Union Courtyard, special events, student life exhibitions and other committees.

"The week of Open House," Lamborn said, "will probably be a full-time job tying up loose ends, last-minute details and assisting the representatives (from colleges and organizations)."

As part of the promotion and design of Open House, five billboards were erected in the Kansas City area and 13,000 postcards were delivered to prospective students.

Funding for Open House totals about $7,000 — the same as last year. Money is allocated through individual college budgets ($125), while substantial support comes from the KSU Foundation ($3,500) and University Relations ($1,500). These funds pay for posters, postage, visitor information souvenir program, Open House badges, newspaper advertising, graphics and other promotional material.

Missouri fails to handle Lady Cats' seniority

Staff/Andy Nelson

K-State head coach Matilda Mossman gives guard Susan Green a hug following the Lady Cats' 90-81 victory over the University of Missouri Thursday in Ahearn Field House. Green scored 29 points to help lead K-State into a tie for first place in the conference.

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

Before last night's women's basketball game in Ahearn Field House, the four senior Lady Cat players were honored for their participation in K-State athletics.

After leading the Lady Cats to an impressive 90-81 victory over Missouri for a share of the Big Eight Conference title, those seniors could have been honored again.

Susan Green, Sue Leiding, Carlisa Thomas and Theza Fitzpatrick led the Lady Cats in what Coach Matilda Mossman said was K-State's best game of the year. Green, Leiding, and Thomas combined for 67 of the Lady Cats' points, while Fitzpatrick had four steals.

"This was the best game from start to finish for us all year," Mossman said. "We played a complete ball game. We also had a great shooting night."

K-State, 20-7 overall and 9-5 in the Big Eight, seemed to do nothing wrong all night as K-State shot 65.4 percent from the field, including an incredible 77 percent in the second half. The Lady Cats also shot 88 percent from the free throw line (22 of 25), and had 23 assists and 10 steals.

An elated Mossman was glad to see the team finally play a complete game, and at the right time of the season as the Lady Cats head into the Big Eight postseason tournament this weekend.

"We got a lot of things accomplished tonight. We finally got our 20th win of the season, which was one of our team goals this year. And, most important, we got a piece of the Big Eight championship," said Mossman, whose team finished the season tied with Missouri and KU.

"It doesn't matter how many teams we share it with, we are the Big Eight co-champs."

The game started as if the two teams were heavyweight boxers trying to size each other up to see who was going to make the first move. K-State made the first move, as they slowly built a 19-14 lead midway through the first half.

Missouri, 19-8 and 9-5, then gave its best punch and fought back to take a 22-21 lead. The Lady Cats answered right back with six straight points and never looked back.

Green, with 17 first-half points, was the key factor in the first half. She finished with a career-high 29 points in her final game in Ahearn Field House.

"This was definitely the highlight of my career," said Green, a 5-foot-8 guard from Anthony. "It is kind of like a dream come true."

K-State stretched its lead to 42-36 at the half, and then broke the game wide open with a 24-14 run in the first eight minutes of the second half.

Missouri tried desperately to fight its way back into the contest, but everything they tried seemed to do no good. The Lady Cats had no trouble with Missouri's full-court press as Thomas and Leiding hooked up for some easy layups off long passes over the Lady Tigers' defense.

"Missouri is a very good basketball team, but I don't think there was anything that they could do to stop us tonight," Mossman said.

The Lady Tigers did make one last desperate attempt to catch K-State late in the game. Missouri went on an 8-2 run to cut a once 13-point K-State lead to 85-78 with 1:24 remaining in the game. The Lady Tigers' hopes vanished when Leiding connected on both ends of a one-and-one situation.

K-State also held things in check on the defensive end of the court in what was one of the more fast-paced games of the Lady Cats' season.

Missouri's high-scoring center Renee Kelly, who is the Big Eight's fifth all-time leading scorer, was held to 21 points — four below her season average.

Besides Green, Leiding added 24 points and Thomas came close to recording her third triple-double of the season as she scored 14 points, pulled down 12 rebounds, and handed out nine assists. The nine assists gave Thomas the single-season assist record with 143 for the year. She only needs six more to break the all-time career assist record.

Missouri was led by Kelly's 21 points. Maggie LeValley followed with 18 and Monique Lucas added 12 points.

K-State has drawn the No. 2 seed in the postseason tournament and will play Oklahoma Saturday in a first-round game.

Big Eight crown, 20-win campaign cap seniors' 'indescribable' careers

By CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

Missouri picked the wrong night to come into Ahearn Field House and play K-State. The Lady Cats were hot and there was nothing the Lady Tigers could do to put out the flame.

K-State took an early lead and rolled to a 90-81 stomping of Mizzou. The Lady Tigers couldn't keep pace with the Lady Cats' deadly accurate shooting — 65.4 percent from the floor and 88 percent from the charity stripe.

"It's indescribable," said senior guard Susan Green, who had a career-high 29 points in her final home game.

"It's just been incredible and I think tonight was the topper."

Green wasn't the only one who had trouble finding words to describe her emotions last night.

"It feels great," said Theza Fitzpatrick, fellow senior starting guard. "I can't even explain the feeling."

For the senior members of the Lady Cats, this is their second Big Eight Conference title. K-State won the conference tournament during the 1983-84 season.

But the thrill wasn't confined to the seniors. It was just as exciting for the six freshmen Lady Cats who got to experience the thrill of the conference crown in their first year.

"It feels great," said freshman guard Elyse Funk. "I'm just glad for the seniors and everything, and that we contributed and helped them."

With the victory, the Lady Cats finish with a perfect 13-0 record at Ahearn this season and tie for the Big Eight title with Missouri and Kansas.

Wildcat fans didn't get to have a party for the men's basketball team Tuesday night. But the Lady Cats made sure K-State has something to party about this week, and they did it in front of their largest home crowd this season — 2,180.

"Our five starters, they've been the crunch bunch all year long," Coach Matilda Mossman said. "This has to be the best game we've played from beginning to end all season."

Senior center Sue Leiding, who has experienced winning a Big Eight title before, said she got just as thrilled the second time around.

"It was at 1:43 (left in the game)," Leiding said. "I turned around and said 'CT' (Carlisa Thomas), I got goose bumps. She looked at me like I was on drugs."

Leiding wasn't the only Lady Cat who knew what the outcome was going to be even before the last seconds ticked off the clock.

"I had complete confidence from the word 'go,'" Green said. "I know right now our team is ready to go."

Are the Lady Cats capable of making it to the Final Four in the NCAA Tournament?

"I don't know," Green said. "To me, I think if we can just pull together, we might be the 'Cinderella' team in the NCAA."

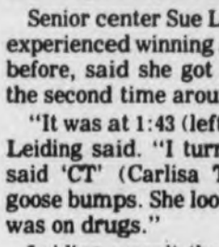
Bullard paces Buffs by KU; NU wins by 2

By The Associated Press

Matt Bullard scored 23 points to lead Colorado to a 66-56 Big Eight Conference basketball upset over 16th-ranked Kansas Wednesday night in Boulder.

And in Stillwater, Brian Carr hit two clutch free throws with one second remaining to send the game into overtime, then scored five points in the extra session to help Nebraska beat Oklahoma State, 79-77.



Danny Manning led Kansas with 19 points. Kansas fell to 21-8 and 9-4 in the conference. Missouri leads the Big Eight at 10-3.

Dan Becker added 12 points for Colorado and Scott Wilke had 11 as the Buffs moved to 8-18 overall, 2-11 in conference.

With the victory, Nebraska improved to 16-10 overall and 6-7 in the Big Eight Conference. Oklahoma State fell to 8-18 in all games, 4-9 in league play.

Alford led Oklahoma State with 18 points and Robert Smith had 16. Bernard Day scored 18 and Buchanan had 15 for the Cornhuskers.

Stereotypes are difficult to break; just ask any female sports writer

JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

I didn't want to do it, but peer pressure and lack of anything really exciting or controversial to write about has put me in this position.

The last time I had to write a column, my editor and other people around the newsroom suggested it would be interesting to read about how I handled being the only female sports writer on the Collegian staff.

I quickly shunned the idea. I didn't want to draw attention to my status because I thought all sports writers should be treated as equals. I have relented, because I have discovered that this isn't the way it is in reality.

I should have known something was up when I went to cover a men's basketball game for the first time. The Wildcats were playing Nebraska in Ahearn Field House — the Big Eight Conference season opener for both teams. I was nervous — very nervous — mostly because I didn't know what to expect.

I walked up the stairs to the press box and was met with stares from about 15 pairs of eyes. I was the only female in the press box, with the exception of members of K-State's Sports Information Office staff. They sit and work on the upper tier of the box. I was stationed on the lower tier with the writers and broadcasters, and I felt somewhat like I was invading someone else's territory.

After the game, the media went to the lockerroom area for postgame interviews. By this time, my hands were actually sweating. I went into the coaches' lounge to wait for interviews to start. Coach Lon Kruger finally came in, made an opening statement and opened the floor for questions.

I sat there, not knowing whether to keep my mouth shut or take initiative and ask something. So, I blurted out some question about why K-State switched from a man-to-man defense to a zone.

This was met with backward glances from more than one writer. But strangely enough, I was able to ignore them.

A realization hit me on the way to the lockerroom. It dawned on me why these men appeared to be surprised(?) by my appearance on the K-State sports scene.

First of all, it's been a long time since a female has written sports exclusively for the Collegian. I don't remember reading anything by a woman sports writer since my freshman year two and a half years ago. (Then again, who remembers much of anything about his or her freshman year, let

NCAA hands SMU first 'death penalty'

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Southern Methodist became the first school punished under the NCAA's "death penalty" when it was banned from playing football in 1987 and limited to a restricted 1988 schedule, but the Mustangs escaped the maximum complete two-year shutdown.

The punishment announced Wednesday was the harshest football penalty in NCAA history, and SMU officials accepted it without rancor or plans to appeal. The NCAA may have softened the blow because the school had cooperated fully to uncover recruiting violations and a slush fund for players.

SMU was the first school to face the possibility of the "death penalty" — a complete shutdown of football for two years — under NCAA legislation passed in 1985 for repeat offenders. Only six schools voted against the measure, including SMU.

"Not only is Southern Methodist University a repeat major violator, but its past record of violations is nothing short of abysmal," said the NCAA report.

The probation, SMU's record-tying seventh since 1958 and the third this decade, lasts until 1990. The Mustangs can play only seven Southwest Conference games in 1988 — none at home — and are barred from television or bowl appearances.

"It will have a long-range impact on the program," said NCAA enforcement director David Berst, who announced the sanctions.

Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles said he plans to ask Southwest Conference officials to appeal to the NCAA to allow SMU to play the other eight SWC schools in 1988 to ensure equity in conference competition.

SMU loses non-conference games against Oklahoma and New Mexico this year, and Oklahoma and Notre Dame in 1988, at an estimated cost to the school of more than $500,000.

The Mustangs also are limited to a head football coach and five full-time assistant coaches until August 1989, and can award only 15 scholarships in 1988. SMU had nine assistants and 25 scholarships. Off-campus recruiting is prohibited until August 1988.

Supreme Court affirms case for racial quotas

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in an important victory for affirmative action and a defeat for the Reagan administration, on Wednesday upheld racial quotas to hasten the promotions of blacks.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices said a court-ordered plan requiring promotion of equal numbers of black and white Alabama state police troopers is constitutional.

The plan does not amount to reverse discrimination against whites whose promotions may be delayed, the court said, because it is a "narrowly tailored" device to correct proven past discrimination.

In other decisions, the court:

—Voted 6-3 to bar state and local governments from regulating high-stakes bingo games and other gambling on Indian reservations until Congress consents to such regulation.

—Ruled, by an 8-1 vote in a Florida case, that states may not deny unemployment benefits to employees fired for refusing to work on their Sabbath. The court said such denials violate freedom of religion.

—Ruled unanimously that the federal government may put limits on the rates cable television companies pay for attaching their wires to utility company poles.

The affirmative action decision marks the first time the high court directly has upheld racial quotas for promotions. The justices previously upheld hiring quotas but have struck down racial preferences that protect from layoffs blacks with less seniority than whites.

Wednesday's ruling was hailed by civil rights groups that said it is another blow against the administration's assault on racial preferences in the American workplace.

"Once again the Supreme Court has rejected the Justice Department," said Clyde Murphy of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. "We hope they (administration officials) decide it's appropriate now to support the law rather than resist what is the clear message of the Supreme Court."

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, meeting with President Reagan at the White House on black education and other matters, said, "Now that the court has spoken, I hope that the law will be enforced vigorously."

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's civil rights division, minimized the significance of the ruling.

"Our position has been never to use racial preferences. The court has said hardly ever and has carved out narrow exceptions," he said.

The Alabama plan requires promotion of one qualified black for each qualified white promoted until blacks comprise 25 percent of the higher rank or until the police department adopts an approved racially neutral promotion system.

The only time the plan, ordered by U.S. District Judge Myron H. Thompson, has been implemented was to promote eight black and eight white troopers to corporal in 1984.

Justice William J. Brennan, in the court's main opinion, rejected the administration's argument that a 50-50 quota is too high when blacks comprise only 25 percent of the affected labor force.

The bills originated after KU set up a task force to study the academic level of incoming students and to make recommendations to their university.

Bruce Lindvall, director of admissions and member of the task force, said their university wanted a study done in view of tougher curriculum the college's freshmen would face in the fall of 1987.

Freshmen will be required to take three semesters of core classes, such as English Composition I and Algebra I, before taking other courses, Lindvall said.

"Who should teach a course like Advance Algebra? Should the high schools or the community colleges, or should the universities duplicate the class and offer it?

"I think a student should be well enough prepared to come into higher education and do reasonably well," he said.

Blackburn agreed.

"Open enrollment is a noble and just notion," he said. "But colleges and universities should be as tough as they can be, and you have to expect a lot from both the faculty and students."

country have signed a pledge that they will neither solicit nor accept funds that will be connected to research on SDI," Rahman said. Eighty percent of the faculty in the physics department signed the pledge, Compaan said, but they "will not try to prohibit one of our colleagues from accepting funds."

The goal of the conference was to enable scientists opposing SDI to make contact with senators and other government representatives, Rahman said. She and Compaan spoke to Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and her defense aide.

The conference featured several guest speakers, including Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La. Johnston is the chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and a member of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. He led the fight in the Senate to limit the funding for SDI in 1986.

Another speaker at the conference was Thomas Cochran, a senior scientist with the Natural Resources Defense Council. He has independently led an effort to establish verification methods for nuclear weapons testing by both the Soviet Union and the United States.

alone who covered sports for the Collegian.)

Secondly, not a lot of women cover sports, although a column in the Kansas City Star's Monday edition pointed out the number of women sports writers is increasing. The subject of the column was Karen Kornacki, a sports reporter and anchor at KMBC, Channel 9.

Kornacki has been covering sports since 1979. In those days, life was much harder for women trying to report sports. Old barriers and stereotypes are hard to break. Women such as Kornacki have paved the way for women like me to become accepted in the world of sports coverage.

As in anything, however, one still has to prove herself capable of handling any situation — including locker-room confrontations.

Yes, I've even had one of these. Everyone laughed about it for a couple days, including me.

I had to go to the Oklahoma locker-room after its game with K-State in Ahearn Field House to try to get an interview with Sooners' star Tim McCalister.

I tried to casually walk into the lockerroom, but was stopped by the long arm of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol.

"Uh, excuse me ma'am," the trooper said, "but I believe the boys are still dressing in there."

I started to back out the door, when a bare backside (I don't know who it belonged to) walked by me.

"Hey baby," said the person with a towel draped across his front, "come on in."

The door shut at this time, and I couldn't help but laugh. I had to wait about 30 minutes to get my interview, but I really didn't mind not being able to go into the dressing area. I decided I wouldn't like it if some guy was trying to interview me when I was in the shower.

Independents may split Chicago mayoral vote

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Mayor Harold Washington, fresh from his primary victory over Jane Byrne, criticized two Democrats for running as independents Wednesday, while an analyst predicted they might ensure his re-election by splitting the white ethnic vote.

"Integrity is synonymous with consistency...One shoudn't make such decisions lightly," the city's first black mayor said of the way Edward Vrdolyak and Thomas Hynes sidestepped Tuesday's Democratic primary by running on third-party tickets.

"Their main vulnerability is that they're open to the charge of being opportunistic," Washington said of his chances in the April 7 general election.

Washington scored his primary victory by melding liberal white and Hispanic support with overwhelming support from blacks — producing a margin of better than 100-to-1 in one mainly black ward. Blacks account for an estimated 42 percent to 44 percent of the city's 1.55 million voters.

With 2,804 of the 2,900 precincts reporting, or 97 percent, Washington had 558,168 votes, or 53 percent, to 499,579, or 47 percent, for Byrne. Sheila Jones, a follower of extremist Lyndon LaRouche, had 2,493 votes, according to unofficial returns.

The winner of the Republican primary was Donald Haider, a Northwestern University professor and long-time Democrat who once served as budget director for Byrne and adviser to Hynes.

Don Rose, a veteran political analyst, said Vrdolyak and Hynes risk splitting the white ethnic vote that allowed Byrne, a former mayor, to mount a serious challenge.

Speculation that either Vrdolyak or Hynes may abandon the race to leave the survivor a cleaner shot at Washington has hounded both men since they announced their candidacies.

Asked which he expected to drop out, Rose, who has managed campaigns for both Washington and Byrne, said, "I'm not sure either will."

Vrdolyak, Washington's City Council arch-foe and the county Democratic Party chairman, is staging his mayoral campaign as the nominee of the Illinois Solidarity Party.

Hynes, Cook County assessor and heir to the Daley wing of the Demoratic Party, advanced directly into the general election on the newly created Chicago First Party ticket.

Soviet leader accuses West of fueling international tension

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev Wednesday accused the West of fueling international tension to divert the Soviet Union's resources from domestic reform.

Gorbachev told the Congress of Soviet Trade Unions that U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations are making no progress because of American intransigence, but that the Soviet Union was keeping the door open for any "honest steps" to reduce weapons.

Gorbachev also told the delegates the most difficult stage in the Kremlin's drive for economic and social reforms lies ahead.

"A year on the whole is a very brief period but the past year saw very much from the viewpoint of social meaningfulness," the Soviet leader said. "And at the same time we now realize: Only the very first steps have been taken.

"The main thing, and hence the most difficult, still lies ahead," Gorbachev declared. "Up to now we have been mostly preparing for reorganization: We were working out its strategy, mapping out the main ways, identifying everything that was a hindrance and called for adjustment, and determining positions of departure."

"It is now time to get the reorganization actually moving," he said. "The year 1987 will be determinant in many respects, for the fate of the reorganization is effectually being decided now and the foundation for (economic) acceleration is being laid."

He said the United States and its allies began an economic and political offensive against the Soviet Union in the late 1970s, a time when many internal problems began to crop up.

"Today...imperialism is shifting the emphasis to prevent us from enacting the plans for reform, to hamper, slow down and frustrate them through the arms race," Gorbachev said.

"To this end they exert every effort to keep up international tension and preserve conditions in the world in which to continue to describe the U.S.S.R. as a source of all evils and misfortunes," he said.

Since becoming Communist Party general secretary in March 1985, Gorbachev has tried to streamline the Soviet economy. He told party officials late last month that the Soviet Union needs stability in international relations to concentrate on domestic reform.

Gorbachev promised to do everything necessary to guarantee Soviet security, but said he would not spend any more than he must.

"We shall not make a single step in excess of the demands and requirements of sensible, sufficient defense," he said. "We are keeping and will continue to keep all doors open for any honest steps to limit and reduce arms, to secure dependable verification over this process and to strengthen international security."

Testing of area wells continues; officials anticipate cleanup

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

Water contamination in wells adjacent to the Riley County Landfill is becoming a question of who should take responsibility for cleanup or alternative water sources.

Installation of a public water supply may take care of the immediate concerns, but cleanup of the landfill area could take a long time, said Charles H. Linn, chief of the solid waste center at the KDHE bureau of waste management.

"This problem has been a long time in the making, and it's going to be a long time in the cleaning up," Linn said.

Though disagreement exists between Riley County and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment as to who should be in charge of the water testing at Moehlman Bottoms, the contamination could be the responsibility of the City of Manhattan.

Records in the County Clerk's office indicate the city began the landfill in 1961, owning and operating it until July 1976.

Riley County owns a 5.7-acre lot used as a levee on the east side of the landfill and a 2.5-acre area containing a dike north of the landfill.

Because of legislation passed in 1976, the City of Manhattan gave up operation of the landfill to Riley County.

In 1970, the Kansas Legislature approved the Solid Waste Management Act requiring every landfill in the state to be approved by KDHE, said County Engineer Dan Harden. The act also mandated that some public body be licensed to operate each landfill.

The City of Manhattan chose not to continue doing so, Harden said, and turned operation of the service over to Riley County.

"They wanted to get rid of it," Harden said. "We were then mandated by law to take over that operation."

The county took over the landfill July 1, 1976, Harden said. For two years, the county had a written lease with the city for the area, but after that the lease was abandoned.

Most landfills in Kansas are operated by the counties, he said. Two exceptions are Johnson and Shawnee counties, which have landfills run by private operators.

Because the city holds the deed to the landfill area, it could be held partially responsible for the water contamination in nearby wells, Harden said.

As of yet, no lawsuits have been filed in the matter, he said.

Harden said he had not yet discussed the matter with city officials, but was sure they were aware of the implications.

"When we ask the city for water (for the contaminated area), I'm sure that's going to be pointed out," he said.

Currently, only two wells by the landfill have tested positive for carcinogens, but further samples were collected Thursday from the wells of 14 property owners in the neighborhood.

The county hired J.C. Butler Associates of Salina to conduct the tests, Harden said. Each well test costs about $500.

Residents whose wells were tested will be notified by the county of the Scientist discovers new worm species

By SHELLY SHAFFER
Collegian Reporter

Earthworm research is alive and squirming at K-State. Two new earthworm species were discovered and named by a biology research associate.

"Newness means nobody has noticed them before — the worms are not new," said Sam James, the worms' discoverer. "Because not much attention has been paid to earthworms in this part of the world, they had escaped detection until I found them."

James was taking soil samples and studying the effects burning native grasslands have on earthworms, he said. While conducting the study on the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area in 1981, he found two earthworms he could not identify.

The Diplocardia hulberti and the Diplocardia rugosa are the two new earthworm species found by James.

The Diplocardia hulberti is the larger of the two new species, James said. As an adult, it is 2 inches long and has a yellow ring around its middle. The earthworm is named after the late Lloyd Hulbert, professor and founder of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area.

The Diplocardia rugosa has a pinkish tint and is the smallest earthworm in this area, James said. It is named for the two ridges on its underside. Rugosa means "ridges" or "lumpy."

The earthworms can be found "primarily in native green pastures and any other grassy area, provided it's not one which has been heavily disturbed or compacted," he said.

For the new species to be officially recognized, James said he must disect and do a complete anatomy of the worms, publish a description of them in a scientific journal, and send one of each species to a museum of zoology.

James said he has completed the disection, and sent a sample of each species to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. The paper has been sent to a scientific journal.

The journal will decide when the paper is published or not after an expert examines the paper to decide its validity, he said.

James, who specializes in earthworm ecology, said he recently received some funding from the Kansas Non-Game Wildlife Advisory Council and the Kansas Fish and Game Commission to study earthworms.

Funds for KU win approval

By SUSAN D. BAIRD

The Kansas House Appropriations committee approved a recommendation on Thursday giving the University of Kansas an additional $600,000 for fiscal year 1988.

Gov. Mike Hayden requested KU

"Under the current enrollment process, there is a two-year lag between the enrollment increase and when the state provides additional support," he said.

Schools would not receive extra money for the additional students during the intervening year — fiscal year 1988, Tallman said.

But because enrollment at KU was substantially higher than projected, Hayden requested KU be given the $600,000 for the intervening year, Tallman said.

In other business, the appropriations committee voted Wednesday to accept a recommendation from the sub-committee adding $35,000 to the Regents budget for fiscal year 1988. The funds will be used for a college guide and a public information brochure. Tallman said the guide would describe Kansas colleges and the programs and services offered at each.

The public information brochure, directed at freshman and sophomore high school students, would tell them what high school courses they should take before entering college, he said.

In addition, the House Education Committee approved a bill establishing the Kansas Post-Secondary Education Information Fund. This legislation requires the Regents to publish the college guide and brochure.

journalism and mass communications and adviser to KSDB, said one advantage of the line item will be the flexibility of having a budget with which to work.

KSDB-FM has tried to raise funds in many ways, and a line item is the only way the station can be properly funded, said Shelly Wakeman, junior in pre-law and co-sponsor of the bill earlier Thursday.

The new line item will generate approximately $25,000 for the station in one year, starting with the 1987 fall semester, said Mike Riley, senior in political science and co-sponsor of the bill.

"The money generated will strengthen the station's current operational needs and help purchase needed equipment," he said before the meeting.

Area officia

Cooperative efforts for regional economic development took a step forward as officials gathered Thursday in an effort to increase communication between three area communities.

Manhattan and Junction City mayors, city commissioners, city managers and city staff members, along with representatives from Fort Riley, discussed issues including air-

:onomy

"We may call upon (Manhattan) to discuss with the Legislature some changes in funding so we can build this fish hatchery/education center," he said.

Both mayors discussed the possibility of a resort at Milford Lake that could attract tourists from Wichita, Kansas City, Topeka and Lincoln, Neb. Scott said a local man has offered to promote the resort project by establishing an international restaurant and bringing in a European chef.

"Under the current enrollment process, there is a two-year lag between the enrollment increase and when the state provides additional support," he said.

Schools would not receive extra money for the additional students during the intervening year — fiscal year 1988, Tallman said.

But because enrollment at KU was substantially higher than projected, Hayden requested KU be given the $600,000 for the intervening year, Tallman said.

In other business, the appropriations committee voted Wednesday to accept a recommendation from the sub-committee adding $35,000 to the Regents budget for fiscal year 1988. The funds will be used for a college guide and a public information brochure. Tallman said the guide would describe Kansas colleges and the programs and services offered at each.

The public information brochure, directed at freshman and sophomore high school students, would tell them what high school courses they should take before entering college, he said.

In addition, the House Education Committee approved a bill establishing the Kansas Post-Secondary Education Information Fund. This legislation requires the Regents to publish the college guide and brochure.

KSDB-FM has tried to raise funds in many ways, and a line item is the only way the station can be properly funded, said Shelly Wakeman, junior in pre-law and co-sponsor of the bill earlier Thursday.

The new line item will generate approximately $25,000 for the station in one year, starting with the 1987 fall semester, said Mike Riley, senior in political science and co-sponsor of the bill.

"The money generated will strengthen the station's current operational needs and help purchase needed equipment," he said before the meeting.

Testing of area wells continues; officials anticipate cleanup

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

Water contamination in wells adjacent to the Riley County Landfill is becoming a question of who should take responsibility for cleanup or alternative water sources.

Installation of a public water supply may take care of the immediate concerns, but cleanup of the landfill area could take a long time, said Charles H. Linn, chief of the solid waste center at the KDHE bureau of waste management.

"This problem has been a long time in the making, and it's going to be a long time in the cleaning up," Linn said.

Though disagreement exists between Riley County and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment as to who should be in charge of the water testing at Moehlman Bottoms, the contamination could be the responsibility of the City of Manhattan.

Records in the County Clerk's office indicate the city began the landfill in 1961, owning and operating it until July 1976.

Riley County owns a 5.7-acre lot used as a levee on the east side of the landfill and a 2.5-acre area containing a dike north of the landfill.

Because of legislation passed in 1976, the City of Manhattan gave up operation of the landfill to Riley County.

In 1970, the Kansas Legislature approved the Solid Waste Management Act requiring every landfill in the state to be approved by KDHE, said County Engineer Dan Harden. The act also mandated that some public body be licensed to operate each landfill.

The City of Manhattan chose not to continue doing so, Harden said, and turned operation of the service over to Riley County.

"They wanted to get rid of it," Harden said. "We were then mandated by law to take over that operation."

The county took over the landfill July 1, 1976, Harden said. For two years, the county had a written lease with the city for the area, but after that the lease was abandoned.

Most landfills in Kansas are operated by the counties, he said. Two exceptions are Johnson and Shawnee counties, which have landfills run by private operators.

Because the city holds the deed to the landfill area, it could be held partially responsible for the water contamination in nearby wells, Harden said.

As of yet, no lawsuits have been filed in the matter, he said.

Harden said he had not yet discussed the matter with city officials, but was sure they were aware of the implications.

"When we ask the city for water (for the contaminated area), I'm sure that's going to be pointed out," he said.

Currently, only two wells by the landfill have tested positive for carcinogens, but further samples were collected Thursday from the wells of 14 property owners in the neighborhood.

The county hired J.C. Butler Associates of Salina to conduct the tests, Harden said. Each well test costs about $500.

Residents whose wells were tested will be notified by the county of the

Funds for KU win approval

By SUSAN D. BAIRD

The Kansas House Appropriations committee approved a recommendation on Thursday giving the University of Kansas an additional $600,000 for fiscal year 1988.

Gov. Mike Hayden requested KU receive the funds because the university's enrollment is higher than projected this year, said Mark Tallman, legislative director for Associated Students of Kansas.

Enrollment at K-State and Pittsburg State University was also higher than projected for this year. He said K-State, KU and PSU received a 50 percent release of fees for fiscal year 1987. These fees were drawn from the tuition gained by the increased number of students over the projected enrollment.

But K-State and PSU did not receive a similar fee release for fiscal year 1988 partly because Hayden did not request it, Tallman said.

"The original committee decision was not to provide any fee release for fiscal year 1988," he said. "Thursday the committee reversed itself and voted to give KU the additional funds."

Through the Board of Regents schools' funding process, a university having an enrollment increase for the 1987 session would not receive the corresponding budget increase until fiscal year 1989, Tallman said.

"Under the current enrollment process, there is a two-year lag between the enrollment increase and when the state provides additional support," he said.

Schools would not receive extra money for the additional students during the intervening year — fiscal year 1988, Tallman said.

Kent Bradley, junior in nutritional science and student body president, was sworn into office along with Benoit.

In other business, Senate was scheduled to hear a proposed bill creating a separate student fee for KSDB-FM. The line item fee would be 85 cents for full-time students and 50 cents for part-time students.

Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and adviser to KSDB, said one advantage of the line item will be the flexibility of having a budget with which to work.

KSDB-FM has tried to raise funds in many ways, and a line item is the only way the station can be properly funded, said Shelly Wakeman, junior in pre-law and co-sponsor of the bill earlier Thursday.

Area officials seek to improve communications, economy

By KELLY LAMBORN
Collegian Reporter

Cooperative efforts for regional economic development took a step forward as officials gathered Thursday in an effort to increase communication between three area communities.

Manhattan and Junction City mayors, city commissioners, city managers and city staff members, along with representatives from Fort Riley, discussed issues including airports, tourism, resorts, an industrial park and formation of a nine-member task force.

Manhattan Mayor Rick Mann and Junction City Mayor Alex Scott spoke to 43 people and fielded questions and comments during a luncheon at the Fort Riley Officer's Club.

"Our purpose today is to formally encourage open communication that will, in fact, lead to mutual benefits for our communities and the region, and begin to seek what I call common agenda items that we can combine our time, talent and effort (on) to enhance the overall area," Mann said.

The formation of a nine-member task force of three representatives from each community was suggested during open discussion. The task force would identify a single goal on which the communities could focus and look for ways to accomplish the goal.

The subject of a regional airport opened the discussion. Mann said air service provides a critical entrance into the region and must continue to be improved.

"For some time we've had a $112,000 request for (Federal Aviation Administration) airport improvement funds for our airport in Junction City," Scott said. "This is something we think we can probably give up and transfer this type of thing in grant funds to improving the common (Manhattan) airport."

He said the funds could go to upgrade the terminal and attract larger and faster aircraft.

Scott also discussed a Milford Lake fish hatchery/visitor education center.

The project has local support and has met an initial goal of about $150,000 in commitments toward the $625,000 total estimated cost. However the Kansas Fish and Game Commission hasn't been able to raise the additional funds, he said.

Scott said he sees the center as a "flagship-type thing that could attract tourists to Kansas."

"We may call upon (Manhattan) to discuss with the Legislature some changes in funding so we can build this fish hatchery/education center," he said.

Both mayors discussed the possibility of a resort at Milford Lake that could attract tourists from Wichita, Kansas City, Topeka and Lincoln, Neb. Scott said a local man has offered to promote the resort project by establishing an international restaurant and bringing in a European chef.

Top U.S. negotiator updates allies

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The chief U.S. arms negotiator gave the NATO allies an upbeat assessment Thursday of prospects for a superpower agreement to scrap medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, sources said.

Max M. Kampelman and the two other delegates to the U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva, Maynard W. Gliman and Ron Lehman, briefed the 16 NATO ambassadors at a closed-door, two-hour meeting before flying to consultations in Washington.

The Geneva negotiations got new life last weekend when Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced willingness to sign a treaty on medium-range missiles separately from a package accord covering long-range missiles and "Star Wars," the U.S. plan for a space-based defense system.

The United States agreed in principle and submitted a proposed treaty to Soviet negotiators on Wednesday that would eliminate U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 and Soviet SS-20 nuclear forces from Europe.

Meese names Walsh to lead office

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Edwin Meese said Thursday he is appointing Lawrence Walsh to head a new office of independent counsel as "an insurance policy" against legal challenges by Lt. Col. Oliver L. North that threatened to torpedo Walsh's investigation into the Iran-Contra affair.

In doing so, Meese linked the independent counsel more closely to the executive branch of government, a result which Congress sought to avoid in enacting the 1978 Ethics in Government Act under which Walsh was appointed.

Walsh, however, endorsed the new arrangement.

In a statement, Meese said that a lawsuit filed by North, raising constitutional questions about the 1978 law, "places a question mark over...Walsh's activities...By creating a parallel position securing to Judge Walsh the powers, authority and independence that the Ethics in Government Act provides, we remove that question mark."

The Justice Department, meanwhile, filed a motion to dismiss North's lawsuit on narrow procedural grounds. But the department refused to join Walsh in asserting that the independent counsel statute is constitutional.

Without referring to the constitutionality of the law, the department simply said North had no legal basis for challenging the legitimacy of Walsh's investigation. Department officials have long had doubts about the constitutionality of the law, which resulted in Walsh's appointment in December by a panel of three federal judges.

Federal judge bans 'godless' books

MOBILE, Ala. — School workers began pulling books from shelves Thursday to comply with a federal judge's order banning 45 texts from Alabama classrooms on grounds they promote a godless humanist religion.

Gov. Guy Hunt gave no indication whether he wants to appeal Wednesday's ruling by U.S. District Judge W. Brevard Hand.

However, critics all but guaranteed they will seek to throw out the order, which they called a frightening form of judicial censorship aimed at giving religious fundamentalists a foot inside the schoolhouse door.

Hand, ruling that secular humanism is a religion, said Wednesday the use of the textbooks in public schools violates the Constitution's prohibition against the establishment of a religion by the state.

Committee endorses smoking ban

TOPEKA — Smoking would be banned in most indoor public places across Kansas, except in designated areas, under terms of a bill that was endorsed Thursday by a House committee.

The proposal advanced to the House floor for debate after the House Public Health and Welfare Committee approved it on an unrecorded voice vote. The bill would impose a $20 fine for anyone found guilty of smoking in a posted non-smoking area.

Rep. Frank Buehler, R-Claflin, the vice chairman of the committee, said he believes the bill would not infringe on smokers' rights but would change state's policy on smoking "180 degrees."

Instead of the current practice of allowing smoking in public places except where prohibited, the measure in effect would ban all smoking in public except in places where it is specifically allowed, he said.

"Society is to the point where it recognizes that smoke-filled air isn't good for you," said Buehler, who predicted the chances are better than ever before that the Legislature will approve statewide smoking regulations.

Last year, a bill that would have forced restaurants to set aside at least some seats for non-smokers was rejected on the House floor by a vote of 69-53.

In addition to restaurants, this year's proposal would apply to retail stores, public transportation, passenger elevators, health care institutions, educational facilities, restrooms, all governmental buildings, museums, auditoriums and arenas.

House questions farm aid bills

TOPEKA — Two bills designed to help family farmers save their homes were touted Wednesday as solutions to the state's troubled rural economy, but lawmakers questioned the need for one and the constitutionality of the other.

One measure would allow farmers to go to court to get their creditors to negotiate a settlement when they face foreclosures on their mortgages. The primary sponsor of the bill told the House Agriculture and Small Business Committee it might keep some farmers from filing for bankruptcy. However, one official said the bill duplicates an existing state program.

The second bill would force creditors who are selling land they have acquired through foreclosure to give the farmers who previously owned the land the chance to buy back the 160 acres on which their home was located — the so-called "home quarter."

Although farmers and farm groups praised the bill, the chairman of the committee said he didn't think it was constitutional.

The chairman, Rep. Clifford Campbell, R-Beloit, said the committee would discuss and possibly act on the proposals Friday.

Campbell said the home quarter bill probably is unconstitutional because, like another law the Kansas Supreme Court recently struck down, the state would be interfering with legal contracts.

Senate approves lottery bill 34-5

TOPEKA — The Senate passed, 34-5, and returned to the House Thursday a bill which would launch gambling in Kansas on a lottery, add at least 120 jobs to the bureaucracy and generate a large chunk of income to support state government.

The bill would create a new agency called the Kansas Lottery which would have a $16 million annual operating budget and be responsible for running the state gambling business.

The first lottery game — centered around $1 instant-win tickets — is expected to be ready in September. The tickets will be sold at some 2,000 retail outlets and each has a latex patch which must be scratched off to reveal whether the ticket is a winner and for how big a prize.

Management leader resigns; new head plans to specialize

By The Collegian Staff

Yar Ebadi, associate professor of management, was named head of the Department of Management Monday, said Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Pohlman said Ebadi replaced William Liddell, professor of management, who resigned for personal reasons. Liddell will retain his teaching position, he said.

Liddell could not be reached for comment Thursday.

Ebadi was chosen by faculty members because of his reputation academically and in the department, Pohlman said.

"He has clearly been a strong leader," he said.

Two cardinal changes Ebadi plans to implement are "rigorous" faculty recruitment and curriculum development.

Ebadi said he will personally work to attain top quality faculty members. In addition, he said he would like to improve the curriculum by making it more specialized.

"Presently what we have is one major area of management," Ebadi said. "What I'm thinking about is to maybe give the students options of areas of emphasis within the management department."

The management option would be broken into four tracts — production and operations management, management information systems, human resources management and general management. Many universities throughout the nation currently give such choices, he said.

Part of the plan has been approved by management faculty. If it gains college approval, the curriculum change proposal will be sent to Faculty Senate for review, Ebadi said.

IT'S A CRACK UP!

Number of older University students rising

Fenix aims to inspire, re-educate

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

Consider the following:

You're the only person sitting in the front row of a class.

You can remember when John F. Kennedy was president.

You talk about painting the living room during spring break, while everyone else is talking about going skiing or lying on the beach at Padre Island.

Relax — you're not alone. You join a group of more than 24 million nontraditional students returning to colleges nationwide.

More than 2,700 undergraduates at K-State are nontraditional students — adults over age 25 — according to a chart compiled by the Fenix office in Holton Hall. The number has increased from about 1,300 nontraditional students in 1978.

Fenix is a program designed to help adult students beginning or returning to the university experience, said Ruth Hoeflin, Fenix director. The staff advises students on enrolling, finding their way around campus and learning how to study again.

The program was named after the fenix, a bird which, according to Egyptian legend, had the power to renew its own life. Since then, the fenix has become a symbol of inspiration for those who have the courage and vision to see the possibilities in life, rather than the limitations, Hoeflin said.

"The biggest difference in this group is that they have a much higher motivation," she said. "Most of them know what they want."

Studies have shown that on the average, older students compile a higher grade point average than their younger peers. In fall 1986, 60 percent of undergraduates age 26 and over earned a 3.0 or higher GPA, compared to only 35 percent of students age 18-22, according to a Fenix pamphlet.

The undergraduate population has shown a steady decline over the past three years, while the enrollment of nontraditional students has steadily increased, Hoeflin said. (see graph)

In 1984, nontraditional students made up 12 percent of the total undergraduate population. In 1986, the number had increased to 21 percent.

Hoeflin, former dean of the College of Human Ecology (then known as the College of Home Economics), said she came to work at the Fenix program in 1983 because she wasn't ready to retire at 65.

Now 69, Hoeflin runs the Fenix office part of the time and works on writing the history of home economics at K-State the remainder of the time.

While older students seem to be managing quite well in college, Hoeflin said, many do not start out that way. She said she tries to joke with students "to break the ice" when they first come to her office.

"These people come in and they're scared," she said. "Their first tests, they're absolutely petrified."

Many older students are also skeptical about taking the American Collegiate Testing program.

"They've never taken a test on computer cards, so this scares them to death," she said.

The Fenix office is currently working to change the requirements so students over 25 would not be forced to take the test before enrollment, she said.

Like all college students, Hoeflin said the nontraditional students are "very busy people." Two-thirds of the older students are married, most work from 20-40 hours a week, and three-fourths are full-time students.

The oldest student on campus is over 80, she said.

"He has a great time — partly because the young girls like him," she said.

'The biggest difference in this group is that they have a much higher motivation.'

—Ruth Hoeflin

The office sends newsletters to prospective students, but because the budget is only $800 a year, Hoeflin said she must run a tight operation.

While the Fenix program is designed to counsel nontraditional students, another program exists as a support group for such students.

The Association of Adults Returning to School is a campus organization established to provide a means of association among nontraditional students.

The group meets for lunch between 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Wednesdays in Union Stateroom 3 to hear speakers address campus concerns and personal enrichment, and to share with each other their successes and failures. Past speech topics have included advising and advisers, financial aid, family counseling, stress management and improving study skills.

Most members of AARTS are 25 years old and older or have been out of school more than five years, Hoeflin said.

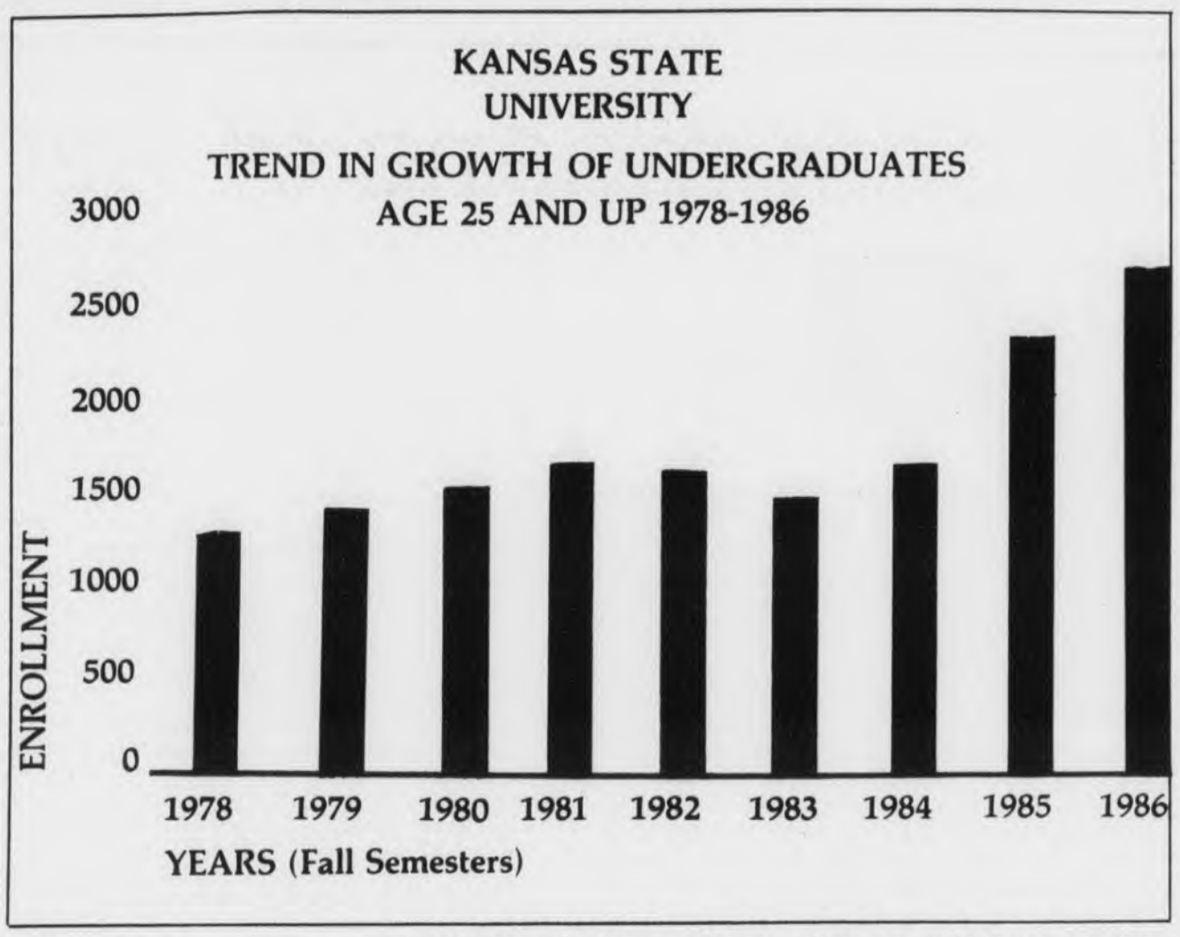
Such diversity makes Hoeflin's job more enjoyable.



"I've had mothers and daughters come in who take the same courses and then share textbooks," she said.

One day a woman dressed in a pair of shorts and a plaid jacket came in to enroll her daughter, Hoeflin said. The two women talked for a few minutes, then Hoeflin said she complimented the woman on her outfit.

"I borrowed it from my daughter," was the woman's reply.

And Hoeflin chuckled as she reiterated that familiar but provable saying.

"You are never too old to learn."

Returning students face new obstacles

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

Whether they're 28 or 68, one of the most difficult problems returning students face is adjusting to college life.

"It's hard work," said Janet Gaither, 44, sophomore in elementary education. "My first semester back was a disaster — I didn't see my family at all."

Gaither, who has four children ages 8-18, lives in White City, 45 miles southwest of Manhattan. She gets up at 5 a.m. four days a week and usually goes to bed about midnight.

Keeping up with homework from a 19-hour schedule is one of her greatest difficulties, she said.

"Housework and homework don't go well together," she said. "And it's frustrating to hear teenagers come to class and talk about their parties and problems."

Gaither said her husband and children have been a great help, although the children find it tough to compete "because Mom's doing so well."

Her current grade point average is 3.76.

"My husband jokes that he's going to retire when I graduate," she said.

Gaither said she notices older students tend to stick together in the classroom and become more involved in class discussion.

"After awhile, you think maybe you'd better shut up and let someone else say something," she said.

Gaither attended K-State for part of a semester in 1967, then came back 19 years later in January 1986. During the interim, she worked as a substitute teacher in Oklahoma.

"I loved it," she said. "I decided I wanted to become a teacher myself, and since all my kids were in school, I decided to go back."

Gaither's advice to students returning to college is allow adequate time for both studying and family and try not to take too many math, accounting or science classes in a single semester.

Every older student should also take a study skills class to help them plan their study time, she said.

"I enjoy getting around people again," she said.

Paul Bourne, 30, freshman in general arts and sciences, enrolled at K-State in August 1986 after being out 13 years.

"I'm much more serious now than I was then," he said. "I know what I want."

Because most of his classes involve older students, Bourne said he has little contact with his younger peers.

"That's probably one of my biggest difficulties. Because I can't interact with them, I don't know how they're going to respond to me," he said.

The younger students he does come into contact with do not treat him any differently than anyone else, he said.

One characteristic Bourne noted about older students is they often sit at the front of their class.

"I tend to be more involved in the class than anyone else," he said. "Sometimes it seems I'm the only one saying anything."

Evelyn Campbell, junior in horticulture, started college 30 years ago and quit after one week.

"It was my first time away from home, and I hated it," she said.

But two years ago Campbell took a University For Man course about women in transition, and she was hooked.

Now, Campbell said, the hardest aspect of college is relating to other people.

During her first semester back, she enrolled in a botany class. Each week, the younger students would check their homework assignments against hers to make sure they had done them correctly, she said.

"I guess they thought I should know more than they did," she said jokingly.

"It's not easy," she said. "But when you want something, you're willing to work for it."

Movies provide best means of escape

JEAN TELLER
Collegian Columnist

The lack of two items in my life cause me to experience withdrawal symptoms — at least two I can talk about.

The first is chocolate. I am a chocoholic and will readily admit to that. In 30 years, chocolate is a habit I cannot and probably never will break. I'll delve into this habit later in the semester.

The other is movies. I know that sounds a little strange. How can a person become addicted to movies, television or other visuals? Good question. But I am addicted to movies.

Not only am I addicted to the big screen, but the little screen as well. Put me in a movie theater or in front of a television and I'm happy for hours. I will watch anything and everything with some degree of pleasure.

Strange but true.

The pictures on the screen are one of my methods of escape. The hours I spend in a theater or in front of the TV are ones in which the real world is pushed aside, hours I don't have to worry about reality and the problems encountered in the real world.

I am a very visual person — probably why I initially went into the business of television. My whole world revolves around what I see and what I experience through sight. Books, movies, television, plays, people-watching — all are aspects of my personality directly involved with my sense of sight. My other senses will take the back seat to my sight in terms of what I experience, what I feel and how I think.

I keep attuned with the world through the use of newspapers, radio and other people. My news comes through those channels, plus television. TV fills two slots for me, information and entertainment — which is exactly how the medium is supposed to be utilized.

Movies, on the other hand, are not necessarily vehicles of information but are definitely methods of entertainment. Movies can, however, be channels of communication when it comes to people, society and behavior. They may not be concerned with news per se, but they are concerned with people.

There are movies which have a message, others which simply are supposed to entertain and yet others which have neither element. I can appreciate the first, I love the second, and I refuse to attend the third.

I am subject to very particular moods when it comes to my movie viewing. My primary objective when choosing a movie is to escape the real world. My secondary objective is to be entertained. My third objective is to learn more about people or myself. I'm usually in need of something to cheer me up, pull myself out of a depression or break the boredom. So I attend a movie, my means of escape.

A book will do as well and in some cases will work even better than a movie. My imagination is allowed to roam freely with books while the visualization in movies does not allow such freedom. But the time constraints and other distractions of my world usually push me toward the movie theater rather than a book. Besides, there are a lot of movies being produced I want to see, need to see and will eventually see.

The past few weeks are an example of my movie-going habits. In total, I have seen seven movies since Feb. 21. It is not unusual for me to attend three to four movies in two days. It is also usual behavior for me to attend two on Saturday, two on the following Tuesday with a possible fifth viewed on the Sunday in between. My problem last Tuesday was whether to attend three movies or to view only two and then watch TV. Quite a problem, don't you think?

I am simply a movie addict. I enjoy choosing what movie I will see, when I will see it and how I will fit more than one into a particular day. I have been known to plan an entire week around movie-going. I enjoy the anticipation, telling the person selling the tickets which movie I am attending, walking through the lobby, buying popcorn, then walking into the darkened theater and waiting for the curtain to rise.

I don't, on the other hand, enjoy actually paying for the movie. As you may have noticed, I attend only the bargain showings. I refuse to pay full price anymore unless I absolutely have to. My income and the number of movies I attend demand the lower prices. Besides, there's prime time network television and the VCR waiting to fill the evening hours.

I also attend movies by myself the majority of the time. People look at me askance when I tell them that fact and also when I walk into the theater on my own. I don't know why people have such a hard time understanding that I enjoy going to movies alone — in fact, I usually want it that way.

A movie theater is one of the places I feel comfortable and at home. It is one of the few places society won't yell if I am by myself — people may stare, but no one bothers me. It is also one of the places reality doesn't enter. Undoubtedly why I like it.

There have been times when weeks have passed without one trip to the theater, usually after a weekend when I have attended at least three movies. There seems to be a pattern to movies appearing in the local theaters. All of the good ones appear at the same time and force me to attend (or at least try to attend) all of them within a week. Then, the next several weeks are bereft of movies completely.

Those are the weeks the withdrawal symptoms appear. I withdraw, become more irritable, irrational and incoherent than usual.

Then the new crop of movies appear in the advertisements and on the marquees. And I'm happy again that my means of escape has returned.

Right now is best time to begin disarmament

After years of debating, the United States and the Soviet Union are finally getting down to the task of eliminating intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe. If this comes about, many people in Europe, as well as the rest of the world, will be very happy and very relieved.

This is the first real breakthrough in arms control since the SALT II treaty, if you can call an unratified treaty a breakthrough. The presence of these missiles threatens to make Europe a nuclear battlefield, something the Europeans don't want any part of.

While any exchange of nuclear weapons would most likely affect the entire world, these missiles in Europe pose special problems. The first problem is the destabilizing effect of the missiles themselves. These weapons can reach their targets in a very short time. This reduces the amount of response time, which might lead to a major escalation that could end life as we know it.

It has also been speculated by many military experts that a limited nuclear war can be a possibility, and it will most likely happen in Europe. This is likely to be the site of a major conflict someday because of the border tensions between East and West. The European people could become the victims of a superpower struggle, a war in which they may play no part in starting. Europeans are held hostage by these missiles, with their fate in the hands of the superpowers.

While this step is a positive one, it is only a beginning. The superpowers have a long road ahead of them in making the world safe from nuclear destruction. The goal is clear. The time to start pursuing that goal is now.

Speech marks genesis of Iranscam reproach

And while President Reagan's address to the nation may have been an appeal for forgiveness and a bid for understanding, he still did not explain exactly what happened.

Maybe the American public will never know the full story — maybe the government officials don't know the full story themselves — but there are several investigative committees still attempting to get to the real story.

Cut to the American public: We have been hearing about Iranscam for so long now, or at least it seems a long time, it's difficult to remain interested when yet another version appears in the morning paper for the umpteenth time.

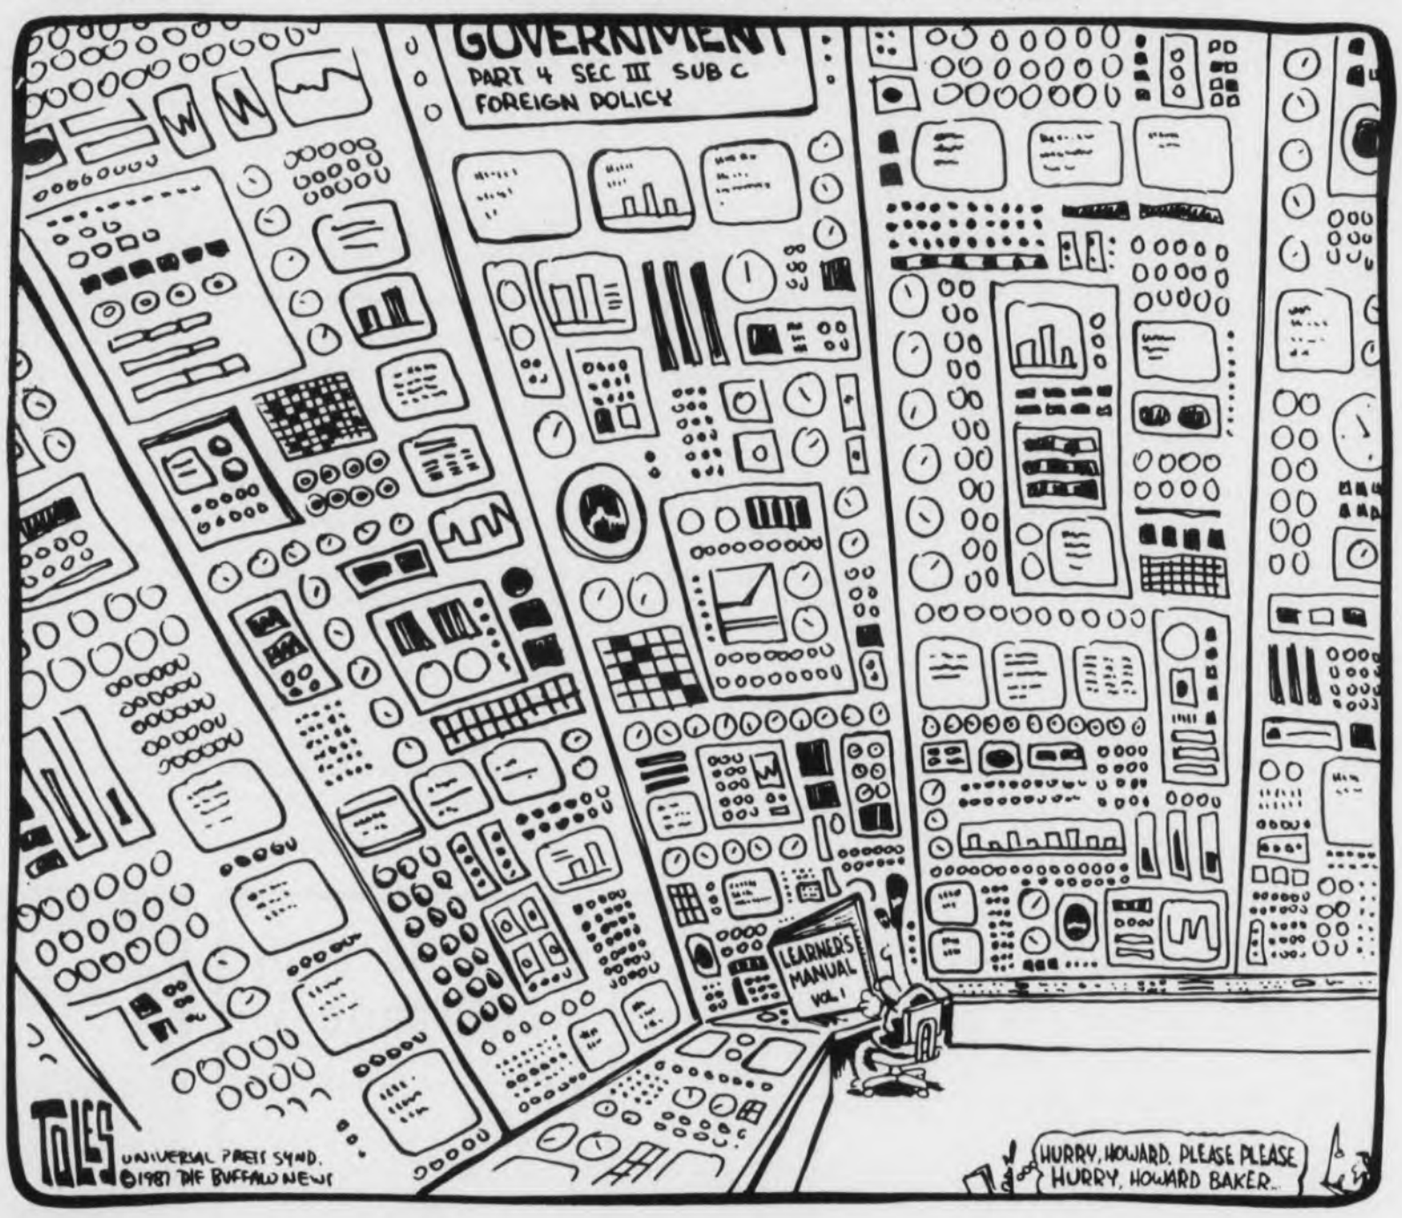
It is no wonder Americans are disgruntled with their representatives and tired of hearing about their not-so-circumspect deals.

As one media personna put it, "Americans have comeback fatigue."

Pan to Washington: Reagan has two years left in office and he has vowed he will not be a lameduck president.

Perhaps this shake-up in administration will yield some healthy results if the American public overcomes its apathy and somehow manages to find a leader capable of both leadership and honesty.

While senators and representatives argue over whether Reagan should have blatantly apologized to the people or not, Americans should be thinking ahead to the 1988 elections — preparing to at least notice issues and candidates.



If we continue to refuse to become involved in the electoral process, events like Iranscam may become the norm.

The fallen U.S. wall

SDI would give essential shield

"Then I said unto them, 'Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth in waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: Come and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach.'" (Nehemiah 2:17)

TIM INMAN
Guest Columnist

In our day, the wall around around America is down. We need to look at the defenses of our country and see that the threat of nuclear annihilation by another country is imminent. Many live in despair and constant worry that the final war could come any time. They have no hope of a future. People are scared that theirs is the decade that man will destroy himself.

The United States currently has no defense against nuclear missiles. That means if 200 missiles were fired, 200 would hit their targets. Many of us don't realize that when we agreed to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty with the Soviet Union our national defense became based on a policy of Mutually Assured Destruction, MAD. Our countries hold each other hostage by knowing that if we launch an attack, they in turn will blow us off the map along with them, and vice versa. MAD, isn't it?

However, there is a solution to the problem. In an excerpt from James Kennedy's "Surviving the Nuclear Age," he says, "I believe that if nuclear war is the greatest moral issue facing our world today, the idea that 'vengeance belongeth to us' is on immoral ground and certainly is not consonant with a Christian view of a just war. I believe that the 'space shield' (Strategic Defense Initiative) takes the high moral ground."

If SDI is the moral thing to do, then why all the brouhaha about it? Why would the Soviet Union launch its biggest propaganda attack ever? If, as they say, it will never work, then why not let us waste our money?

"The aim of the Soviet anti-SDI campaign is strategic and political," claims Kenneth Adelman, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. "Its purpose is to stimulate opposition to SDI in the United States, inhibiting Western research and development into defenses even as the Soviet Union forges ahead with its own ABM programs, including research and development in advanced ballistic missile defense technologies."

Unfortunately, some of our best minds have fallen hook, line and sinker for this propaganda. Let's look at the truth.

Project Defender, ordered by President Eisenhower in the late 1950s, first deemed possible a space-based, non-nuclear defense against incoming ICBMs. The report also stated that it could be deployed by the 1970s.

NASA Administrator James Fletcher, head of a recent commission, was required to ignore any defense system that wasn't 99.9 percent perfect. He found that a space-based defense that fit these qualifications is feasible.

In 1984, SDI was tested by launching a minuteman missile with a mock nuclear warhead. A Lockheed-developed interceptor called a "smart bullet" was intentionally aimed 20 miles off course but still scored a direct hit and neutralized the missile hundreds of miles above earth. Not bad shooting!

Eminent physicist Robert Jastrow, founder and administrator of NASA's Goddard Space Institute, estimates that an effective two-layered defense which could be deployed soon would cost a total of $50 billion over a several-year period. The United States currently spends roughly that same amount each year to modernize its offensive forces. Jastrow said, "Between now and 1990, we will probably spend $500 billion on (modernizing our offensive nuclear) forces."

With a fairly good defense, Sen. Fritz Hollings, D-S.C., said, "A lot of expensive Department of Defense systems in the works won't be needed."

Wouldn't that be great? A study by R.H. Kupperman of Georgetown University found that the cost of offense over defense is as high as three to one. Defense is a bargain! And, not only that, it's more moral to spend that money to preserve life rather than destroy it.

SDI can solve our nuclear problems, but really, who can solve the problems of the world? The Bible teaches that Jesus Christ is the "Prince of Peace." He alone can bring lasting peace. The Bible also says God will have to intervene in the affairs of men or "NO FLESH would be saved." Do you want the peace that only Christ can give to a world that is heading for self-destruction?

Nehemiah (the wall builder) prayed, fasted and wept when he saw the walls were still down in Jerusalem. Let's pray that the wall around America will be built up — that we can eliminate the threat of nuclear war from the earth. Pray, weep and fast for a spiritual renewal in America. For God promises that when a nation humbles itself and seeks Him that He will show Himself mighty for that nation and will stay His hand of judgment. Let's go forward with SDI and reply to our enemies as Nehemiah did to his while building the wall: "This is good work we are doing."

Victorian footholds

Editor,

I am writing in reference to the recent controversy over the advertisement of condoms in the face of the growing threat of AIDS. I must make my position clear in that AIDS is most definitely a serious disease that demands serious action in its prevention. However, there is something else happening amidst the flurry. In the 1980s, a time when we see a woman run on a major ticket for vice president, the footholds into the Victorian age still remain intact.

The controversy over the advertisement of contraception is nothing new. So, you may say, we've been through this before. All that is different is now we have the disease AIDS. And that is exactly the point.

Prior to the recent push for the advertisement of condoms, the reasons touted for such ads were to promote responsible sex. The ads promoted the avoidance of an unwanted pregnancy. Under these conditions, however, there was a bias in the response. Such reasons were acceptable for the advertisement of contraception for women. While it may take two to tango (so to speak), John Q. Public accepted the idea of contraception advertisement as long as it was associated with the concept of women taking responsibility and minimizing the possibility of their becoming pregnant. What the public would not accept was the association of responsible sex with male contraception.

Now with the blitz for education on "what is AIDS and how can I get it?," there has been a re-emergence of the condom advertisement controversy. The major difference, however, is that the advertisement of contraception is no longer associated with responsible sex, but rather safe sex. The concept of responsibility for subsequent pregnancy has been dropped. Instead, the advertisement of contraception for men becomes more acceptable as long as it is associated with life and death and safe sex.

And so we see the gender bias illustrated once again. The exception is, this time it did not appear so obvious. It does not jump out at us like "Hey, there are numerous methods of contraception developed for women and still only one method for men. Ultimately, just whose responsibility are we saying it is?" This time the same point is made but in a more elusive manner. This time its manifestation is less obvious. This time we may in fact hold the same Victorian ideas and not even realize it.

'Mythical links'

Editor,

On Feb. 11, the Iranian Moslem Organization sponsored a lecture titled "The Global Impact of Islam on the West" by Abdul-Alim Mosa, a visitor from Oakland, Calif. I was attracted to that lecture because I was curious about the so-called "mythical links between Israel and Iran," and I wanted to know how the speaker was going to prove those links are mythical while stong evidence in the latest Iranian arms deal has supported the reality of such links.

The speaker barely touched on any of the announced topics and from the start flattered Khomeini's regime without providing evidence of a sole humanitarian deed, unless he considered causing the deaths of hundreds of thousands of innocent people and the pain inflicted on millions in their families in Iran and Iraq because of Khomeini's cursed orders to continue aggressions on Iraq.

During the two hours of Mosa's speech, I was patiently waiting for him to start covering the topics, but I was disappointed to have my time wasted in hearing his lecture. For example:

One, he stated that no one supported Iran in its war with Iraq, but the fact is that Iran has been supported by Israel, the United States, Libya, Syria, Britain, North Korea, China, etc.

Two, he stated that Iran has sent some of its troops to support Palestinians against Israel, but the fact is these troops were there to support Amal Militiamen who put Palestinians under siege for a long time until they began to starve.

Three, he incorrectly stated that Iraq renounced the 1975 Algerian agreement with Iran at the beginning of the war in 1980. Throughout 1979 and most of 1980, Iraq sought diligently to have Iran, by then under Khomeini's rule, honor the record, especially clauses pertaining to the return of specific territories to Iraq and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. The Khomeini regime refused to give up the territories in question and flagrantly sought to foment violence and terrorism inside Iraq. Only when these hostile actions developed into actual Iranian military strikes across the border did Iraq declare the 1975 agreement abrogated by Iran and therefore null and void.

By the end of Mosa's speech, some of the audience tried to discuss with him how biased he was by expressing their view, but they were met with harsh words and threats and were thrown out of the room by Khomeini supporters who also were about to start violence, but a K-State policeman was there and handled the situation wisely.

One thing I must agree with is the speaker's praise for the Iranian regime by describing it as an earthquake. As we know, an earthquake means death, killing and disruption and that is the reality of the Iranian regime.

Editor,

Re: Kirk Caraway's column "Various award winners named" in Monday's Collegian. Another fine column by Caraway, suitable for framing in anyone's commode. Caraway seems to have left out a few awards, though. I would like to add a few:

—To Caraway, the "Golly Wally, I Wish I'd Been Born in the Soviet Union Award" for his constant negative criticism of the government of the United States. He reveals a lot of problems but never provides any answers of his own. We'll neglect that ridiculous idea of free schools for everyone. We should abandon SDI and send him to his buddy Mikhail. But then again I'd hate to see him go — he reminds us of how great this country is to live in, in spite of people like him.

—To Students in Solidarity with Central America, the "Welcome to the Real World Award" for having the guts to hold a public demonstration about something which they really believe in, only to decide that it wasn't really public after all. Any public action is a matter of public record and will be recorded, whether in a spectator's mind or on photographic emulsion. All I can say is, would there have been any fuss if a photographer for a major newspaper or magazine had shown up?

And, last but not least, to the Collegian goes the "Thank God They Print Plenty of These Papers, We Ran Out of Toilet Paper Yesterday Award." This one is self-explanatory.

Refugee response

Editor,

On Feb. 11, we read in the Collegian a letter from Veronica Wilson talking about the Sanctuary of Manna House and the refugees who live in Concordia. We noted that Wilson said the refugees have been used by Sanctuary. As Guatemalan refugees living in Concordia and doing sanctuary, we'd like to answer this letter.

We always thought there was a difference between the North American people and their government. We never could imagine the North American people approving such killings that take place in our country. People who love peace, freedom and justice as you do never could approve such injustices that are happening in El Salvador and Guatemala. After several years of being here, we're so happy because we have found that many North American people do not agree with their government and its policy toward Central America.

We came here because the army was looking for us. In Guatemala, all of those who ask for their rights are killed by the army. We can enumerate for you hundreds of friends who were killed by the army with bullets made in the United States or Israel, villages burned by the army with bombs and helicopters made in the United States. We wish we could say something good about what your government does in our country, but we can't lie.

We wish we could speak out without "provoking the government," but we have to take this risk. Speaking out in my country was a risk; it has cost lives. It is a risk in this country too, but it is less than if we were in Guatemala so we are willing to do it. Not because we want publicity as Wilson implies or because we want someday to be treated like heroes in Guatemala, but because it is a necessity. Being caught is not a matter of speaking out or keeping silent; we can tell you about thousands of Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees who have come to the United States and have not spoken out but have been deported even though they're political refugees.

If someone asks us if we like to speak out and tell our testimonies, we surely would say "No, we don't like it." We don't think there is anyone who would like to talk about killings, children being burned and women being raped by the army. We don't like to be on TV; we don't like to be in the newspapers. We don't think there is anyone who would come out with a "good image" by telling of these kinds of experiences, neither the refugees nor the Sisters of St. Joseph.

Also, we are not being used by Sanctuary as Wilson states, nor will we be. As human beings, we are capable of making our own decisions on whether we want to speak out or not or whatever. It is on the basis of mutual respect and solidarity with the Sisters of St. Joseph that we are in Sanctuary.

It seems to us that the kind of statement Wilson made was patronizing us. If something about refugees being used has to be said, it definitely has to come from the refugees themselves.

Useless slandering

Editor,

Re: Patti Paxson's column "Musical patterns mirror culture, ideals" in Tuesday's Collegian. Before Patti Paxson starts degrading present-day music, we think she should study the groups and their lyrics. We realize the editorial page means you can express your opinions, but senseless hacking on unresearched material deserves no journalistic credit.

Specifically, let's take The Dead Kennedys. Their lyrics deal more with human rights and the senseless use of power in the United States than "She Loves You" or "Light My Fire" ever did. The only reason we have groups like The Dead Kennedys is that society produces them.

We'll be among the first to admit that we love the music of the 1960s. But we also realize that you can't live in the past and that things change. There is a lot of newer music that has meaningful lyrics, but you have to get over your stereotypes of the musical style in order to find them. An excellent example is the "heavy metal" group Rush.

Their music is very complex, more than just banging on their guitars and drums. Their lyricist and drummer, Neil Peart, is extremely intelligent and writes meaningful and socially relevant songs.

Besides that, most of your "great artists" were drug abusers. It sounded as if you were advocating drug use. Paxson was writing about Tom Wolfe's book and the underground press, then said, "These media became buffers and outlets for what otherwise could have been a much more destructive decade." Is use of drugs representative of America's culture? What a frightening thought.

Paxson should express her opinions only after research has been done on the subject. Useless slandering has no merit anywhere, especially in responsible journalism.

Sex without love

Editor,

James R. Peterson, Playboy adviser, recently came to speak to students about sex but left the subject of morals unspoken. Peterson portrayed the act of premarital sex as being as wholesome and natural as apple pie.

Though Peterson's presentation was advertised to cover love and sex, he talked about love for only about five minutes of his one hour and 15 minute presentation. No, one could not deny his knowledge of sex and techniques, but I couldn't help but wonder about his knowledge and experiences about love. The advice he gave and some of his comments didn't include love, only pleasure. Here is a sample of some of his advice and comments:

"Tonight, show your boyfriend where your clitoris is — he'll appreciate it and so will his next partner."

"Foreplay is a relic of the past. Thinking of sex is foreplay." One of his suggestions regarding oral sex was to insert Pop Rocks candy into the woman's vagina.

There are many moral and practical reasons for not engaging in premarital sex.

The Bible clearly tells us we should wait until marriage to engage in sexual activity (Heb. 13:4). God planned sex in marriage for maximum enjoyment. Technique is not the key, it's unconditional love, commitment and communication in a relationship.

God made the rules but it's our choice. Wouldn't you rather learn with your own spouse, together? Premarital sex detracts from a strong relationship and dynamic sex life.

Often, a problem caused by premarital sex is a lack of love. In this case, sex is self-seeking and self-gratifying.

Many times premarital sex exists in the absence of total and permanent commitment. It can lead to doubts and suspicion — "How do I know my partner isn't sleeping with someone else, too?"

Premarital sex is strongly correlated with extramarital sex. Perhaps people who haven't learned to control their sexual impulses before marriage won't be able to do it after a marriage either.

Doubts and mistrust can occur and these can kill sexual relationships. Sex is a great thing but it can be abused. What feels good for a few minutes can make one feel miserable for years.

Childish behavior

Editor,

To the SOB(s) who has/have been tearing down the posters put up by the Students in Solidarity with Central America asking students and faculty to call Sen. Nancy Kassebaum and urge her to vote against aid to the Contras: Either go back to grade school or apply for a job with the Reagan administration.

First of all, the act is damn childish. Responsible adult citizens of this country would recognize and respect the rights of others to express opinions that differ from their own. This act of petty vandalism reminds me of how I may have acted in the second grade if I were jealous of a classmate's crayon drawing the teacher had put up beside my own and had given more praise to.

Secondly, the person or persons responsible (ha! — an ironic word to use) aren't far behind the likes of Oliver North in their sneaky little attempts to subvert SISCA's efforts to communicate to the people on campus what we feel is a crucial message.

Reserve unit assists local police department

Aides receive 1-year training for community-service jobs

By ANNJELA HYNES
Collegian Reporter

Members of the Reserve Police Unit for the Riley County Police Department go beyond the routine call of duty to diligently serve the community, asking for nothing in return.

"They are here to assist us in doing our duties, not to do our duties for us," said Allen Raynor, Riley County Police Department lieutenant.

Reserve members need no particular prior skills or training, just a willingness to be of service to the community, Raynor said.

The reserve unit, as it exists today, has been in Riley County since 1974. Some form of reserve police unit, generally called an auxillary or a posse, has always existed.

The unit comprises about 25 volunteers trained in various areas of law enforcement, Raynor said. The recruits are reputable citizens who devote one hour three nights a week to their one-year training, he said.

"It takes one year before they are truly certified as reserve officers," Raynor said.

However, before their training is over, the police department can put them to work.

Basically, the reserve officers have the same authority as regular police officers, including writing tickets and making arrests.

"They are police officers when they're working," Raynor said.

However, there are differences between police officers and reserve members. The reserve officers are called as needed and do not have specific work hours.

Another major difference is the reserve unit is not employed in typical life-threatening criminal situations. They serve as extra manpower during drug raids and provide help with long-term surveillances.

"Generally they work in pairs with the regular officers," said Bill Burger, captain of the reserve unit for the past four years.

There are certain assignments they handle themselves.

"High school football games are usually strictly reserve," Burger said. "Crowd and traffic control are also common duties."

'Joining the reserve unit helps younger people make a career decision about law enforcement....'
—Capt. Bill Burger

Reserve officers must work a minimum of 16 hours each month to maintain their status. They remain members of the unit until they decide otherwise or their performance is determined unsatisfactory

New recruits are chosen every year and are selected on the basis of the results of a criminal background check, knowledge aptitude test and interview.

Those selected undergo physical fitness, psychological and polygraph tests.

After recruits are selected, they are trained in firearms, use of force, civil liabilities, first aid, traffic directions and criminal law, Burger said.

Burger, a former full-time police officer, said a major reason he enjoys serving on the reserve unit is helping children overcome their fear of police officers and authority figures.

The reserve unit sponsored a project to provide safety tips and gave out Halloween bags filled with goodies to area elementary school children.

Burger said many recruits join to gain insight into law enforcement and some go on to pursue careers as police officers.

"Joining the reserve unit helps younger people make a career decision about law enforcement without the commitment of being a police officer," he said. "But whatever the individual reasons for joining, the reserves have a definite place in the community."

Kevin Baker, of the Reserve Police Unit for the Riley County Police Department, practices the proper procedure for stopping an illegal vehicle, driven for the training drill by active reserve officer Kenneth Gibbons. The reserve comprises about 25 volunteers who assist full-time officers in their duties.

Wildcats, Nebraska initiate tournament play

From Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Big Eight Conference men's basketball coaches met with media representatives Thursday at Kemper Arena and gave the overall impression there is not a dominant team coming into this weekend's tournament.

"So many different teams can win it this year," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "Every team has several good players and talent. There is a lot of balance."

"I think that the Big Eight has established itself as a good conference," Nee said. "It's a conference on the upswing.

Tipoff time for the K-State-Nebraska clash is set for 12:10 p.m. today at Kemper Arena. The game will be televised by the Raycom Network beginning at noon.

The starting line-up for the Wildcats will be the same as it was in last week's victory against Oklahoma: without Norris Coleman.

"Norris can give us intensity and good defense off of the bench," Kruger said. "Who starts the game is important to an extent, but who finishes is what is really critical."

Coleman said the change, which puts Lance Simmons back into the starting five, doesn't bother him; it just makes him work harder.

"I brought it upon myself," Coleman said. "I respect Coach Kruger's decision. It makes me hungry to play even harder, (but) it really doesn't make any difference to me."

The K-State-Nebraska matchup will start off first-round action today, with the tournament's top seed Missouri taking on Colorado at 2:10 p.m.

History suggests the top-seeded Tigers have a 50-50 chance of winning the Big Eight tournament. In the 10 years the conference has been staging a postseason affair, the top seed has won five times.

"My observation has been...the team that wins the regular season title has difficulty winning the postseason tournament, too," said Missouri's Norm Stewart, The Associated Press Big Eight coach of the year.

The No. 19 Tigers, 21-9 overall, already are assured of an at-large NCAA bid and may not have much to gain in postseason play.

By winning, they should enhance their standing with the NCAA Tournament committee, which selects and seeds the 64-team field. But losing the postseason tournament would lend weight to arguments that Missouri lucked into the regular season title and should not, as the experts maintained all season, be held in higher regard than Oklahoma and Kansas.

"All we can do is just try to keep playing well and try to improve our seeding in the NCAA Tournament, and thus improve our chances in the NCAA Tournament," Stewart said. "But I'm also sure the committee will take note of the fact that we're the champions of a league with a lot of good teams in it."

Seventh-seeded Oklahoma State will meet No. 2 Kansas at 6:10 and No. 6 Iowa State and third-seeded Oklahoma will conclude the day's action in an duel beginning at 8:10.

Semifinal action will be Saturday at 1:10 and 3:10 p.m. The title game, declaring the Big Eight's automatic entry to the NCAA Tourney, will be nationally televised at 3:10 p.m. Sunday.

Kansas and Oklahoma also seem sure bets for at-large invitations, no matter what happens in the Big Eight tournament. But if the Big Eight succeeds in getting a fourth entry it will probably be K-State or Nebraska.

"Our chances for the NCAA Tournament probably will hang in the balance with our game," Nee said.

NOTES: Kansas' Danny Manning, the Big Eight's player of the year, needs just 45 points to reach the Kansas school career record of 1,888, set by 1952 All-American Clyde Lovellette...Missouri's Derrick Chievous, also a unanimous first-team selection to the all-Big Eight squad, could shatter school records in career and single-season scoring...Oklahoma's senior Tim McCalister, the league's all-time top scoring guard, needs just 11 points to pass Barry Stevens as No. 2 on the Big Eight career scoring chart.

File/Andy Nelson

K-State guard Lynn Smith's defensive prowess has earned him a spot in the starting lineup today against the University of Nebraska, where he will again battle with Cornhusker guard Henry T. Buchanan. The Wildcat's first-round game in the Big Eight postseason tournament begins at noon in Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

Baker's dozen road trip will test Wildcats

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

It's time for K-State's baseball team to pack up and go on a long, tough journey. Coach Mike Clark hopes his team comes back with confidence.

"We've checked around with other schedules and without question these are the toughest 13 games in a row that probably anyone has to play in the nation," Clark said.

K-State departed by bus Thursday for Fayetteville to play the University of Arkansas and will return Monday night. Over the five-day span, the undefeated Wildcats (4-0) will play some pretty salty competition including Texas, New Orleans, Nicholls State and Tulane.

...without question these are the toughest 13 games in a row that probably anyone has to play in the nation.' — Coach Mike Clark

Clark said all of the games will be a challenge and a learning experience. K-State's victories this season are against NAIA schools Friends University and Missouri Western.

"Every team that we're playing is at least receiving votes in the Top 20 if they're not actually in the Top 20 in the nation," Clark said. "It will be a good test for our kids because for 13 straight games we're going to be playing great people.

"We're going to see just what kind of depth we've got and see how we stack up against the best in the nation," he added. "Hopefully we can learn from this that every time out on the field, we have to play at a certain level, because we'll definitely have to do it to compete on this trip."

Clark's coaching philosophy doesn't allow him to put a great emphasis on winning emotionally. He does, however, have a lifetime-winning percentage of .688, but he achieves that success by keeping his team's emotions on an even keel.

"We've tried to stress to our players not to worry about the wins and losses, but just to worry about the way they play," he said. "We tell them to go out and do the best they can, to learn something and apply it to the next game to make them even better.

"If we can do that it's fine. If we get into a little tailspin, though, I don't think it's going to be that big of a deal. What we're interested in is just getting ourselves to the point to where we're going to be the best we can be once the Big Eight season starts."

K-State's entire roster is healthy for the road stand, with the exception of junior outfielder Tony Braddock. He slightly injured his hand in Tuesday's doubleheader against Friends University in which the 'Cats cleaned up, 14-4 and 15-5.

K-State to test postseason drought

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

Trying to end a three-year drought in postseason competition is K-State's goal today at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo. in the first round of the Big Eight Conference men's basketball tournament.

K-State (18-9), seeded fourth, will meet fifth-seeded Nebraska (17-10) in the 12:10 p.m. contest.

"As everyone is at this time of the year, we are excited about the tournament and are looking forward to it," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "From all indications, particularly after the last two weeks of conference play, it appears that this year's tournament will be very interesting, without many guarantees."

K-State has not won a first-round postseason game since 1984. That year the Wildcats slipped past the Cornhuskers, 41-39, then lost to Kansas in the semifinals. K-State should have plenty of incentive to beat Nebraska again.

Nebraska, which went 5-2 the last half of the conference season, beat the 'Cats, 78-76, in Lincoln.

"I don't know how much that loss will affect the way we play," Kruger said. He added that a revenge factor will probably be in his players' minds.

"Nebraska is playing awfully well," Kruger said. "They're playing with confidence and enthusiasm, and they're also shooting the ball well. We have to limit their transition game."

"For us to win, we have to play a complete game," Nebraska Coach Danny Nee said. "I really think we have to be at our best. K-State is very balanced, explosive and they play great defense. I think Lon Kruger has done a super job there."

The Cornhuskers are led by seniors Brian Carr and Bernard Day, who average 12.9 and 12.8 points per game, respectively. In Nebraska's last game of the season against Kansas, Carr scored 15 points and dished out eight assists. Day chipped in 19 points.

Kruger said 'Husker Derrick Vick is also playing well for Nebraska, as is Henry Buchanan. Buchanan averages 10.1 points per game, and Vick averages 9.7 points per game. Bill Jackman is Nebraska's other starter, and averages 9.7 points per game.

Kruger has juggled K-State's starting lineup in the Wildcats' last two games. Lynn Smith was inserted into the first five before the Missouri game, and Lance Simmons earned a starting nod for the last regular-season game against Oklahoma.

The pair replaced Will Scott and Norris Coleman. Scott has been in a shooting slump and is just nine of 34 in field goal attempts in the last five games.

"Will is starting to shoot better," Kruger said. "He'll bounce back and have a good tournament."

Coleman, who was named a first-team All Big Eight conference selection Tuesday, leads K-State in scoring and rebounding, averaging 23.1 points and 9.1 boards per game. He scored 21 points off the bench against the Sooners in K-State's 90-89 victory.

K-State's other starters will be Mitch Richmond, Charles Bledsoe and Steve Henson.

Richmond has come out of his mid-season slump strongly, averaging 18.4 points and 5.1 rebounds per game. In K-State's last seven games, he has hit 52 of 101 field goal attempts for a 51.5 percentage. Against Oklahoma, he had 23 points, including the game-winning 18-foot jumper.

Bledsoe had 15 points against Oklahoma, while Henson added 13 points. Bledsoe also led the 'Cats in rebounding with eight.

The win over Oklahoma gives K-State a better-than-average chance to get a bid to the NCAA postseason tournament. But Kruger remains noncommittal when discussing the Wildcats' future.

"We're approaching it (getting an NCAA bid) like we need to win another ballgame," he said. "With every additional win, our chances improve."

NOTES...K-State is 3-0 against Nebraska in postseason play...The 'Cats are 6-6 in conference postseason play in Kemper Arena. They have not won a game there since 1981...K-State has won the Big Eight tournament twice — in 1977, the 'Cats beat Missouri in the title game. And in 1980, they knocked off Kansas to gain the title.

Conference tourneys qualify 29 for NCAA

By The Associated Press

Postseason tournament time begins Friday for basketball powers from the Big East and Atlantic Coast conferences, which have six of the nation's top-ranked teams.

Also getting under way Friday are the Metro, Big Eight and Southwest conference tourneys.

The winner of Thursday night's Atlantic-10 tourney title between No. 8 Temple and West Virginia joins previous NCAA tournament qualifiers Alabama-Birmingham, Xavier (Ohio), Penn, Wichita State, Fairfield, Navy and Marshall in the 64-team field. Twenty-nine berths go to tourney winners.

The Western Athletic, Mid-American, Pacific Coast Athletic and Southeastern were among the conference tourneys beginning Thursday.

No. 7 Georgetown, the top seed in the Big East tourney at New York's Madison Square Garden, will play the winner of Thursday night's first-round game between Boston College and Connecticut.

In Friday's other Big East games, No. 10 Syracuse faces Villanova, No. 11 Pittsburgh meets Seton Hall and St. John's opposes Providence.

In first round ACC competition at the Capital Centre in Landover, Md., second-ranked North Carolina, which swept through the ACC regular season with a 14-0 record, faces Maryland, 0-14, No. 13 Clemson meets Wake Forest, No. 14 Duke plays North Carolina State and Virginia faces Gerogia Tech.

No one wanted to win Big Eight's title

DAVE WAGNER
Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Anyone following Big Eight Conference men's basketball knows what a roller coaster season this has been.

The battle for the Big Eight's top spot stayed consistent as K-State, Kansas and Oklahoma — oh, yes, we can't forget Missouri — battled for the top position.

And was anybody consistent in dominating? Not a chance. Something was definetly wrong with this conference; no one seemed to want to win it.

Let's take a look at what went on this season. First, we'll deal with intrastate rival Kansas.

Now here's a real laugher. Dealing with a talented young squad, Larry Brown did a fine job getting his team prepared for the big games on their tough schedule. And for those games his team recorded impressive victories over Notre Dame, St. John's, Louisville and Temple — all preseason Top-20 picks.

Everything looked set for a conference championship for the Jayhawks. After all, they definitely showed a dominance over respected teams outside the league. This all ended when, as we all know, they were defeated in their last four games on the road.

These were not losses to teams that Kansas expected to be challenged by, but rather conference basket cases such as Colorado, which had only won one in 25 of its last conference games when they met the 'Hawks.

Kansas wasn't the only teamed that suffered in this manner. How about Oklahoma, a ranked team which handed the No. 1 team in the country, UNLV, its only loss so far this season. Billy Tubbs was so bold to state after defeating the Runnin' Rebels that his team should be ranked No. 1.

Oh, by the way, this statement was made before the Sooners were dumped by unranked Oklahoma State and K-State. And we can't forget Kansas defeated them as well as that Missouri team which seemed to be loafing near the top of the conference standings all season, picking up wins here and there.

Let's take a look at that Missouri team. Before the season, the Tigers were picked to finish no higher than fifth in the Big Eight. Initially it seemed the preseason pools would be correct as Missouri narrowly defeated such teams as Division II-member Southwest Missouri State.

It wasn't until Mizzou faced K-State at Colombia that the Tigers started to turn things around. At the time they were 14-7. After the victory over K-State, MU lost only two of its last nine games, capturing the Big Eight championship in the process.

But even though Missouri took the conference championship, it is by no means a dominating force in the conference. And no one expects them to walk away with the postseason tourney.

Speaking pro-K-State, as I usually do, I like to think what would have happened if K-State had three shots to make again.

I would say one would be Norris Coleman's free throw with three seconds left that would have won the Kansas game.

And nobody will forget Will Scott's last-second, three-point attempt that would have put K-State ahead of Oklahoma for a victory at Ahearn Field House.

If those shots would have dropped, K-State would have finished the season 21-6 overall, 11-3 in conference play and possessed the Big Eight Championship.

Oh, well. It's fun to think about anyway.

'Big Earl' totes easel

Art tour stops at fraternities

Staff/John La Barge

Noted American artist Earl Lee Scarborough has toured for 25 years drawing sketches of students like Russ Neis, senior in agricultural economics.

By STACEY CAMPBELL
Collegian Reporter

Earl Scarborough has taken his easel into the living rooms of a few fraternities this week as part of his sketch tour across the country.

Scarborough, who calls himself "Big Earl," said his tour, "A Study in Peace," gives him a chance to interact with others.

The 15-minute pose for a $15 sketch by "Big Earl" is "designed to document the college student's pleasant memories."

"My sketch tour, 'A Study in Peace,' is simultaneously a study of the U.S., which I think is very important since people take (the United States) for granted," he said.

A lot of myths affect relations between blacks and whites, like "you can't talk or eat together," Scarborough said.

"During the troubled times in the '60s, I'd sit and sketch in sororities and fraternities, and we would witness the problems on the TV," he said. "I was born at a time when signs were very graphic. I lived in a state where blacks and whites were not allowed to eat together. However, my grandmother married a white man, and in a small town in Oklahoma it created no problem."

"I think most racial problems are intangible techniques that people use to avoid facing reality of the truth," Scarborough said.

Scarborough's sketch tour is in conjunction with Black History Month.

"I thought it would be fun not to speak, as I often am asked to do, but to do some low-profile, in-depth contribution with music, art and Earl's motivation," he said.

"We need a reference for peaceful interaction. My medium has been music, art and me."

Scarborough describes his work as an endeavor, not a job. He sets his own pace and selects the part of the country that he wants to study.

"If ever I was to praise the Lord with thanks, it would be for the great reaction to Big Earl's 'hello' presentation," he said, referring to the introduction he uses when sketching someplace new.

"Within minutes we are laughing together, and what's most important is being able to create a living room full of laughter as opposed to meeting in a strange foxhole.

"Happiness is a favorable junction of circumstances, and I'm a happier man having invested 40,000 hours at universities with that in mind," Scarborough said.

By having a market feasibility study done, Scarborough was able to estimate the profits he would receive as a result of the sketch tour.

'Happiness is a favorable junction of circumstances, and I'm a happier man having invested 40,000 hours at universities with that in mind.'
—Earl Scarborough

"When I could predictably make $500 to $1,000 a week in the '50s, the sketch tours became a solution for learning more about people, places and things — by choice rather than demand," he said.

Over the past 30 years, Scarborough has sketched more than 40,000 people.

In 1967, Scarborough's drawing "Black is Beautiful" gained wide recognition. He has also written a book titled "Black Gold Feelings," a collection of his prose, poetry and social observations.

The book was released for $10.50 a copy, but Scarborough "endeavored to reduce the price for mass exposure — today it's considerably less," he said.

Speaker says mall will add 740 full-time jobs

By The Collegian Staff

The opening of Manhattan Town Center will bring an increase of full-time jobs, as well as a favorable visual and monetary impact on the downtown area, said Karen Davis, assistant director of Manhattan community development and planning.

The mall's tentative grand opening is set for Oct. 26.

Davis spoke in the K-State Union Courtyard Thursday as part of the series, Let's Talk About It. The series is sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Currently the mall is providing 640 temporary construction jobs. After it opens, part-time jobs and 740 full-time jobs will be available.

The monetary effects are also beneficial, Davis said. More sales tax dollars will be generated because of an increase in sales.

"This will help the community's economy because the people who go to malls in surrounding cities will now have a comparable mall to shop at," she said.

Davis said an increase in sales will in turn give the downtown area more money to renovate and improve its appearance.

"A visual impact makes the quality of Manhattan better," Davis said.

The downtown's appearance could attract more college students and industrial prospects, Davis said.

The mall, covering 304,000 square feet, will feature 80 shops and two department stores, Dillard's and J.C. Penney Co. Inc. Davis said there is room for additional shops and one more department store if needed.

Leasing of the 80 shops is "going well," Davis said. Local merchants have been offered at least 25 percent of the leases.

Forest City Development and J.C.P. Realty, a retail development arm of J.C. Penney Co. Inc., are the partner companies in charge of the mall project. Forest City Development will manage the mall when completed.

in the House next week, Tallman said.

If the money recommendation remains in the appropriations bill but the education bill is not passed, Tallman said the Regents could establish the program themselves.

If the education bill is passed but the money recommendation fails, the Regents could seek money appropriations for next year's budget, he said.

"The best situation would be to get both, but I think we'd be pleased to get either one passed," Tallman said.

Tallman said there are three main advantages to the bills. The legislature is currently being pressured to deal with the problem of students taking remedial level classes in college after they graduate from high school, he said.

The main problem is that high school students aren't aware of what classes they should be taking to prepare for college, Tallman said. The brochure would alleviate this problem.

Second, having a centralized place from which to dispense information about colleges would be more efficient, he said.

"Right now there is really no place a student can go to get complete information about every college," Tallman said. "We want to develop it so the Board of Regents is the central place where you can get information about post-secondary education."

Finally, the program directs the Regents to develop a proposal for a course transfer guide for community college students, he said.

"Every school may (publish a course transfer guide) just for itself, but nobody does it for the whole system," Tallman said.

"The whole point of this is not to say one school is better than another, but we do think they're different."

Tallman said if the Regents publish the guide in quantity, it could be made available for people out of high school who would like to return to college.

Senate

"I feel the main opposition to the line item will be students' hesitation to increase student fees. However, they should understand that we (KSDB) need the funds to be a quality radio station," Riley said.

He said the idea for a line item has been considered for years, however, legislation has never been created.

In other action, Senate was scheduled to hear first readings of a resolution opposing security surveillance by the University.

The resolution requests the University to adopt a written policy prohibiting the surveillance of activities sponsored by students, employees and guests.

In addition, the resolution requests that any existing records held by the campus Department of Public Safety be destroyed unless needed for evidence in criminal cases.

The security surveillance opposition resolution and the creation of the KSDB line item will come before Senate for approval next Thursday.

results, he said. Results generally take about three weeks to receive.

Harden said the county is running the tests because KDHE does not have enough funds to do so.

"The state said they didn't have any bucks," he said.

Linn disagreed, saying KDHE should not have to run further tests.

"We feel like it's the county's responsibility to test it, and we've directed them to do so," Linn said.

The state normally does enough testing to identify the problem, then expects the responsible parties to go from there, he said.

KDHE has tested all residences from the area directly east of the landfill to the Kansas River, Linn said. The river is about half a mile from the landfill, although the property borders the river on one side.

"We suggested to the county that it might be wise to expand the area that was tested and also to retest," he said.

Harden said his records indicate tests were only run at five residences and eight monitoring wells at the landfill.

Linn said it was quite possible the contamination could spread.

"That's the reason why we recommended to the county that they retest the wells and expand the area (of testing)," he said.

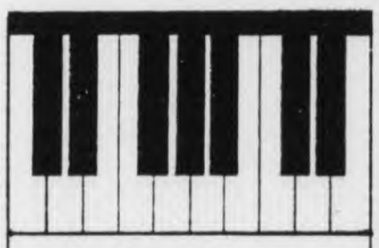
Linn said the levels of carcinogens detected in the two contaminated wells were "very low levels" that "only over a long period of time may pose an additional risk."

Though the contamination was first discovered in 1985, Linn said it could have been around for years. Only in the last few years has testing been advanced enough to detect all the contaminants in the water, he said.

"There was a time when we were not able to do all the analyses that we can do now," he said. "Six or seven years ago, we could not do the tests on a routine basis that we do now."

Linn said the levels of contaminants measured in the groundwater around the landfill would probably amount to only two or three gallons of material.

"We're not talking about a very large quantity of contaminating material in the water," he said. "You're probably running more cancer risk filling up your gas tank at a service station than you would drinking the water for a year or so."



The testing process will probably go on for a number of years, Linn said.

"Our primary concern for the moment is to see an alternate water supply is provided for those people out there," he said. "That should eliminate most of their concerns."

Linn said Thursday he did not think there would be any risk in using the contaminated water to water lawns, gardens or livestock because the toxic levels were so low.

In a Nov. 19, 1985, letter to the owners of the contaminated wells, Linn wrote: "Several of these compounds are suggested cancer-causing agents and even at the indicated levels could significantly increase the risk of a user developing health problems over a long period of use. I am recommending that this water supply not be used as a source of water for drinking, cooking or bathing."

Linn said similar water contamination problems exist near Topeka and Wichita. The Reno County Landfill is experiencing problems as well, Harden said.

Former K-State president dies at 79

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

James Allen McCain, a University president known for his conservative administrative style and an open, friendly attitude with students, is dead at the age of 79.

McCain, who held the longest term of presidency from 1950-1975, died early Saturday morning at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Topeka after being ill for several months.

McCain came to K-State in 1950, succeeding Milton Eisenhower as University president after being president of Montana State University at Bozeman for five years.

His 25-year tenure was one highlighted with the change and progress begun by Eisenhower. During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

As the drinking age creeps up to 21, where does that leave the "minor?" Alternatives are there but whether those under age, a large portion of K-State students, will take advantage of them is yet to be seen. Fake identification is one way, say some. While a new non-alcoholic bar has provided a gathering place for those under 21 as well. See Page 4.

Former K-State president dies at 79

James Allen McCain, a University president known for his conservative administrative style and an open, friendly attitude with students, is dead at the age of 79.

McCain, who held the longest term of presidency from 1950-1975, died early Saturday morning at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Topeka after being ill for several months.

McCain came to K-State in 1950, succeeding Milton Eisenhower as University president after being president of Montana State University at Bozeman for five years.

His 25-year tenure was one highlighted with the change and progress begun by Eisenhower. During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

"He ran a very conservative administration from a structural standpoint," Milbourn said. "For example, he waited until the K-State Union project was fiscally feasible before construction began."

McCain also initiated several programs, including the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, honoring former Kansas Gov. Landon during his administration.

It was also his warm, open relationship with students which established the McCain era personality.

"McCain began an 'open door policy' which promoted his availability to students," Milbourn said. "Students were his central concern, and they were the priority for his attention."

Grace Lindquist, McCain's personal secretary who retired one year after he left K-State, agreed.

"He was always ready to see a student at any time. He was very concerned about them," she said.

Milbourn recalled an occasion when McCain was so busy seeing students, he couldn't see him.

"I told him the only way I could see him was for me to enroll in a class," Milbourn said.

When he and McCain traveled together throughout the state, they would often meet parents of students. McCain would write down their names, then later contact the student by note to come in and chat with him, Milbourn said.

"He was always doing things to personalize the president's office. He was really genuinely interested in the students, and they saw that quality in him," Milbourn said.

Milbourn also described McCain as a "wise leader and a first-rate administrator who did his job so well because he genuinely loved it."

McCain wanted to retire earlier than 1975 but stayed with his post because the Board of Regents asked him to.

"Aliens"

This sci-fi thriller was the roller-coaster of fright in the summer of '86. The film stars Sigourney Weaver, fighting the nastiest aliens in cinematic history.

The film has stomach-churning special effects, a psychotic crew of space-marines, a lost child and an army of alien hatchlings along with their huge, protective Queen-mother.

With a heroine who protects the men and battles beasts, "Aliens" becomes unique. When the ad says "This time it's war," it means it.

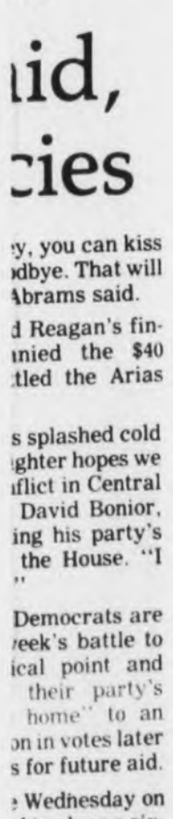
"About Last Night..."

The big surprise of last year was that two brat-packers delivered a film with realism and feeling. Based on the hit play "Sexual Perversity in Chicago," Rob Lowe and Demi Moore struck the right nerve with movie-going audiences.

It's a love story that's neither lofty nor mushy and comments frankly about living and loving in the "commitment-free" '80s.

A must see: If you missed it on the big screen, see it on the little one.

"Ruthless People"



The same nuts responsible for "Airplane!" brought us last year's most inspired comedy. Bette Midler (as a business exec's wife) is kidnapped by a husband-and-wife team, but she soon finds out her husband (Danny DeVito) would just as soon never see her again.

The entire cast is excellent, DeVito in particular. He's like a cross between Daffy Duck and Yosemite Sam: He so enjoys being greedy that he's fun to watch.

"Manhunter"

Michael Mann's love for flashy visuals is showcased in this film-noir-meets-art-deco story of a detective's search for a killer. The film takes on a hypnotic quality that perfectly reflects the mind of the detective (William Petersen), as he adopts the same mindset as the killer (so he can guess the killer's next move).

A much underrated movie that is much better than any of Mann's work on "Miami Vice."

Former K-State president dies at 79

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

James Allen McCain, a University president known for his conservative administrative style and an open, friendly attitude with students, is dead at the age of 79.

McCain, who held the longest term of presidency from 1950-1975, died early Saturday morning at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Topeka after being ill for several months.

McCain came to K-State in 1950, succeeding Milton Eisenhower as University president after being president of Montana State University at Bozeman for five years.

His 25-year tenure was one highlighted with the change and progress begun by Eisenhower. During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

"He ran a very conservative administration from a structural standpoint," Milbourn said. "For example, he waited until the K-State Union project was fiscally feasible before construction began."

McCain also initiated several programs, including the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, honoring former Kansas Gov. Landon during his administration.

It was also his warm, open relationship with students which established the McCain era personality.

"McCain began an 'open door policy' which promoted his availability to students," Milbourn said. "Students were his central concern, and they were the priority for his attention."

Grace Lindquist, McCain's personal secretary who retired one year after he left K-State, agreed.

"He was always ready to see a student at any time. He was very concerned about them," she said.

Milbourn recalled an occasion when McCain was so busy seeing students, he couldn't see him.

"I told him the only way I could see him was for me to enroll in a class," Milbourn said.

When he and McCain traveled together throughout the state, they would often meet parents of students. McCain would write down their names, then later contact the student by note to come in and chat with him, Milbourn said.

"He was always doing things to personalize the president's office. He was really genuinely interested in the students, and they saw that quality in him," Milbourn said.

Milbourn also described McCain as a "wise leader and a first-rate administrator who did his job so well because he genuinely loved it."

McCain wanted to retire earlier than 1975 but stayed with his post because the Board of Regents asked him to.

McCain's love of his work and ability to communicate resulted in his branching efforts beyond the University and state. He was a consultant for state universities in

Faking It: I.D.s useful for some

The days when 18-year-old freshmen at K-State looked forward to a night out in Aggieville bars have ended — or have they?

Changing the legal drinking age to 21 has taken some of the excitement out of going away to college, some say.

Students who came to K-State when the legal drinking age for 3.2 alcohol was 18 were free to go to most Aggieville bars away from their parents' watchful eyes, said Randy Hall, senior in pre-dentistry.

"When I was a freshman I felt so free," he said. "My parents weren't around so I wanted to have a great time — and I did."

In the fall of 1983, when Hall was a freshman, there were five drinking establishments in Aggieville that admitted 18-year-olds: Mr. K's, Brother's Tavern, Sports FanAttic, Last Chance Saloon, Kite's Bar & Grille and Dark Horse Tavern.

Some 21-year-olds drank so much when they came to college, they feel a bit of overkill after four years.

"I'm sick of beer now because I started drinking the day I turned 18," said Sally Gingerich, senior in political science.

Since it was legal for most freshmen to get into the 18 bars, the big challenge was to get into the 21 clubs, Hall said.

"I had a club card and a fake ID when I was 17," he said.

Aggieville clubs operating four years ago included The Avalon, Bushwacker's and the top floor of the Sports FanAttic and Last Chance.

Rich Gau, senior in mechanical engineering, said he also went to the clubs when he was 18.

"I went to bars, I went to clubs — the age didn't stop me," he said.

Gau came to K-State in 1983 from St. Louis, where the legal drinking age was already 21.

"When I got up here, I was able to go out and drink freely (at the 18 bars) and it was a big deal," Gau said. "Now, people coming from Missouri won't have the same excitement, (because) there's no difference."

Some students who are old enough to enter bars now are glad the age laws have changed.

"The bars are a lot calmer now (without the freshmen), you can drink on a Friday afternoon in peace," Gingerich said.

However, most 21-year-olds agree that if they were 18 today they would still find some way to drink, he said.

"I'd do whatever I could do to get into the bars," Gau said. "There just really isn't anything else to do."

Hall agreed and said, "I'd go crazy. I'd probably just stay around the fraternity house, unless I had a fake ID."

Fake IDs are popular with a lot of underage students, used to get into a bar or to buy a bottle in a liquor store, said a source who sells illegal identifications in Manhattan and wished to remain unidentified.

"I sold about 250 (IDs) when I was in high school, but I've only sold about 30 this year," he said.

He said he selects his customers more carefully now, because he thought the police department was "catching on."

"I won't do it for people that I don't know anymore," he said.

Another illegal practice of getting into bars has to do with "who you know." There have been occasions when bar owners, managers and employees bend the rules to admit underaged friends or acquaintances.

Even with the current liquor law change and continual ticketing by the Riley County Police Department, minors who are determined to go to clubs and taverns seem to follow in the path of their predecessors to keep the Aggieville tradition alive.

UNDER 21

In search of alternatives

By JUDY GOLDBERG
Staff Writer

What do you do for fun if you're under 21? The choices are narrowing for approximately 35 percent of K-State students.

By the beginning of the spring semester, the only area 3.2 drinking establishments remaining open to students 18 years and older were Brother's, 1120 Moro St., Charlie's Neighborhood Bar, 1800 Claflin Road, and Aggie Lounge, 712 N. 12th St.

Recently Brother's closed its doors to students born after July 1, 1966, a cut-off date mandated by Kansas legislators as part of a three-phase process to turn Kansas into a 21-state. The process began July 1, 1985, when the legal drinking age for 3.2 beer changed from 18 to 19. One year later it rose to 20, and by July 1, 1987, the legal drinking age in Kansas will be 21. This measure was taken in response to a federal mandate requiring Kansas to become a 21-state or lose federal highway funds.

John Lamb, director of the Kansas Alcoholic Beverage Control Agency, said minors can legally enter 21 clubs at the owner's discretion as long as they do not drink. But Aggieville club owners have decided difficulties in monitoring minors are not worth the trouble.

"We found it was very hard to monitor them," said Rusty Wilson, manager of Kite's Bar & Grille, 619 N. 12th St.

All Aggieville clubs have officially discontinued admitting people under 21, according to club owners, though it has been reported that some club personnel continue to admit underage individuals.

Many students under 21 feel cheated by current liquor legislation that denies them of the "Aggieville Experience." Further frustration exists for students who could legally drink 3.2 beer before the liquor law was enacted.

Some attempt to go around the law by using fake identification cards to gain entrance into establishments.

"If you want to drink, you can drink," said Erik Heitmann, sophomore in mechanical engineering.

Fear of punishment doesn't seem to stop determined students.

"It's kind of like a speed limit," said John McIntyre, sophomore in industrial engineering. "Lots of people get caught, but it doesn't slow you down."

Not all minors follow these paths; many are reverting to high school practices of obtaining alcohol from older friends and drinking it at private parties.

"More than before you'll have your own small party," said Sheahon Zenger, junior in education, who said he looks forward to parties, "because there's not as much fear of getting busted."

Others said they enjoyed going to bars and clubs not for the alcohol, but for the atmosphere.

"It's just really hard to meet people other than in the dorm," said Rhonda Holle, freshman in accounting.

Joyce Bettenbrock, freshman in business administration, said she enjoys going to bars to dance.

A new alternative for students under 21 years old is Polo's, 1122 Moro St., a non-alcoholic bar which opened last Friday. Russell Disberger, senior in finance and owner of the bar, said about 800 high school and college students visited Polo's last weekend. However, some K-State students said they are skeptical about going to the bar.

> Many students under 21 feel cheated by current legislation that denies them of the "Aggieville Experience."

"If I found out that people my age, not high school age, would be there I probably would try it. But if it's run over with high school kids I'd probably go somewhere else," said Howard Bonser, freshman in pre-forestry.

Going out to dinner and to a movie are other common alternatives for weekend entertainment.

"I'll go see a movie, go out to dinner or rent movies and just stay at home," said Mary Ann Brooks, sophomore in English.

Fraternities and sororities are altering their social calendars to accommodate members under 21.

Jim Hise, president of Delta Tau Delta fraternity and junior in restaurant management, said the fraternity sponsors non-alcohol parties about twice a month.

"(We're) having a lot more activities at the house with little sisters," he said.

Karma Sieck, junior in accounting and president of Sigma Sigma Sigma, said the sorority has scheduled events pledges can attend.

"We've started going skating and to ShowBiz Pizza," she said.

Students can also take advantage of programs offered by the Union Program Council.

"We've always thought of ourselves as an alternative entertainment to alcohol-related events and the bars," said Marilyn Woodward, UPC adviser. Movies, bowling, weekend outdoor recreation trips and other events are sponsored by UPC, she said.

McCain Auditorium, the K-State Players and the music department feature cultural events for the public as well.

Whatever the diversion, enjoying a cold one in a favorite Aggieville tavern is no longer an option for a large portion of K-State students.

"You think you're finally going to be out doing things for yourself, and now you can't even drink," Holle said.

During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

"He ran a very conservative administration from a structural standpoint," Milbourn said. "For example, he waited until the K-State Union project was fiscally feasible before construction began."

McCain also initiated several programs, including the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, honoring former Kansas Gov. Landon during his administration.

It was also his warm, open relationship with students which established the McCain era personality.

"McCain began an 'open door policy' which promoted his availability to students," Milbourn said. "Students were his central concern, and they were the priority for his attention."

Grace Lindquist, McCain's personal secretary who retired one year after he left K-State, agreed.

"He was always ready to see a student at any time. He was very concerned about them," she said.

Milbourn recalled an occasion when McCain was so busy seeing students, he couldn't see him.

"I told him the only way I could see him was for me to enroll in a class," Milbourn said.

When he and McCain traveled together throughout the state, they would often meet parents of students. McCain would write down their names, then later contact the student by note to come in and chat with him, Milbourn said.

"He was always doing things to personalize the president's office. He was really genuinely interested in the students, and they saw that quality in him," Milbourn said.

Milbourn also described McCain as a "wise leader and a first-rate administrator who did his job so well because he genuinely loved it."

McCain wanted to retire earlier than 1975 but stayed with his post because the Board of Regents asked him to.

McCain's love of his work and ability to communicate resulted in his branching efforts beyond the University and state. He was a consultant for state universities in

Film Review

Penn's plot fails to chill in 'Winter'

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

At one time, Arthur Penn was one of America's finest film directors. From his first film "The Left-Handed Gun" (1957) to his instant classic "Bonnie and Clyde" (1967) to his modern-day film noir "Night Moves" (1975), Penn consistently turned out one finely tuned film after another. But then he stumbled through the bona fide turkey "Missouri Breaks" and the saccharine-sweet "Four Friends." He's been struggling ever since.

His newest film "Dead of Winter" isn't likely to help his reputation any. It's an amazingly predictable suspense thriller partly influenced by Hitchcock and partly by Ira Levin's "Death Trap."

The plot sounds somewhat promising. An actress (Mary Steenburgen) looking for her big break accepts a part in a suspense film. It seems she'll replace an actress who had a nervous breakdown, or so the casting agent (Roddy McDowall) tells her. She's made up to look exactly like the other woman while she stays at the producer's secluded mansion. Outside, a winter storm rages, cutting her off from the rest of the world. We soon find out the role she'll be playing isn't exactly the role she was expecting.

This could have been the basis for a good film, but Penn telegraphs every twist in the plot, destroying the suspense. Instead of letting the tension gradually build, Penn prefers to shock us with sudden noises. Soon the movie becomes simply aggravating.

Mary Steenburgen is a fine actress, but she is hopelessly out of place in "Dead of Winter." She's much too flighty. The role calls for a cooler, more remote actress. To see Steenburgen reduced to a bundle of nerves isn't surprising.

Roddy McDowall fares much better. He's so polite he becomes eerie. And Jan Rubes, as the producer, makes an interesting villain. The first time he appears on screen, moving about in his motorized wheelchair, he seems like somebody's grandfather. But

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

James Allen McCain, a University president known for his conservative administrative style and an open, friendly attitude with students, is dead at the age of 79.

McCain, who held the longest term of presidency from 1950-1975, died early Saturday morning at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Topeka after being ill for several months.

McCain came to K-State in 1950, succeeding Milton Eisenhower as University president after being president of Montana State University at Bozeman for five years.

His 25-year tenure was one highlighted with the change and progress begun by Eisenhower. During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

"He ran a very conservative administration from a structural standpoint," Milbourn said. "For example, he waited until the K-State Union project was fiscally feasible before construction began."

McCain also initiated several programs, including the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, honoring former Kansas Gov. Landon during his administration.

It was also his warm, open relationship with students which established the McCain era personality.

Grace Lindquist, McCain's personal secretary who retired one year after he left K-State, agreed.

"He was always ready to see a student at any time. He was very concerned about them," she said.

Milbourn recalled an occasion when McCain was so busy seeing students, he couldn't see him.

"I told him the only way I could see him was for me to enroll in a class," Milbourn said.

When he and McCain traveled together throughout the state, they would often meet parents of students. McCain would write down their names, then later contact the student by note to come in and chat with him, Milbourn said.

"He was always doing things to personalize the president's office. He was really genuinely interested in the students, and they saw that quality in him," Milbourn said.

Milbourn also described McCain as a "wise leader and a first-rate administrator who did his job so well because he genuinely loved it."

Winter

Almost all the movie takes place in the producer's mansion. To convey the feeling of the storm outside, and the deadly game played within, the filmmakers have used a grainy filmstock that effectively conveys the chilling atmosphere. But the filmmakers keep alternating this filmstock, for no apparent reason, with a regular filmstock.

The movie's fatal flaw, though, comes in the first few minutes. A woman who looks all too much like Steenburgen is killed. The brim of her hat hangs down over her face, but it's all too clear who it is. This makes it easy to predict what will happen later. If Hitchcock had filmed this movie he would have clearly shown us the face of the woman who gets killed, and then later he would have shown us what McDowall and Rubes are plotting. Penn keeps this all a secret (a secret that's easily guessed) and because of this the movie turns into a cheap trick.

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

James Allen McCain, a University president known for his conservative administrative style and an open, friendly attitude with students, is dead at the age of 79.

McCain, who held the longest term of presidency from 1950-1975, died early Saturday morning at the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Topeka after being ill for several months.

McCain came to K-State in 1950, succeeding Milton Eisenhower as University president after being president of Montana State University at Bozeman for five years.

His 25-year tenure was one highlighted with the change and progress begun by Eisenhower. During his career, McCain strove to develop the University's agricultural programs and make improvements in areas of liberal arts, engineering, veterinary medicine and research. He has been credited with transforming the University from a state agricultural college to a major university.

"He (McCain) and Eisenhower were alike in their ability to articulate and to communicate well about the University, and develop a good rapport with people on- and off-campus," said Max Milbourn, associate professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications and McCain's assistant throughout his term.

While McCain was president, $110 million worth of building construction was done on campus, including the Union, the football stadium, McCain Auditorium and partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center.

"He ran a very conservative administration from a structural standpoint," Milbourn said. "For example, he waited until the K-State Union project was fiscally feasible before construction began."

McCain also initiated several programs, including the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, honoring former Kansas Gov. Landon during his administration.

It was also his warm, open relationship with students which established the McCain era personality.

"McCain began an 'open door policy' which promoted his availability to students," Milbourn said. "Students were his central concern, and they were the priority for his attention."

Grace Lindquist, McCain's personal secretary who retired one year after he left K-State, agreed.

"He was always ready to see a student at any time. He was very concerned about them," she said.

Milbourn recalled an occasion when McCain was so busy seeing students, he couldn't see him.

"I told him the only way I could see him was for me to enroll in a class," Milbourn said.

When he and McCain traveled together throughout the state, they would often meet parents of students. McCain would write down their names, then later contact the student by note to come in and chat with him, Milbourn said.

"He was always doing things to personalize the president's office. He was really genuinely interested in the students, and they saw that quality in him," Milbourn said.

Milbourn also described McCain as a "wise leader and a first-rate administrator who did his job so well because he genuinely loved it."

McCain wanted to retire earlier than 1975 but stayed with his post because the Board of Regents asked him to.

McCain's love of his work and ability to communicate resulted in his branching efforts beyond the University and state. He was a consultant for state universities in

King follows father's protests against racism

Leader emphasizes history

By ERIN EICHER
News Editor

More than 30 years after his father began organizing nonviolent protests against segregation, Martin Luther King III said the fight to end racism is still one of the "great challenges of our generation."

"Where are we now? There has been individual progress, but the masses are still suffering," King told an audience of about 100 Friday night in the Union Little Theatre.

'If a person favors freedom and refuses to favor agitation, he wants crops without plowing the ground. He wants rain without the thunder and lightning. He just wants everything without paying for it.'

— Charles Scott Sr.

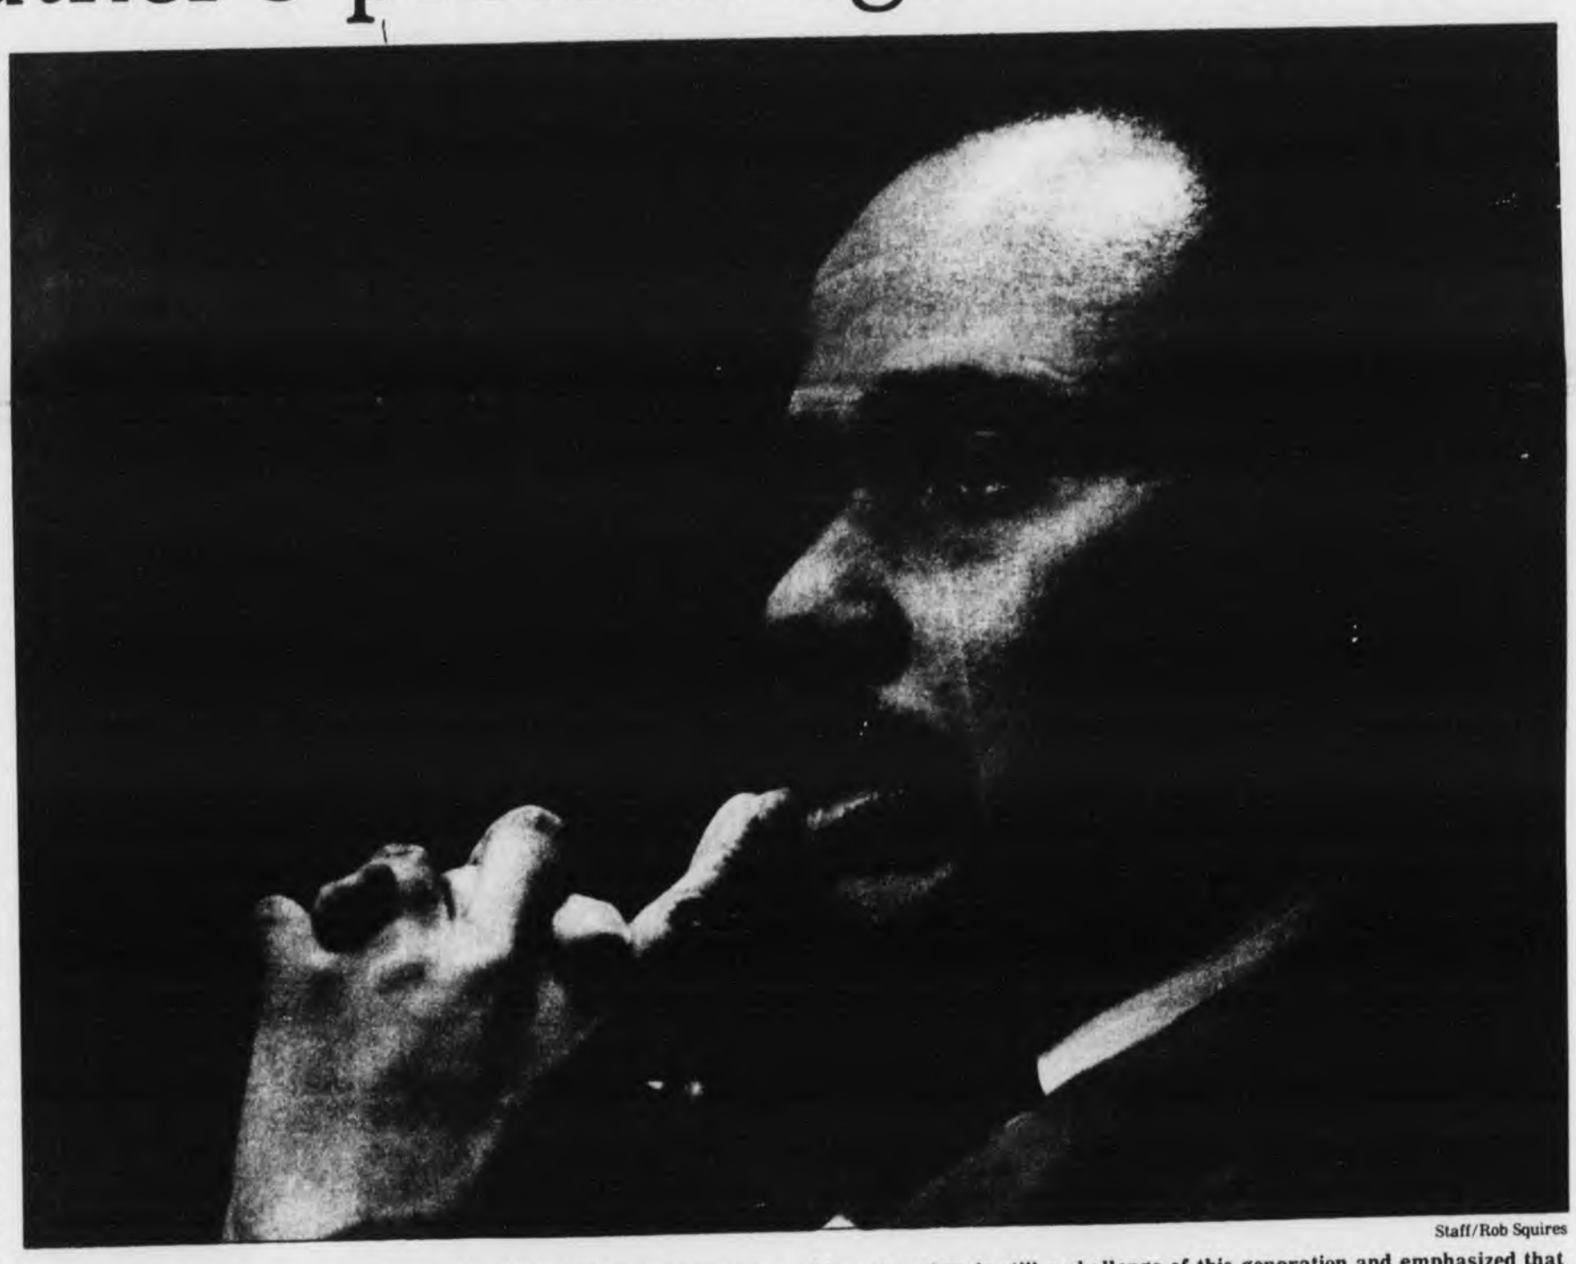
King's speech, along with that of Charles Scott Sr., an attorney involved in the original Brown vs. Board of Education decision as well as litigation on the case that was recently reopened, was part of a presentation sponsored by the Black Student Union.

"The civil rights agenda has not yet been completed," Scott said. "Some of these things in history we cannot forget, and if we forget them, that's an invitation to their repetition."

King's visit followed the events of Black History Month in February. He said although a month dedicated to black history is a sign of progress, he looks forward to a time when black history is as widely known as white history and a special month is not necessary to draw attention to the accomplishments of blacks.

"Black history has not been taught. We do not know our history," King said. Because of an ignorance of their own past, black Americans have no point of reference.

Whites can review their family heritage, but the most blacks know about their past is that their ancestors were brought from somewhere in Africa, a "proud continent with a proud history and heritage," he said.



In recounting some of the efforts made in the 1950s and '60s to bring about civil rights legislation, King recalled participants in a 48-mile march to Selma, Ala., who risked their lives in an effort to bring about the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

King, 29, was recently elected to a seat on the seven-member Fulton County Commission in Atlanta, Ga. However, he said, in many current elections, when less than 20 percent of the voting age population uses that right, officials get elected who are not sensitive to black needs.

"I respect the Office of the President of the United States. I don't respect the man," King said. "I have problems with a president who can't remember what he did. I mean, sure you can forget routine things, but when you do something you know is wrong, you're going to remember it."

In a country with a $300 billion military budget for "death and destruction," the very least the public should do is demand an equal amount for the preservation of life, King said.

Lawmakers study farm programs to find best answer for economy

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Farm Belt lawmakers are split over whether to leave the 1985 farm bill alone or whether to try new approaches to shoring up the struggling farm economy.

Congress is not expected to do any tinkering with the farm bill this year, but the battle lines are already forming over whether the Food Security Act of 1985 will need an early overhaul.

The House Agriculture Committee is studying whether to modify the farm programs. A recent academic analysis that suggests the best option is the status quo has elicited sharply different responses from committee members.

"There's not going to be any major change in policy," said Rep. Arlan Stangeland, R-Minn., a farmer himself.

"I don't want to make any changes," said Rep. Ed Madigan, R-Ill, who helped write the 1985 bill. "I think it was the best effort at collective judgment that could have been attempted or achieved, and it should be given a chance to work."

But Rep. Lane Evans, D-Ill., said U.S. farm policy has failed and major repairs are in order.

"In the current program, we have the large farmers benefiting the most at the expense of the small- and medium-sized farmers," Evans said. "We have a lot of farmers going bankrupt. They're just holding on."

Evans favors the "Save The Family Farm Act" proposed by Democrats Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa and Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri. It would try to boost farmers' income by raising farm price support payments from the current 50 percent of parity — the cost of production — to 80 percent, enacting tight controls on domestic production and supply, and imposing high import tariffs.

But Madigan said both the "Save The Family Farm Act" and changes suggested by the White House budget office would be disastrous for farmers in his state.

Madigan said the Harkin-Gephardt bill provides no guarantees for higher farm income because it requires more land to be taken out of production.

That means farm suppliers would have to charge more to break even on fertilizer, seed, chemicals and equipment sales because of reduced demand, said Madigan. "Everything would have to go up...The money would just be passing through the farmers' hands if the program worked, and I don't think it would work."

A recent analysis by the National Center for Food and Agricultural Policy and the Food and Agricultural Research Policy Institute of the University of Missouri and Iowa State Universi-

Congress battles Contra aid, studies future issues, policies

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress is facing its first battle of the year over aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels, a fight that also will provide a measure of how well President Reagan has regained his political footing on Capitol Hill.

At stake this week is the final, $40 million installment of the $100 million aid package for the anti-Sandinista fighters that Congress passed last year.

Even if the Democrat-controlled House and Senate vote to block the $40 million payment, a Reagan veto could still ensure that the Contras get the funds. But lawmakers on both sides of the emotional issue are looking beyond this skirmish to the larger issue of future U.S. policy in Central America.

When Reagan formally requested the final $40 million last week, he also certified to Congress that there was no reasonable chance for a near-term diplomatic settlement of the region's problems without the military aid to the rebels. Democrats attacked that finding.

The assertion was a renewal of the administration's stated aim of a two-track solution: a multilateral diplomatic effort involving all nations in the region, coupled with continued military pressure on Nicaragua to force its leftist government to the negotiating table.

Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams was on Capitol Hill last week, seeking to assure Congress of the administration's support for the latest diplomatic effort, a proposal by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias that calls for a cease-fire and cutoff of all outside military assistance coupled with negotiations.

But Abrams predicted that Nicaragua will participate in a May regional summit on the peace proposal only for propaganda purposes, and will try to drag the talks out. He suggested that Contra military action is the only thing motivating Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega to participate.

"We believe that if Congress does not approve the money, you can kiss these negotiations goodbye. That will kill the Arias plan," Abrams said.

But Democrats said Reagan's finding that accompanied the $40 million request belittled the Arias plan.

"The president...has splashed cold water on one of the brighter hopes we had to resolve the conflict in Central America," said Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., who is leading his party's fight on the issue in the House. "I think it's regrettable."

For their part, the Democrats are seeking to use this week's battle to drive home a political point and make it easier for their party's dissenters to "come home" to an anti-Contra aid position in votes later this year on proposals for future aid.

The House will vote Wednesday on a Democratic proposal to place a six-month moratorium on any aid to the Contras, including the $40 million, while the administration prepares an accounting of where the past aid has gone.

Israeli officials demand spy probe

JERUSALEM — Three Cabinet ministers on Sunday demanded an official probe into the Pollard spy scandal, which one minister said has caused "unprecedented damage" to U.S.-Israeli ties.

But the government blocked public discussion by referring the debate to a secret Cabinet committee.

"The Cabinet has no right to hide information from the government," said Communications Minister Amnon Rubinstein, one of three ministers who asked for an inquiry at the weekly Cabinet session.

Jonathan Jay Pollard, a former U.S. Navy analyst, was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for selling classified U.S. military information to Israel.

Rubinstein told reporters after the two-hour meeting: "As a member of government, I want to know, not security secrets, but about the responsibility for this totally unjustified, totally irresponsible act that caused unprecedented damage to our relations with the United States and also to American Jewry."

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium — Engineers tried Sunday to right a capsized British ferry in an effort to retrieve the bodies of 82 people believed trapped in the half-submerged vessel off the Belgian coast.

Relatives of passengers, meanwhile, went to a makeshift morgue in a basketball court to identify the 53 bodies recovered so far. Of the 543 passengers and crew, 408 survived.

The Herald of Free Enterprise fell on its port side outside this port about 15 minutes after departing Friday night for Dover, England.

On Sunday, two salvage ships carrying giant cranes moved in on the stricken vessel. The unrecovered corpses were presumed trapped under heavy debris or in sections of the boat inaccessible to divers.

Reporters flying overhead saw one crane perpendicular to the keel. Salvage crews were attaching a steel cable to the orange-and-white hull. Several tugboats stood by on a calm sea.

The operation was suspended at nightfall, after about three hours.

Officals said Sunday it was extremely unlikely anyone was still alive inside the vessel and that it was too dangerous for divers to try to retrieve bodies before the ferry was righted.

"We cannot get more bodies out of the vessel without killing somebody," said Lt. Stephen Wild, a British Royal Navy diver.

Hospital develops AIDS care team

TOPEKA — Officials at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center say they have developed a special program to provide care for patients with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Doctors involved in the program treat virtually all of the AIDS patients who have sought help in the Topeka area, said Dr. William Wade, a spokesman for the program.

The team includes a psychiatric consultant, a social worker, an infectious disease specialist, nurses, a dietitian and a chaplain.

Wade said the program does not pose a threat to the hospital's other patients or to its staff.

"We have a lot of experience caring for people with AIDS, even though a formal hospital team had not been organized in Topeka," Wade said. "We decided it was time to establish one care team in the region, one program which we hope all people with AIDS can be seen by."

FBI captures escaped murderer

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — Self-styled mountain man Claude Dallas, who escaped from the Idaho State Penitentiary after being convicted of killing two Idaho Fish and Game wardens, was captured Sunday, the FBI said.

Dallas, using the alias Al Shrank, was arrested without incident by FBI agents about 3 p.m. as he left a convenience market in this ranching-area community 50 miles east of Los Angeles, according to Richard T. Bretzing, special agent in charge of the Los Angeles office.

"He had vowed he would not be taken alive, but at the time of his arrest he was unarmed," Bretzing said.

Dallas, who had been on the FBI's Most Wanted list since May, apparently had contacts in the area, Bretzing said.

Dallas was arrested on a federal fugitive warrant and taken to Riverside County Jail. Dallas at first denied his identity, but a fingerprint comparison confirmed it, said FBI spokesman Jim Neilson.

"This is a particularly dangerous man, and we are pleased and relieved to have him in custody," Bretzing said.

Mayor focuses on needs of blacks

TAMPA, Fla. — Tampa's first woman mayor, Sandy Freedman, says she has a mandate to focus on the forgotten needs of blacks after she handily won a five-way race in the wake of racial disturbances that rocked the city.

And Freedman, elected Tuesday after being appointed to the post last July to fill a vacancy, wasted no time in showing she means business.

Within two days of her election, a black police officer was promoted to head the 469-member uniformed force, a biracial committee was taking shape, and black and white leaders were summoned to her office to explore ways to improve public housing.

"You've got to get people together to talk and that's not happened in a long, long time," Freedman said in an interview Friday.

"Because of Tampa's dynamic growth over the past few years, we were so taken up with the construction side of things we didn't focus on the human side of things," she said. Tampa's population jumped 32 percent during the 1970s and now stands at about 280,000.

"When my term is up, I would like it to be known as four years of caring and sensitivity to the needs of the people."

A veteran of 12 years on the City Council, Freedman, 43, took over the mayor's job in July when then-Mayor Bob Martinez resigned to wage his successful gubernatorial campaign.

Arkansas new haven for retirees

CHEROKEE VILLAGE, Ark. — Northern accents are increasingly heard along with Southern drawls in the Arkansas Ozarks, which has become a retirement haven for thousands because of low taxes, mild weather, pleasant scenery and no big-city stress.

The accelerating exodus by Northerners over 60 to communities like Cherokee Village means more home and land sales, more life savings deposited in local banks, and more tax revenue to support schools and services.

"Our area is much better off because the retirees are here," says Larry Nelson, president of a bank in Mountain Home. "Eventually, within a six- or nine-month period, they have not only enjoyed being around these Southern people, they have become like those people. They have lost the veneer that built up over 40 years of working in the city."

Arkansas is second only to Florida in percentage of population over 65, says Sandra Auburn, assistant deputy director of the state Office on Aging and Adult Services.

Policies limit smoking areas to protect nonsmokers' rights

Violators of campus regulation may be subject to charge

By The Collegian Staff

Smoking at K-State could be hazardous to one's health — and one's pocketbook.

According to the regulations of the new smoking policies, violation is subject to a misdemeanor charge of unlawful smoking and can be punishable by a $15 fine.

If a person complains about another's smoking and the situation becomes unreasonable, the charges can be filed and the University can take action, said Jack Lambert, director of public safety and chairman of the University smoking policy committee.

"(The policy is) not strongly or strictly enforced," he said. "The complaints have been minimal, and people have been adhering to it."

Jack Connaughton, assistant director of the Union, said the Union has received little feedback about its smoking policy.

The smoking policy for the Union has been in effect since Feb. 2. Smoking is permitted in the Little Theatre and Forum Hall lobby areas, and during dances in the Union Ballroom, smoking is permitted at tables with ashtrays. Union staterooms also have "no smoking" areas.

Smoking is also permitted in concourse areas in the Union, the Dive Area (vending machine area on ground level), the recreation area and the Bluemont Room.

Staff members in Union offices may establish an office smoking policy. While a group uses a meeting room, members may decide whether they want to allow smoking.

Areas in the Union where people cannot smoke are the Art Gallery, Catskeller, Browsing Library, elevators, bookstore and copy center.

To satisfy current trends in smoking preferences, Lambert said the committee updated the University's smoking policy, which has been in effect since September 1986.

"People want the smoking to be in a certain area and not over the entire building," he said.

According to the University policy, smoking is not permitted in laboratories, elevators, libraries, indoor theaters, art galleries, concert halls, places of public assembly, waiting rooms of a medical care facility, building corridors or other locations where no smoking signs are posted.

Residence halls are subject to the University policy, and each floor may establish its own smoking policy.

City bans smoking in buildings; workers try to quit habit

By The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Many tobacco lovers in this city of 88,000 people will have to light up away from their desks Monday because a smoking ban went into effect over the weekend affecting virtually all public places.

As of Sunday, this hub of academia and home of Harvard University outlawed smoking in private, state, county and municipal buidings, affecting an estimated 96,000 workers.

Each institution is to set a smoking policy with non-smokers in mind. Designated smoking areas can be established only if they do not affect non-smokers.

The ordinance has prompted one bank to urge workers to kick the habit. The Cambridgeport Savings Bank, which has branches in Cambridge, Lexington and Winchester, is offering to pay for employees' attendance at smoke-ending programs and brought in a hypnotist to help.

"I applaud the City Council for giving us the teeth to do something we should have been doing anyway," said President James B. Keegan.

The bank will comply with a no-smoking policy in all of its offices, Keegan said. Smoking will be restricted to two designated areas but only until July 30, he said.

Mayor Walter J. Sullivan, a cigar lover who smokes about two per day, was the only opponent when Cambridge City Council passed the ordinance three months ago on an 8-1 vote.

He was philosophical Sunday about the public will and his own proclivity for a puff.

"I don't get upset about it," Sullivan said. "It'll work out; it'll take a while. Maybe it's good, maybe it's bad — I don't like to take anyone's options away."

Non-smokers who feel a firm or institution has not complied with the ordinance can appeal to the city health commissioner. Non-compliant establishments face fines of $25 to $100.

Individual infractions could result in a charge of disorderly conduct, said police officer Jay Lyons, who noted he quit smoking 13 years ago.

The self-enforcing ordinance broadens previous restrictions on smoking in certain public venues and parts of restaurants. The only exceptions left are businesses with offices smaller than 1,500 square feet whose employees agree no smoking policy is needed; veteran and fraternal organizations; "beano" games, similar to bingo; and restaurants with 25 or fewer seats.

Women should learn defense, speaker says

By SHELLY SHAFFER
Collegian Reporter

In future wars, women will have to pick up guns to defend the United States, and they might return home in body bags, said Lt. Col. Terry Heyns, professor of aerospace studies.

Heyns spoke on "Women in Combat" at the Friday Focus on Women in the Union.

In effect, the next conventional war with U.S. involvement will overtake the issue of whether women should be used in combat fighting — a concept that has been discussed for years, he said.

Despite what most people believe, Americans are most likely to face a conventional, not nuclear, war, he said. Because the battlefield for this war will be mobile and will take place over miles, there will be no safe areas.

In this type of war, women will serve in auxilary, war-related roles such as mechanics and medics, and they will need to be able to defend themselves and men, Heyns said.

People under attack want whoever is next to them to help. It makes no difference if that is a man or woman, he said.

The minority of those in the military who do not agree that women should be in combat are generals and congressmen, Heyns said.

These people decide who is trained for combat, and they have yet to allow women to defend themselves and others.

Pulling a trigger on a person, resulting in that person's death, is the general definition of combat, he said.

The definition of combat Congress uses does not apply to the real world anymore because of mobile, conventional wars, Heyns said.

Senators William Proxmire, D-Wis., and William Cohen, R-Maine, introduced legislation in February that will allow women in the military to serve closer to the battle lines.

One myth concerning women in combat is that men will be thinking about protecting the women instead of concentrating on the assignment given to them, he said. Well-trained troops will respond to the situation. Thoughts of gender will not enter into the soldier's mind, but instead the concern will be how efficiently the other troops are doing their jobs.

Heynes said throughout the history of wars, women have been stereotyped as angels of mercy and prostitutes.

Children often crime targets

Report gives victim statistics

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department said Sunday that five out of six of today's 12-year-olds will be the victims or intended victims of violent crimes during their lifetimes if current crime rates persist.

Half of them will be victimized more than once, authorities said in a report based on projections from a decade of surveys on the extent of crime.

The report says the lifetime odds of becoming a victim of violent crimes — rape, robbery and assault — decline rapidly with age.

Nearly one out of 12 females will be the victim of an attempted or completed rape. For black females, the odds are 1 out of 9, according to the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics.

The study, based on figures compiled by the government's National Crime Survey from 1975 through 1984, said that 45 percent of black males will become victims of violent crime three or more times — almost double the possibility for black females (24 percent) and triple the likelihood for white females (13 percent). Thirty-seven percent of white males are likely to be victimized three or more times.

With age, "the likelihood of becoming the victim of a violent crime in the remainder of one's lifetime declines," the report said.

The report said that at age 12, 83 percent of all Americans are likely to be hit by violent crime or an attempt at violent crime in their lifetimes. But as they get older, the odds drop even faster than life expectancy.

The report said:

—72 percent of the nation's 20-year-olds will be victimized by violent crimes or attempted crimes;

—53 percent of the country's 30-year-olds;

—36 percent of 40-year-olds;

—22 percent of 50-year-olds;

—14 percent of 60-year-olds;

—8 percent of 70-year-olds.

It said 89 percent of 12-year-old boys will face one or more violent crimes or attempted crimes, and 73 percent of the girls.

No projections were made for children under 12 because the National Crime Survey does not interview anyone that young.

The bureau publishes crime victimization rates based on twice-a-year interviews with 101,000 persons in 49,000 households. They are asked about their own experiences, including any crimes not reported to the police.

This report was drawn from the approximately 2 million interviews conducted during the 10 years ending in 1984. The rape statistics, however, were projected from 1973-1982.

The report said a victim's sex and race appear to have a greater effect on the likelihood of being robbed than on other crimes.

An estimated three in 10 people will be victims of a completed or attempted robbery during their lifetimes, with blacks almost twice as likely to be robbed as whites and males about 70 percent more likely to be robbed than females.

An estimated two in five people will be injured as a result of a robbery or assault, and about one in 10 will be injured more than once, the report said.

"The chance of being an assault victim is much greater than the risk of being a robbery victim," said Steven R. Schlesinger, director of the bureau. "The likelihood of being a robbery victim is also much greater than the chance of being a rape victim."

The report noted that the "annual victimization rates" reported by the National Crime Survey have declined since 1981. If that trend continues, the likelihood of people being hit by violent crime during their lifetime will also fall.

Nearly everyone will be the victim of a personal theft at least once, with about seven in eight people victimized three or more times, the report said.

Justification is lacking for agency support fee

The central administration's method of generating revenue seems only to be generating the wrath of agency directors who are being forced to pay for an institutional support fee levied earlier this semester.

Two glaring discrepancies of the support fee need to be rectified if the administration ever intends to justify the ongoing tax.

While the intent of the administration to generate funds is certainly understandable and might even be admirable, the fact that only seven University agencies were taxed defies logic — so does the administration's plan to continue the annual support fee.

Admittedly, the administration was under pressure to raise funds quickly when, without due warning from Gov. Mike Hayden, the state's budget was inflicted with 3.8 percent across-the-board cuts. These cuts left the University scurrying to find alternative sources to refurbish its deflated monetary sources.

But the decision to take money by discriminately choosing seven agencies also caused great pain in lieu of the basis of the argument used by the administration.

The administration continues to uphold its belief that these agencies must now pay for services the University has previously provided free of charge.

However, the administration must recognize that services have also been provided by the agencies to the University. Furthermore, it must also consider the effect on the agencies forced to take the cuts.

Another chink in the administration's argument is that six Big Eight universities and three peer institutions have also enacted some sort of related support fee.

However, some directors said agency officials from other Big Eight universities denied that any such fee has been imposed. A sure way not to generate support for the fee levy is for the administration to selectively deceive the agencies and officials affected.

The adverse effect the fee charge is having on the agencies may have prompted Student Senate to allocate separate line item fees for two of these agencies — Student Publications Inc. and the Union.

Because the University will be exempted from the 3.8 percent budget reduction taken by the state on July 1, the administration should follow suit and abolish its fee charges. There is no justification now for the fee, and levying it would diminish the ability of the University to continue its strong standing in areas that would be unjustly weakened by the support charge.

Officials' cooperation begins cities' new era

It was a lesson in cooperative friendship: a group of neighbors getting together over lunch to discuss the betterment and future of their relationship.

This was the example set by representatives of Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley who met at a luncheon Thursday to discuss increased economic development and better communication between the three communities.

The meeting produced the concept of a nine-member task force, made up of three representatives from each community, to identify and further common goals.

One goal discussed was a regional airport to serve the three communities. Since air travel provides a vital mode of transportation to the area, a regional facility could attract larger and faster aircraft, making the area more accessible and attractive to outsiders.

Two other proposals, a fish hatchery/visitor education center and a resort at Milford Reservoir, would draw more tourists to the area, promoting greater economic possibilities.

In the past, the relationship between these communities has been more like that of the infamous Hatfield and McCoy feud than of regional neighbors. But, encouraging communication and the development of common goals will lead to many mutual benefits, and perhaps some of the positive, neighborly feelings of an era gone by can be revived.

The mayors and city managers, staff and commission members of Manhattan and Junction City, along with officials from Fort Riley, should be commended for their desire to help themselves and their communities. Residents and businesses can look forward to greater economic prosperity and an open line of communication in the future as a result of the insights and efforts of these officials.

Defense industry out of control

KIRK CARAWAY
Collegian Columnist

Things are looking better for Europe this week. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are seriously considering eliminating intermediate range nuclear missiles from European soil, a step that could lead to a permanent solution to the arms race and the threat of nuclear annihilation. Both sides now agree on the concept and are working to iron out the details, such as verification.

This is an event I didn't expect to see during Ronald Reagan's administration. Of course, I didn't expect the president to sell arms to Iran either. As it now looks, an arms control agreement may be the only good thing to come out of the Iranian arms scandal. A wise person once said, "When it looks as though you are going down in flames, change the subject." I don't know if changing the subject to arms control will save Reagan, but it can't hurt to try.

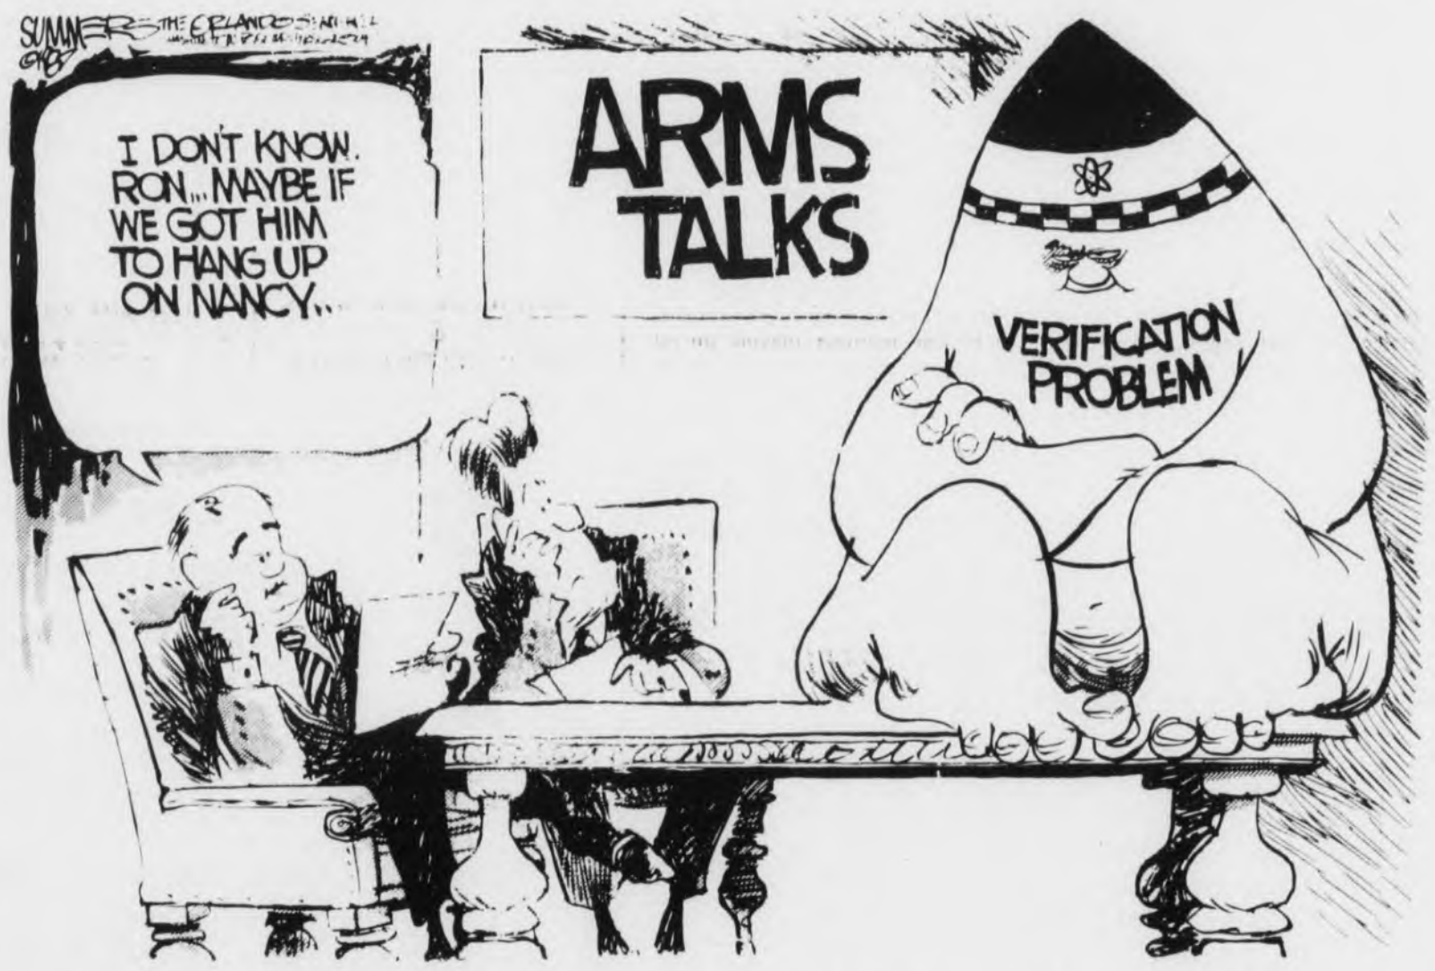
When I say Reagan's overtures toward arms control are unexpected, I don't mean to imply the president loves nuclear weapons. I believe his actions are guided more by a pro-big business philosophy than by any affection for ending the world. This is not so much his fault as the system's.

You see, there are people out there who really do love nuclear weapons. They don't love them for their massive destructive power or their pretty mushroom clouds, but rather for their profit margin. I am talking about the people who make nuclear weapons and related technology: the defense industry.

We have all heard the horror stories about the Department of Defense paying $800 for toilet seats and $400 for hammers. What we haven't heard is the reasons behind such foolish spending practices. Author Michael Parenti stated 90 percent of government contracts are awarded with no competitive bidding. With this system, a defense contractor can literally get whatever price he wants for his product.

Another factor in wasteful defense spending is the lack of any incentive for careful spending. Defense department employees who make up defense contracts have a great tendency to take early retirement in a high-paying defense industry job. If some Pentagon general can get the right contracts approved for the right companies, he can count on a private sector job that pays three times more than his current salary.

If a defense contractor can get $800 for a toilet seat, how much do you think he can get for a Pershing II missile? The last thing the defense industry wants is arms control. It doesn't want an all-out nuclear exchange, but it wouldn't mind a small conventional war. Wartime means big profits for the defense industry, as long as it is not in the line of fire. And if the Pentagon doesn't use up its products, the defense industry will make those products obsolete. After all, it's hard to use nuclear weapons without destroying the Earth. This may sound cold, but that's big business, American style.



The horizon doesn't look any brighter, either. The newest and biggest victory for the defense industry is the Strategic Defense Initiative, known as Star Wars. The billions of dollars being made available for research and development of a spaced-based defense shield is staggering to say the least. A whole host of companies are fighting to get a piece of the SDI pie. Once the original concept came about, hundreds of companies tried to sell the Pentagon on hundreds of different ideas about how to make a space shield.

I will leave the question of whether SDI is workable or not to the scientists for now. What we non-scientists should look at is the motives behind both sides. The scientists who claim SDI works have millions of dollars in research money as an incentive to say so. All they have to do is come up with an idea of how it might possibly work and the money is theirs, regardless of the outcome of the research. If a scientist says SDI doesn't work, he doesn't get any money. Given this, there are plenty of scientists willing to chase what could be a pipe dream if they are given enough money.

Then there is the corrupting influence this has on the political structure of the country. These defense contractors, some of the largest corporations in the world, also help to fund congressional and presidential campaigns. They give millions of dollars every year to help people with favorable views get elected to office. Those candidates with non-favorable views are accused of being "soft" on communism, or of being a spendthrift liberal. Then these defense industry candidates, such as Ronald Reagan, funnel billions of dollars to their supporters.

Some people are not that worried about defense spending because it creates jobs. This is true, but drugs and prostitution create jobs too. Just because something creates jobs doesn't mean it is desirable. Wouldn't this money be better spent on something constructive, rather than destructive? Studies done by Employment Research Associates and the Council of Economic Priorities show that money spent on education, health care, public safety or housing generate from two to three times more jobs than money spent on defense.

In order to understand this issue, it is important to understand the motives of the people involved. This pattern of defense spending is very dangerous, not only to our economic well-being, but to the well-being of the planet itself. Dwight Eisenhower once warned to beware of the industrial-military complex. Coming from an Army general, maybe we should have listened more closely.

'Real' students don't go to KU

PATRICK MUIR
Collegian Columnist

After graduating from high school with a class that was primarily bound for that great bastion of overindulgence and Eastern mimicry, the University of Kansas, it is no wonder I have contempt for this institution. These individuals really helped my educational experience by personally defining the concept of conspicuous consumption. How fulfilling can life continue to be for high school students who have been to the Plaza every weekend, joined each exclusive country club and run out of proms to attend? The obvious answer for the majority of my graduating class was to enroll at KU.

There were a few of us with a sense of adventure who decided life surely had more meaning. We were the kind who thought "pep" clubs were for social retards. We wanted to do our own thing, get away from mom and dad, go where few Johnson Countians had gone before. We wanted to go to Kansas State University.

I truly hope we are not a dying breed. I think there are a lot of these kind of people trying to find themselves. It is our duty as K-State students who stand for a way of life to help these developing minds find out about this great institution hidden in the prairies of Kansas. We need to be aggressive in fighting the enrollment efforts of the evil empire to the east.

We need to market ourselves to those minds yearning to break free, those teenagers sick of "pep" and anybody who has ever had to go to The Wheel and pretend to enjoy it. So how do we go about it? Marketing.

The first thing we have to do is hit KU where it hurts. We need to attack Kansas City with an aggressive campaign. KU would like to believe outstanding recruitment is responsible for its increased enrollment. The only recruitment that has made any difference is its basketball efforts. Let's be honest — they are really only successful because Lawrence is becoming a suburb of Kansas City. We need to turn this disadvantage into an advantage.

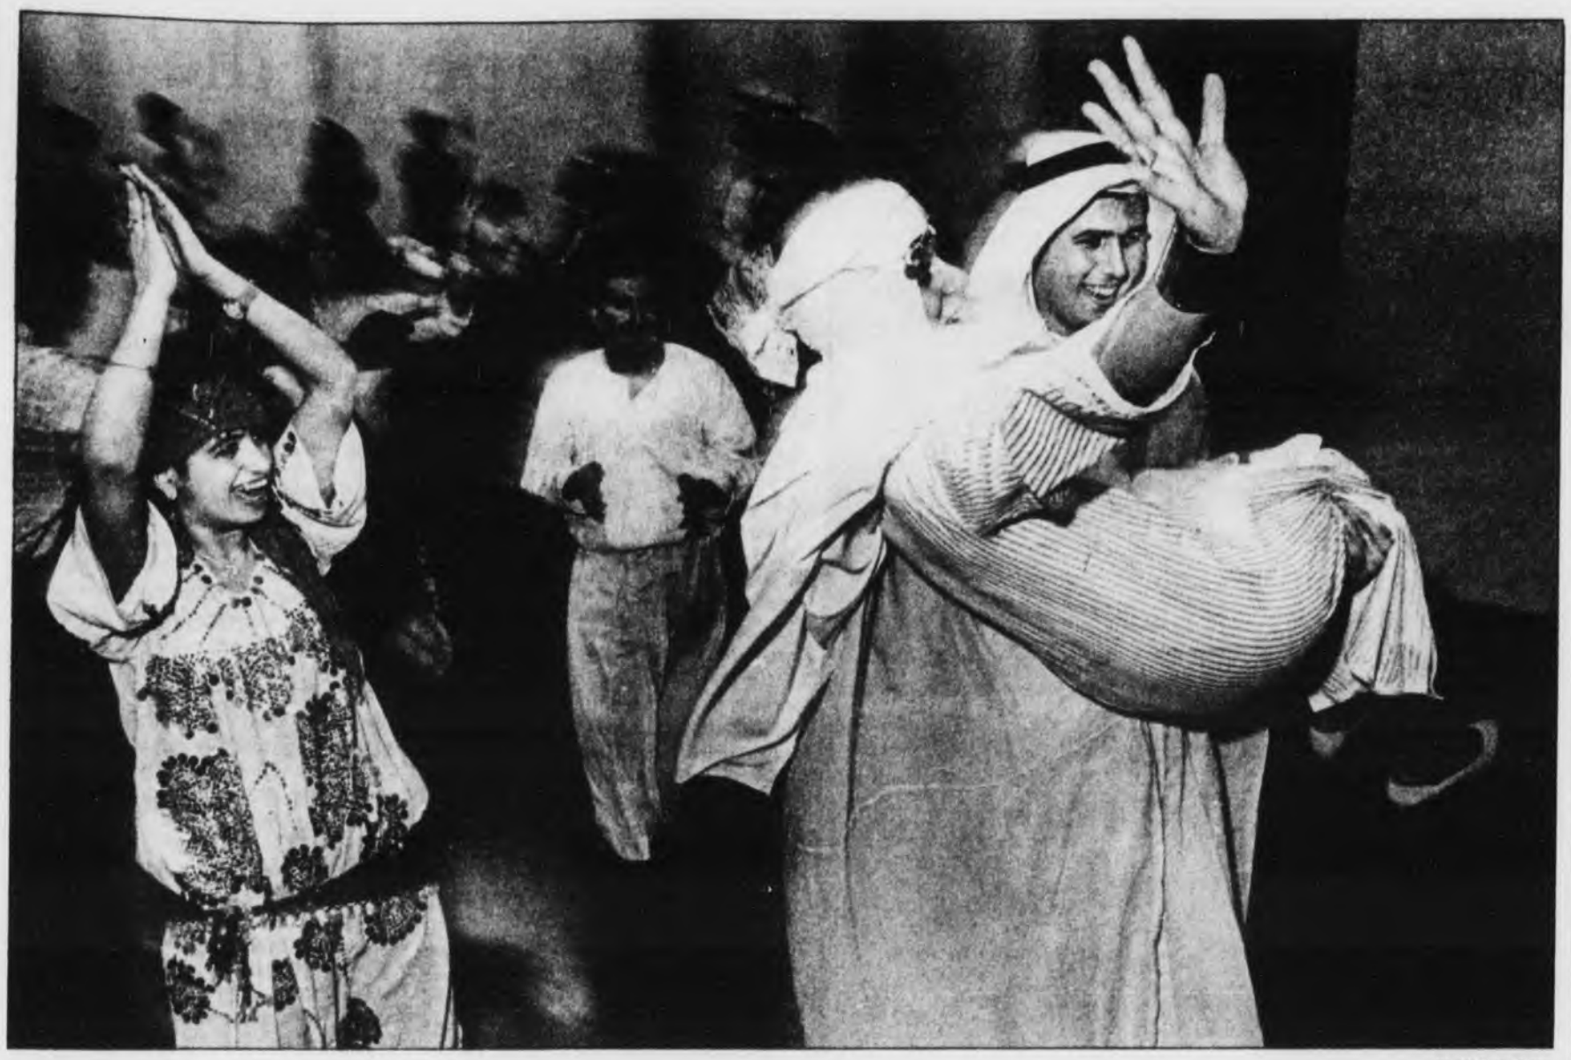
For instance, we could run testimonials on radio stations with a KU student — speaking in a nasal tone of course — whining about his parents always dropping by to visit. Then the announcer could ask the audience whether they want to go to college with their parents or break free and really learn something at K-State, like independence.

We could also run TV ads all over the state which feature those left-wing liberals who are always protesting over there. A good clip would be the recent one with a KU student holding up an "Impeach Reagan" sign. Perhaps their police department has a good file we could use, just like ours does. After seeing such an ad, what kind of God-fearing parents would send their child to such a place?

After these few mild attempts we could become real nasty and publish a calendar titled "The Nerds of the University of Kansas." We could hire our ambassadors to dress like nerds and go undercover as KU students. We could send them all over the state promoting the calendar and really help them out with their public relations.

If these strategies prove successful, we can become really creative. The midnight before KU's open house, during a raid, we could donate our infamous purple trash cans and strategically locate them in prominent positions. It certainly couldn't help their enrollment; we all know they haven't helped us.

We could also donate the Wildcat mobile in the Union to their art museum. If they don't accept it, we can say they are ungrateful. If they do accept it, we can then spread the word that they have no taste.



If all these creative attempts are incorporated into a coordinated campaign, we could take on KU while increasing retention by getting everybody at our campus involved. We can start over spring break by spreading every nasty rumor and stereotype we can imagine.

Of course, we have many bright signs in K-State's future, including the possibility of an enrollment cap at KU. I know I can't wait. But we have a lot of work to do. We have to attack the abundance of community colleges in the state. While these institutions pose as higher education facilities, we are losing potential students. If you do have the opportunity, impress upon your representatives that these colleges are a threat to a high standard of education in the state.

Let's do all we can to promote K-State on a personal level. My above strategies are of course tongue-in-cheek proposals. But the aggressiveness in our promotion should be there. We all know KU is hard at it.

By talking to prospective students and inviting people up for the weekend we can increase both the enrollment and also the available funds at K-State. A decrease of funds hurts us all in the pocketbook and K-State in the long run. So let's all begin to treat recruitment as something that affects us all and something we can improve upon.

If we can have any impact on being competitive with KU it would be personally gratifying. I am sick and tired of the University of Kansas. They act like they are going to Harvard, that they are the only people in the country who think public transportation is chic and that Mark Turgeon is cool. This is the "flagship" university of our state? Let's get competitive or bomb it. We have no choice if culture and independence are to survive.

Audience experiences Mideast lifestyle

By TERESA TEMME
Staff Writer

Lively rhythms, colorful costumes and swirling dancers highlighted Saturday evening's Arabian Night in CiCo Park.

The Arab Student Association and International Coordinating Council provided a slice of Arab culture to a crowd of about 250.

"The audience responded very well," said Raouf Dabbas, junior in business administration and president of the association. "We received good feedback from the people. I believe people don't know what the Middle East is like until they experience it. This (Arabian Night) is a place for people to experience it."

The evening began with a dinner featuring a variety of Middle Eastern foods such as chicken with rice, stuffed grape leaves, jajeek (cucumber with yogurt and garlic), safeeha (a bread covered with a meat mixture), tabouleh (containing parsley, tomato and barley), pita bread and hommos (crushed garbanzo beans). Baklava, a sweet pastry with nuts, was served for dessert.

After the dinner a narrated slide show depicted five countries of the Middle East — Syria, Jordan, Morocco, Egypt and Iraq. The slides presented everything from the ancient ruins and monuments of the Arab states to modern cities such as Cairo, Egypt.

A colorful fashion show featured both the similarities and differences in Arab dress from country to country. Costumes varied from simple everyday wear to ornately decorated gowns, robes and headpieces. Some were modern versions of women's traditional dress.

Several students in the association performed dances that originated in Egypt and Iraq and varied in style and degree of emotion. The women's gold earrings, bracelets and the metallic threads of their traditional costumes shimmered in the light with the dancers' movements. The audience, caught up in the fast-paced beat, clapped along.

Music for the dancers was provided by one member playing an ud (Arabic for lute) and another beating rhythms on a durbaka — a type of drum. There were also solos and duets on the two instruments.

Periodically throughout the evening, items from Arab countries were raffled off. Prizes included an Arabian rug, a plaque with wooden engraving and mother-of-pearl face, a "Victory To Palestine" T-shirt and a scarf.

The evening ended with a mock traditional Arab wedding, which incorporated several Middle Eastern wedding customs. The women, candles in hand, made the first appearance on the stage bringing in the bride. The men brought in the groom from a separate entrance in the back of the room.

Music, shrill yells, chanting and dancing added to the excitement of the mock wedding. The audience was invited to join in the dancing as members of the wedding party congratulated the happy couple.

After the wedding festivities, the entire troupe paraded out of the room. Laughter rang out from the audience as the "bridegroom" lifted his "bride" in his arms and carried her out of the room.

Members of the audience lingered after the performance to congratulate the students on the success of Arabian Night

"I think the dances in the wedding ceremony especially showed the culture and customs," said Fahimeh Niroomand, graduate student in food science.

Memorandums differ from Tower review

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An in-house adviser to Attorney General Edwin Meese, in an opinion issued shortly after disclosure of the U.S. arms sales to Iran, said the White House did not violate congressional reporting requirements and that an oral go-ahead from President Reagan was sufficient for one of the shipments.

The legal opinions by Assistant Attorney General Charles J. Cooper, which back the Reagan administration's handling of the arms sales, are sharply at odds with the conclusions reached by the Tower commission.

The legal memorandums, prepared for Meese and supplied to the Tower board, were released last week in response to a request from The Associated Press.

One legal opinion by Cooper concludes there was no violation of a requirement under the National Security Act for timely notification of Congress when the administration failed to tell key congressmen about the arms sales.

The Tower report concluded that notification appears to be a requirement. The report says Congress should have been notified shortly after Reagan's Jan. 17, 1986, written authorization for the arms sales failed to gain the expected release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

The administration never did notify Congress, and the deals with Iran didn't become public until last November, about 15 months after the shipments began.

A second opinion by Cooper concludes that it was sufficient legally for Reagan to have given oral authorization for one of the arms shipments that took place in November 1985 involving the CIA.

The Tower panel said it doubted an oral go-ahead was sufficient.

Cooper's opinions were written in December of last year, a month and a half after the initial disclosure of the arms sales to Iran and about three weeks after disclosure that some of the profits from the sales may have been diverted to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The opinions, both dated Dec. 17 and drafted at Meese's request, were written amid growing criticism on Capitol Hill that the Reagan administration had broken the law by not informing Congress of the Iran initiative. The CIA's involvement in the November 1985 shipment was emerging publicly in news accounts about the time Cooper's opinions were requested.

The United States also shipped arms to Iran last year in the months of February, May, August and October.

The disagreement reflects a longstanding division between Congress and the administration about proper notification.

Officials involved in the passage of the notification requirement during the Carter administration said congressmen debated enacting language that would have required notification within 48 hours after a covert operation was begun, but they were told that President Carter would veto such a provision as an infringement on his constitutional powers to conduct foreign policy.

The CIA supported the November 1985 shipment of 18 Hawk anti-aircraft missiles to Iran after initial arrangements for an Israeli flight through Lisbon, Portugal, collapsed.

Afghanistan native leaves homeland, 'must escape or die'

By CHAD L. SANBORN
Staff Writer

As Shafiullah Ahmadullah passed by the once-beautiful farmland of his native Afghanistan, he thought it now looked like a junkyard. Abandoned army trucks and destroyed tanks were scattered over the fields. His homeland had changed so much and he was leaving with only one thought in his mind: escape or die.

Since the Afghan Communists took control of the government in 1978 and the Soviets invaded in 1979, the lives of Shafiullah and his family have been greatly unsettled — so unsettled that they chose to leave their homeland rather than live in a world of torture and oppression. They now live in Great Bend, and Shafiullah, a junior, and his brother Ahmad Jawid, a sophomore, are both in electrical engineering. But the circumstances leading to the Ahmadullahs' move to America in 1981 are horrifying.

His father, Ahmadullah Ahmadullah, still has scars from a 48-hour torture session with the police in Afghanistan. Shafiullah, besides knowing many stories of his fellow students who were tortured or killed, has felt the pain of a machine gun bullet ripping through his flesh.

Shafiullah Ahmadullah hates communism.

"To me communism means something other than what the dictionary says," he said. "To me it means cruelty against humanity. The dictionary says something else."

Shafiullah's father had lived in the United States in the 1950s and studied engineering and mining at the University of Utah. In the early 1970s his father was the Minister of the Interior in the Afghan government. As Minister of the Interior, he was head of police, Shafiullah said. With the Communist takeover came a new police force. Because Ahmadullah's policemen and Communist demonstrators had clashed in the past, his father was considered an enemy of the Communists. Soon after the takeover, Shafiullah's father was arrested.

"He was gone for 48 hours," Shafiullah said. "He lost some teeth and had some broken ribs. They hooked electrodes up to his toes and electrocuted him with a hand generator. They took burning oil, like cooking oil, and splashed it on him. To this day he still has scars where they burned his legs with cigarette butts."

He said the police in Afghanistan won't let very many people gather together. If more than three people stand together, the police will separate them. Demonstrations are not tolerated.

"They try to keep the girls and boys separated. At a single demonstration the police killed 200 girls," he said. "Once I was demonstrating and the police were taking pictures of the demonstrators. Later, those students began disappearing."

The university classes in Afghanistan are different from American universities. Students have the same people in all their classes, Shafiullah said. At the beginning of Shafiullah's last semester at the university in Kabul, Afghanistan, 48 students were enrolled in his classes. By semester's end, only 18 were left.

"They (the Communists) would come and get people out of classrooms. There would be a knock at the door and they would ask someone to step outside. Then you would never see or hear from them again," he said.

If someone goes looking for the missing person, they too might disappear or at least be lied to, Shafiullah said.

"Suppose a man goes to work and never comes home. If the wife goes asking what happened to him she will be told to forget him," he said. "They (the government) tell most of the people that the missing people left for the mountains and joined the rebels."

After the photographed students started disappearing, Shafiullah quit school. Later that week he was riding down a street with a friend when a couple of soldiers recognized him from the photographs.

"They tried to stop us. I told my friend not to. As we turned a corner I heard machine gun fire. A bullet went through the back of his Toyota, through the front seat and into my right shoulder," he said.

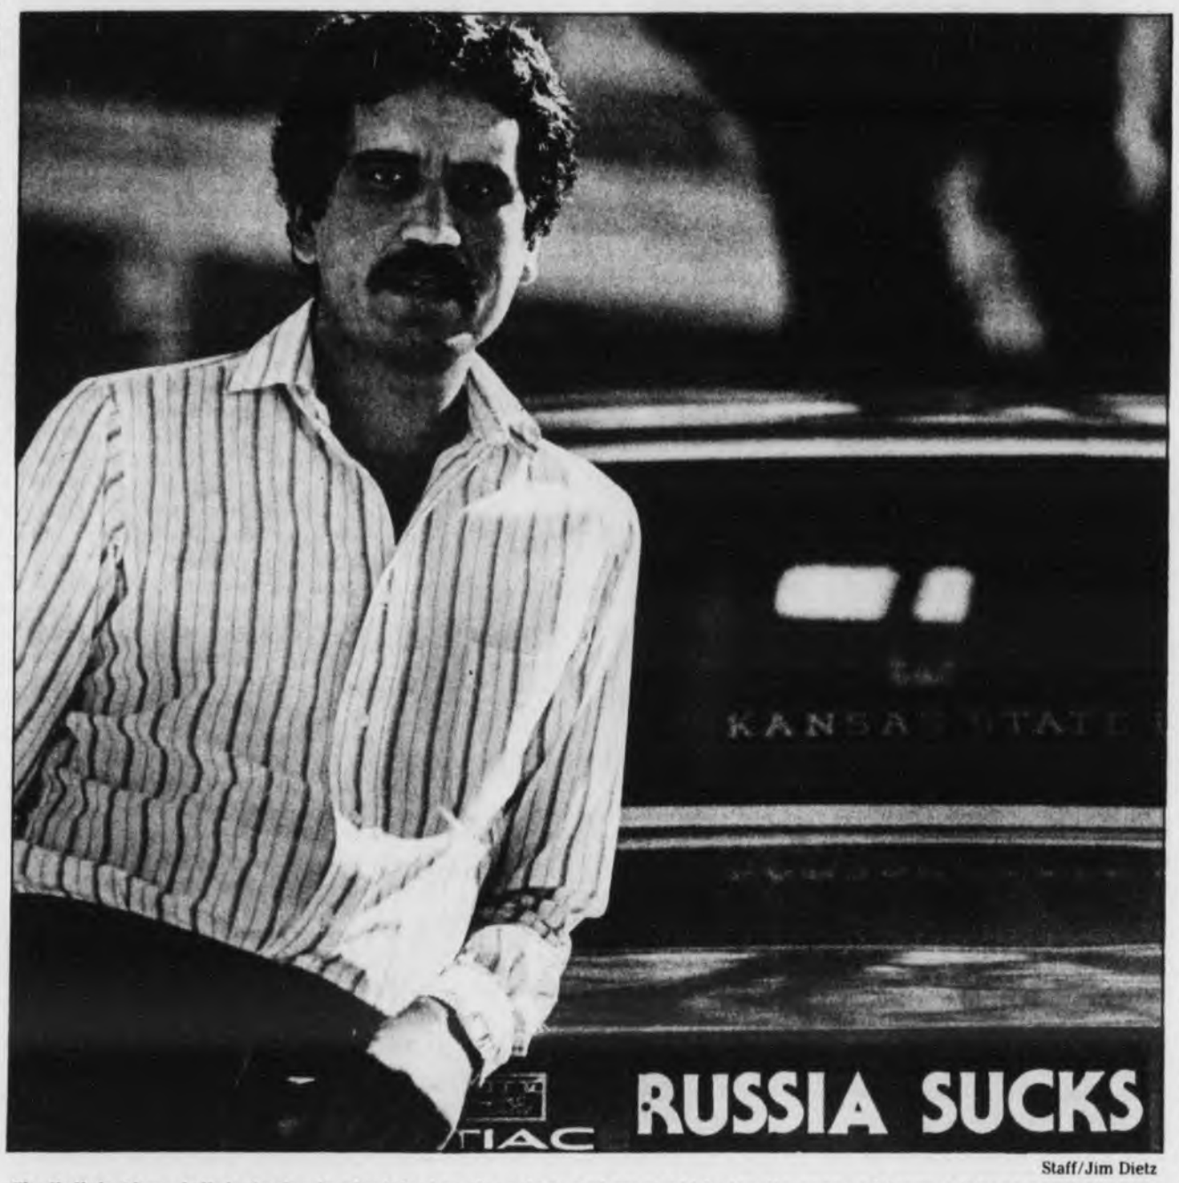
The hospital told Shafiullah's family he had been in a car accident.

In April 1980, shortly after Shafiullah's "accident," the Ahmadullah family decided they had to leave Afghanistan. But the government wasn't giving out passports, and his family was being watched closely, he said.

But Shafiullah's mother, Shahbubu, was allowed to go to India to receive arthritis treatment not available in Afghanistan, accompanied by Shafiullah's three brothers. For Shafiullah and his father, leaving would be more difficult.

Passports are not required for farmers to cross into Pakistan and trade their produce. A merchant-friend of Shafiullah's forged some documents saying Shafiullah owned a truckload of fruit. As he was leaving Afghanistan for Pakistan only one thing was on his mind.

"When a man is doing something that dangerous, it is very simple. Either you make it or you die," he said. "But if I didn't even try, I would die anyway."



His father's escape was much tougher.

Shafiullah said most of the refugees escape into Pakistan through the mountains at night. However, his father went to the southwest part of Afghanistan and rode a motorcycle through the desert at night. The two were reunited in Pakistan and went to America.

Shafiullah's sister and her husband and child are still in Afghanistan, he said. She was pregnant at the time his family left. Although the Ahmadullahs can write to her, the letters are censored. They can telephone her provided they place a request for a call one month in advance.

Shafiullah and his father reunited with his mother and brothers in Pittsburg, Ohio, on July 7, 1981. His father began teaching engineering at a community college, and Shafiullah worked odd jobs.

Veterans office hopes to improve existing services with federal funds

By CHRIS DOLL
Staff Writer

The Veterans Affairs Office may receive more than $70,000, due to the Veterans Educational Outreach Program passed by Congress last fall, said Lorene Dahm, administrative officer for the office.

The bill has been approved, but the proposed $15 million to fund the program has not been allocated by Congress. President Reagan wants the bill to be rescinded, she said.

The office hopes to use the money to improve the existing services such as educational, personal and vocational, and to expand the staff, Dahm said. But the government will stipulate uses for the money.

Dahm said she would like to expand the staff because the number of students who are veterans may increase due to the new GI bill which took effect in 1985. The bill attributes a minimum of $250 a month for education after students serve two years in the armed forces.

"Most enter (the armed forces) for the educational benefits," Dahm said. "I think there will be a steady increase in the number of students."

The office, which employs Dahm full time and three students part time, is funded through Student Financial Assistance and a $500 federal grant.

The amount of money each university will receive depends on the number of veterans enrolled. Dahm said she knows of 462 undergraduates enrolled at K-State.

But the actual number may be many more, she said. The office does not know which students are veterans unless they mark it on their admission applications.

"There's no way of knowing if they are (veterans) if they did not answer the question on the application, or if they marked 'No,'" Dahm said.

A survey of students known by the office to be veterans showed 10 percent of them did not answer the question correctly, she said.

To verify students are veterans, the office must have a copy of DD214 discharge papers.

"We're asking students to bring the forms to the financial aid office so we can prove they are attending school," Dahm said.

The University receives $300 for each disabled veteran, $250 for undergraduates who entered the armed forces after 1977 and $100 for each veteran who entered after July 1985, Dahm said.

It wasn't a Sunday picnic, but turned out to be a...

Big Barbecue

Manhattan Township Volunteer Fire Department and the Ogden Fire Department personnel let a house south of Manhattan burn after a morning of rescue and fire-fighting drills.

While volunteer firefighters worked diligently to contain the flames, it took only about one hour to create a pile of ashes from what was once a small farmhouse.

The Manhattan Township Volunteer Fire Department and the Ogden Fire Department had the chance Sunday to practice fire-fighting and rescue skills at an old, asphalt-shingled house in Hunters Island, an area south of Manhattan.

The owner wanted the house destroyed, and the firefighters needed the practice, said Terry Heyns, professor of aerospace studies and a National Fire Protection Certified Instructor 3. The levels of certification run from 1-4, with four being the top level.

The day began early with ladder practice for the volunteers. The men practiced using a roof ladder — a ladder equipped with folding hooks at one end used to anchor the ladder over the roof ridge. The ladder lies flat on the roof, allowing the firefighters to stand on it to do work such as chopping a ventilation hole through the roof.

Other ladders were set up to practice rescue techniques. They practiced bringing a conscious and unconscious victim down a ladder. The victim is lowered out a window by one firefighter to another waiting on the ladder. The victim straddles the rescuer's knee, wraps his or her arms around the rescuer and is gently lowered, rung by rung, as the rescuer slowly descends the ladder.

Throughout the practices, the men joked and laughed interjecting the rescues with "help me, help me" in feigned female voices. But underneath the lightheartedness, the volunteers were attentive, understanding the seriousness of the drills. This knowledge could save lives — even their own.

A light breeze did not relieve the heat of the day that was increased by the heavy fire-fighting gear volunteers wore. The cumbersome coats have a heat-repellant lining and a fire-repellant shell. This, added to the heavy rubber leg boots, pants and helmets, shields skin from the searing heat encountered when fighting fires.

After rescues, the men tried various forced entry and ventilation procedures they had seen on training films. Breaking windows and otherwise ventilating the house allows gases and smoke to escape.

Since homes may be locked, different forced entry techniques were tried to get into the houses. For a door with a window this meant merely breaking the window, reaching inside and unlocking the door. For a solid door, the volunteers used a crowbar to pry the lock from the door casing.

Once the windows were broken and the house properly ventilated, two small fires were set in the house.

As the flames spread through the deserted living room and crept across the ceiling, the volunteer firemen went in attempting to extinguish the flame. When the nozzle was opened, water streamed toward the base of the flames, fire streaked backward across the ceiling toward the firemen, setting their equipment on fire.

The safety officers, chosen because they have more experience, got the volunteers out, and the fire was brought under control and put out.

During the practice drill, the "nozzle man" learned a very valuable lesson. Instead of opening the nozzle at the base of the flame, he should have aimed the stream of water toward the top of the flame and worked down, Heyns said. This would have prevented the flames from coming around behind them and burning them, he said. Both men were fine after the drill.

"I didn't like that at all," said Mitch Kratochvil, assistant fire chief of the volunteer fire department in Tattarax, located north of Manhattan. The nylon strap of his compressed air tank had caught on fire during the drill.

That is why the experience is so valuable, Heyns said. The volunteers can learn and make mistakes here where it doesn't matter like it would in a real emergency, he said.

After the volunteers set two small fires and extinguished them, it was time to set the entire house on fire and let it burn. The reason behind the whole day was, after all, to destroy the house.

The ventilation was purposely planned to keep the fire away from power lines located near one side of the house. Once the blaze was set, volunteers practiced containing the fire to prevent the power lines, surrounding trees and grasses from igniting.

By turning a hose nozzle on "fog" to spread the water (like through a showerhead), a firefighter can advance toward the fire using the water as a shield and not be bothered too much by the heat. When he is close enough, he can turn the nozzle back, giving the water flow a more direct stream to contain or extinguish the fire.

The hoses used to fight a fire come in various sizes. A 150-foot-1½-inch circumference hose produces about 137 pounds of pressure and requires two firefighters to handle, Heyns said. It would take three or more firefighters to handle a 2½-inch circumference hose.

The volunteers used "wet water," which is like soapy water, Heyns said. It breaks down the surface tension of the water and penetrates more, therefore putting out the fire more effectively, he said.

It took less than one hour to reduce the two-story farmhouse to smoldering rubble, but the remains could burn for days, Heyns said.

"It's eerie to stand and watch what was once someone's house burn down, " said Judy Portuese, whose husband, Danny, is fire chief of the Hunters Island volunteer fire department.

Lorena Lutz, 83, is the owner of the land and the house. She arrived after the house was mostly destroyed and said it was "emotional in a way." Although she has never lived in the house it had been owned by her family since the '30s.

"God bless her," Heyns said after thanking Lutz. "I bet that was hard on her."

It was a noble purpose because the volunteers had a chance to do things they had never done before, he said.

Once the drills were over, some of the volunteers were called to a real emergency while the others began the cleanup process. The hoses needed to be drained, compressed-air tanks replenished and the rest of the equipment cleaned and sorted.

And just before dark, the firefighters returned and watered down the remains of the house to be certain the fire was extinguished and safe.

K-State basketball teams qualify for NCAAs

Wildcats to challenge SEC member Georgia

By Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — NCAA tournament officials met at the Hyatt Regency Hotel this weekend to deliberate over who belonged in the NCAA men's basketball postseason tournament and who would be left in the wings.

K-State Coach Lon Kruger said he believed the Wildcats "solidified" their chances of making the 64-team field by defeating Nebraska Friday in the first round of the Big Eight Conference tournament.

As it turned out, he was correct.

CBS Sports, who has covered the majority of the tourney games since 1984, ended the speculation at 4:30 p.m. Sunday by revealing the 64-team field, which included K-State, in the hotel's lobby to approximately 50 bystanders and selection committee members.

K-State, seeded ninth in the West Regional, will take on No. 8 Georgia in a first-round game at 1:07 p.m. (CST) in Salt Lake City. The winner will face top-seeded UNLV.

"We're pleased about the invitation of course, and excited about the opportunity, and I'm especially pleased for the players," Kruger said.

"They've worked awfully hard, and for a group of young men who didn't know each other a few moths ago, they've really come together well and are being rewarded for it," he added.

Kruger said playing at Salt Lake City shouldn't affect his team's play.

"At this point of the season, it's rare if you get to stay close to home," he said. "Of course we'd like to (play closer to Manhattan) so the fans would have more of an opportunity to go, but it's still a good reward."

Lady Cats to tackle Big 10's Northwestern

By Staff and Wire Reports

K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman said "it was close," but the Lady Cats were one of 21 teams receiving at-large berths to the 40-team NCAA women's basketball tournament.

K-State, 22-8 and seeded ninth in the Midwest Regional, will play No. 8 Northwestern University in a first-round game 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Evanstaon, Ill. The winner takes on top-seeded Louisiana Tech.

"KU of course drew the automatic bid and they knew all week that they were going. I think Missouri's record was deserving of them being able to go, but I knew that we were going to be ranked ahead of them and it was going to be close for us," Mossman said.

"It feels good, of course, and I'm very happy the NCAA picked us."

"(Northwestern) is 19-9 and they finished 12-6 in the Big Ten Conference race with a third-place finish. They were 12-3 on their home court this year, with the three losses coming against...teams all ranked in the Top 20," Mossman said.

"Personnel-wise they are a lot like us," she added. "They have four people averaging in double figures, with nobody averaging more than 12.6 (points per game)."

Texas, which will host the Final Four, was made top seed in the NCAA Division 1 women's basketball tournament Sunday and gained a first-round bye in the East bracket.

The Longhorns, 28-1, will play in the second round against the winner of the South Alabama-St. Joseph's, Pa., first-round game.

Auburn, Long Beach State and Louisiana Tech were the other top seeds announced by the Division I women's basketball committee.

Missouri crushes 'Cats' bid for Big Eight finals

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State's hopes of advancing to the Big Eight Conference's postseason basketball tournament finals for the first time since 1980 were crushed Saturday at Kemper Arena.

Against Missouri, the Wildcats couldn't stave off the Tigers' second-half rally and lost the semifinal match, 72-69.

"I thought it was a heckuva ball game," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "I was proud of the ball game. However, (I was) very disappointed at the same time. Anytime you lose, you are disappointed."

K-State was in control of the first half of play, and showed the intensity and enthusiasm needed to beat the Tigers. This resulted in a 10-point 'Cat lead at the half, 37-27.

Missouri freshman Nathan Buntin picked up the slack, however, by scoring 13 points off the bench. Buntin finished the game with a career-high 28 points, shooting 11 of 13 from the field.

In the teams' two previous meetings, Buntin averaged 16 points.

"He (Buntin) sure likes to play against Kansas State," Kruger said. "We were aware he was a great player, but he just had a great day."

In the second half, the 'Cats had a dry spell midway through the period characteristic of the spells that caused them to lose six games this season by five points or less.

Holding a 49-37 lead with 14:15 left in the game, the 'Cats went on the skids and were outscored 15-2 the next 5:30 as Missouri took a 52-51 lead.

Will Scott, who came out of his shooting slump and scored 11 points in the game, fouled out with 6:49 showing on the clock. After this, K-State led the game just once more, 64-63, with 1:59 remaining.

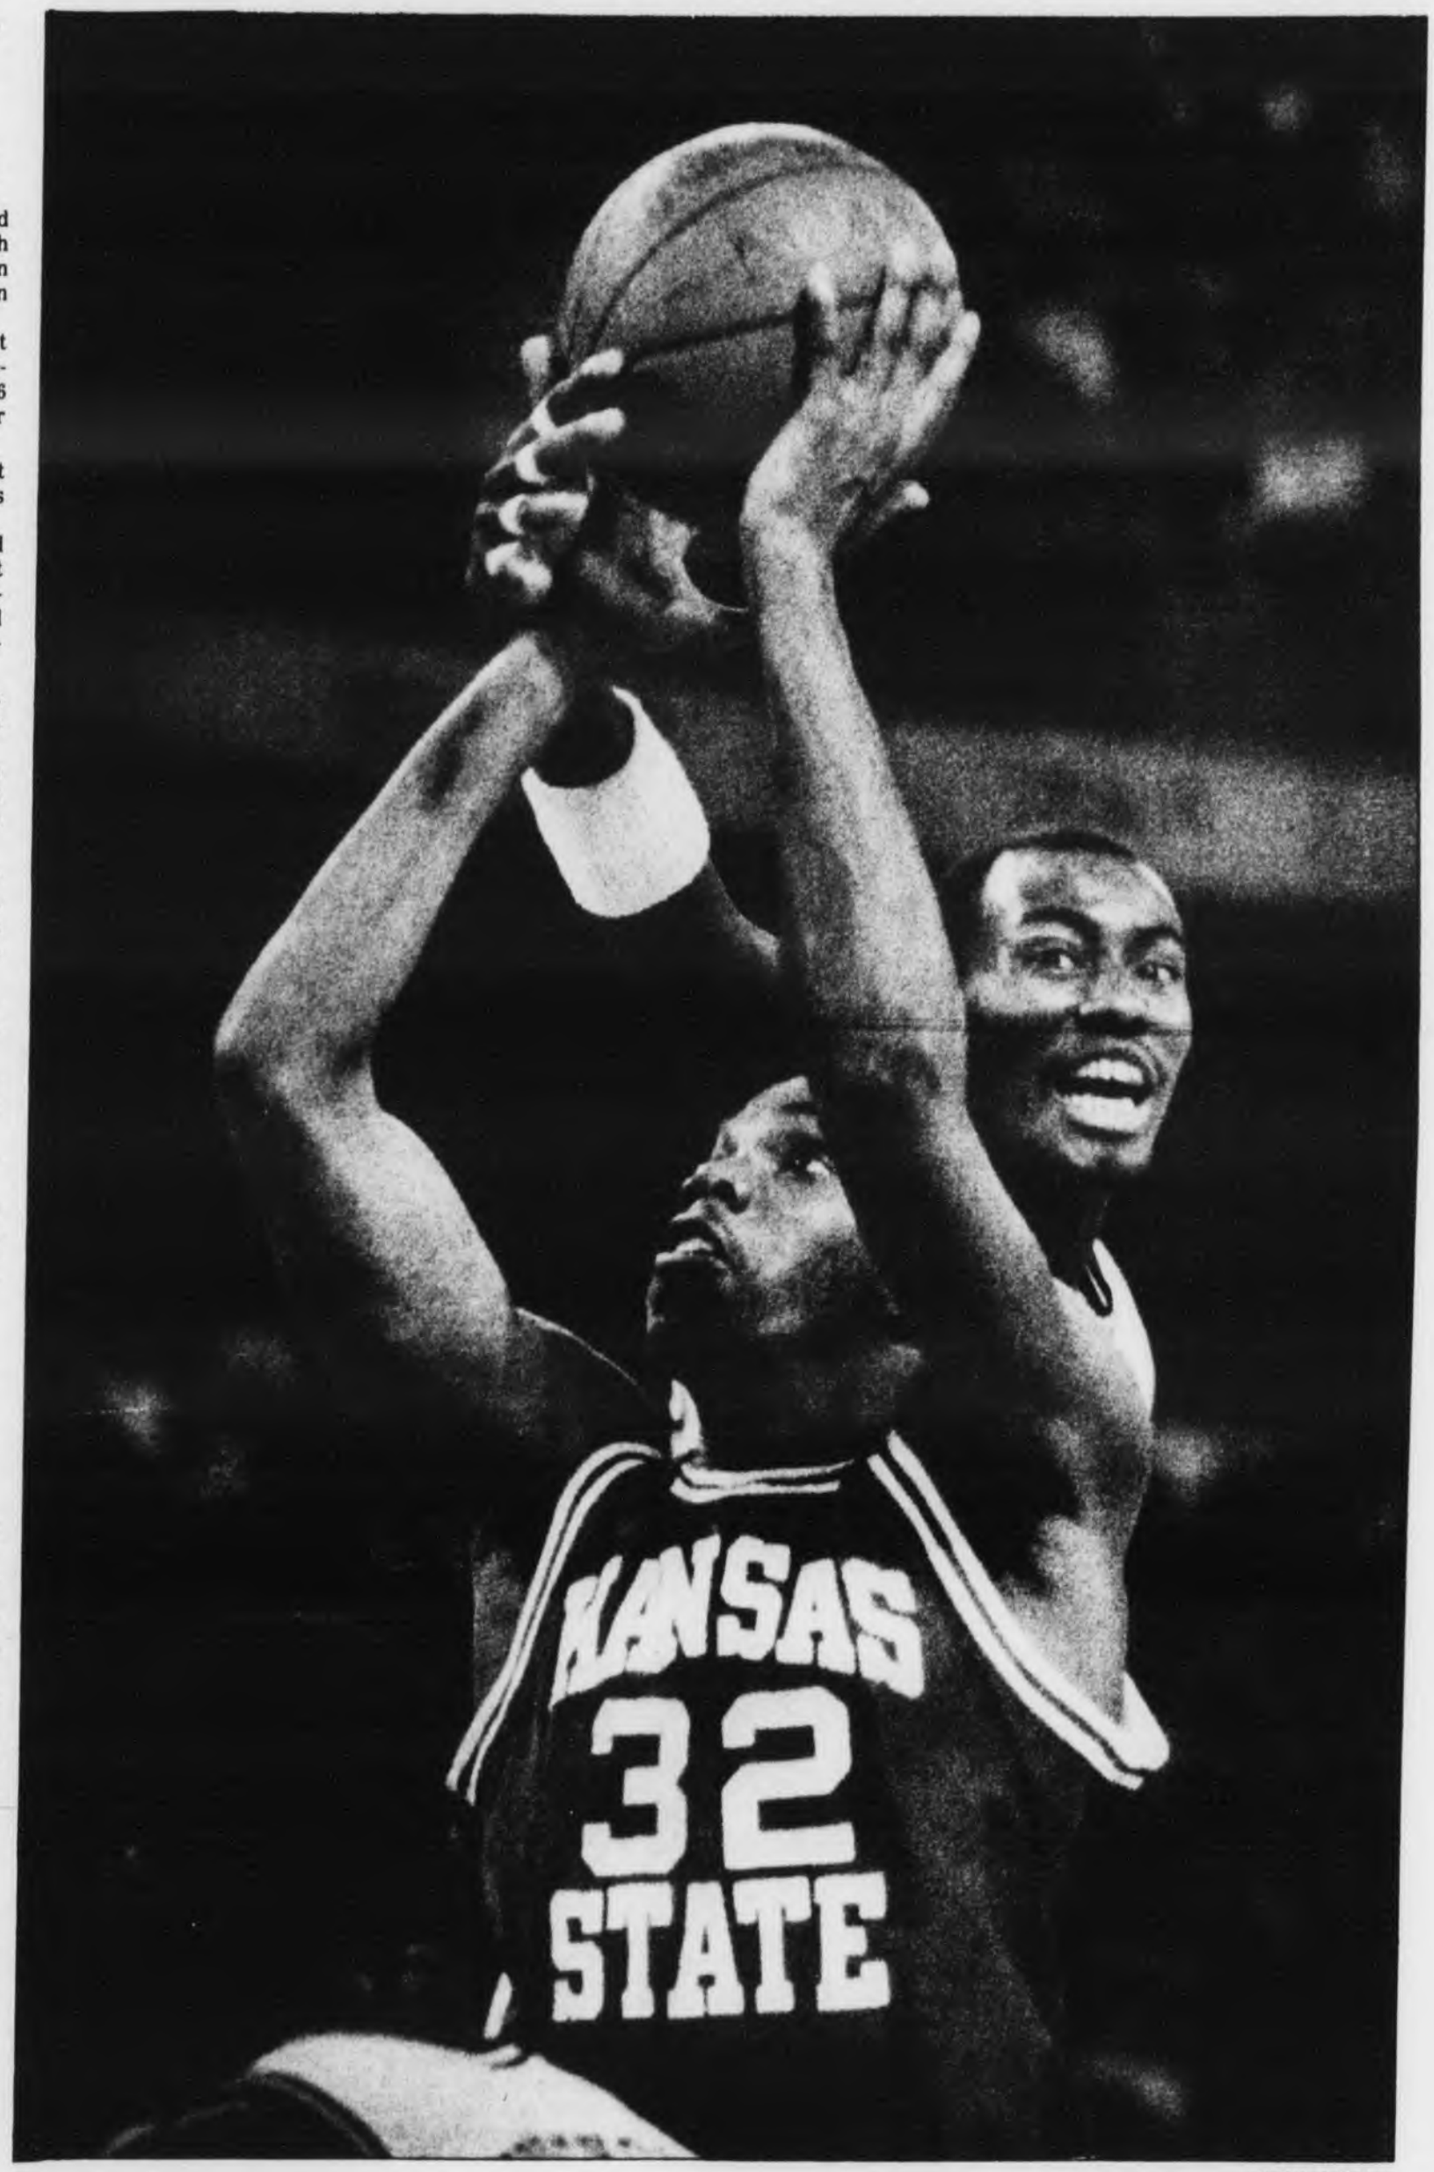
Buntin was fouled on the Tigers' next possession and made the front end of a one-and-one to give Missouri a 69-67 lead with :16 left. K-State then turned the ball over under the Missouri basket.

Smith was forced to foul Buntin, who went to the line and canned two more free throws to put the Tigers up by five, 72-67.

'Cat forward Mitch Richmond scored K-State's last points when he hit an 18-foot jumper with seven seconds. A Charles Bledsoe 24-foot jump shot at the buzzer that would have tied the score fell short of the goal, giving Missouri the three-point win.

A deciding factor in the game was Missouri's tenacity on the boards. The Tigers outrebounded K-State 35-23.

"They (Missouri) really dominated us on the boards," Coleman said. "That really hurt us because our game is strong when we hit the boards."



Norris Coleman, K-State's leading scorer and rebounder averaging 22.4 points and 8.9 rebounds per game, was held to eight points and collected one rebound coming off the bench.

Kruger said another turning point in the second half was Missouri's full-court pressure that created seven 'Cat turnovers.

Chievous scored 12 second-half points and became Missouri's career-leading scorer with 1,837 points.

K-State was led in scoring by Mitch Richmond with 17 points.

The Wildcats' opening-round 47-45 win against Nebraska turned into poor shooting efforts by both teams. Nebraska shot 36 percent from the field, while K-State was 19 for 45 from the field for 42.3 percent.

Staff/Andy Nelson

Missouri center Nathan Buntin blocks the shot of K-State center Charles Bledsoe during the first half of the semifinal game of the Big Eight postseason tournament Saturday in Kemper Arena. Buntin led the Tigers to a 63-60 win over the Wildcats with 28 points.

Manning, Chievous rewrite school career scoring marks

By DAVE WAGNER
Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Highlights of the Big Eight Conference men's basketball postseason tournament were numerous. There was little complaint about the business of the tournament as the conference-run event went off without a hitch.

Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs, though, had a different reaction.

"If you think that this is a neutral court you're crazy," Tubbs said after his team fell to Kansas Saturday in a semifinal game.

Tubbs said he challenged conference officials after the game to move the tourney next year so an advantage won't always be given to Missouri, Kansas and K-State.

The current Danny Manning-Derrick Chievous era in Big Eight basketball saw them rewrite a few pages of their school's record books Saturday, each setting individual career scoring records.

Chievous scored 20 points in a 72-69 victory over K-State, becoming the all-time scoring leader at Missouri with 1,837 points, one more than Steve Stepanovich scored in 1979-83.

Manning scored 27 points in an 82-77 victory over Oklahoma, becoming the all-time scoring leader at Kansas with 1,901 points, 13 more than Clyde Lovelette scored in 1950-52.

This was the first time in Big Eight history that two players have set individual school scoring records on the same day. Both are juniors.

On Sunday, Manning became the Big Eight tournament's all-time leading scorer with 173 points in his tournament career enroute to a single scoring tournament record with 89 points. He passed former Wildcat Rolando Blackman who finished his career with 170 points, and Wayman Tysdale of Oklahoma who had 84 points in the 1984 tourney.

K-State's Norris Coleman didn't start in either of the two tourney games for the Wildcats as he was replaced in the starting lineup by sophomore Lance Simmons.

Coleman said the change was something new to him because he has always been a starter since he was a junior in high school.

"If contributing to the team from the bench is what coach wants me to do," Coleman said, "then I'll just do the best I can from the bench."

Coleman played a total of 43 minutes for the 'Cats — 22 minutes against Nebraska and 21 in the Missouri game.

Tigers outbattle Kansas for title, 67-65

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — What a game.

Sunday's Big Eight Conference postseason tournament championship tilt featuring the Kansas Jayhawks and the Missouri Tigers, both 23-9 overall, was a donnybrook.

One had a feeling it might be.

KU's Danny Manning appeared on the court sporting a red Band- Aid to protect a cut he received in Saturday's win against Oklahoma.

And a battle it was as it took a final-second shot by Tiger freshman Lee Coward to decide the outcome of the contest. Missouri won 67-65.

"We've been the sleeper all year," Missouri forward Greg Church said. "Nobody believed in us except ourselves. It was our time to show that to everyone."

Sandbothe missed the free throw, but the rebound was snagged by Tiger Lynn Hardy who whipped it to Lee Coward. Coward nailed an uncontested 15-foot shot from the free-throw line to give the Tigers a 67-65 lead.

Chievous then intercepted the ball with :04 showing on the clock on Kansas' inbounds play. Time expired, securing the Missouri win. The victory was Missouri's first over the Jayhawks in a Big Eight tournament.

"This ballclub plays so hard," Tiger Coach Norm Stewart said. "I'm happy for them and couldn't be prouder of them. They have exceeded all expectations."

No one will argue with this statement. The Tigers, who have no seniors in their starting lineup, were picked to finish fifth in the Big Eight in preseason polls. They proved the prediction wrong, winning the regular season Big Eight championship with an 11-3 record.

"We don't have any seniors," Coward said. "We're never on national TV. Everybody talks about Kansas and Oklahoma. But that's from the past. Now is now. It's the future. We won the Big Eight and we won the tournament."

Missouri dominated the early part of the game, taking a 19-6 lead with 11 minutes left in the half.

The entire second half was nip and tuck for both teams. The largest lead in the half was five points by Missouri on four occasions.

Manning, who finished the game with 31 points, was selected the most valuable player of the tournament. Other players named to the all-tournament team were teammate Cedric Hunter, Chievous, K-State's Mitch Richmond and Oklahoma's Harvey Grant.

Three track members register school marks

By The Collegian Staff

Three more members of K-State's track teams recorded national qualifying marks this weekend at the Track Capitol Invitational meet in Indianapolis, Ind.

All three qualifying marks were set by members of the women's team, and all three recorded new school records in the process.

Anita Isom qualified for the NCAA meet in the 60-yard dash, finishing fourth in a school record time of 7.48 seconds.

Chris Vanatta also set a school record while finishing second in the 3,000-meter run in a time of 9:19.38 seconds. The final national qualifier was Anne Stadler, who took fourth in the 1,500 meters in a record time of 4:24.00.

The women's team also got strong performances from Betsy Silzer, who finished fifth in the 3,000 meters in a personal record time of 9:30.11 seconds, and Pinkie Suggs, who won the shot put with a throw of 52-6.

In men's competition, Brian Zwahlen finished fourth in the 1,500 meter run in a time of 3:49.89.

Grand slam homer lifts 'Cats by TCU

By The Collegian Staff

Junior college transfer David Chadd capped a six-run, seventh-inning rally with a grand slam home run to give K-State a 7-6 victory and a split with Texas Christian University Sunday at Fort Worth.

Chadd hit a 0-1 delivery from losing pitcher Scott Deskins over the left field wall to help K-State, 6-2, gain a split in the twinbill and in its four-game road trip.

In other games this weekend, the Wildcats suffered their first defeat of the season Saturday as Arkansas dumped K-State, 12-7, in Fayetteville. On Friday, the 'Cats downed the Razorbacks, 4-3.

K-State's Eric Haines started the winning rally in the nightcap against TCU with a double and scored on Scott Spangenberg's single. After the Horned Frogs recorded two outs, singles by Mike Hinkle and Jeff Turtle plus a walk to Guy Greco set the stage for Chadd's winning blast.

Chadd's homer made a winner of Mike Hamacher, who relieved starter Paul Iseman in the sixth. Marty Darnell got the final two outs to pick up his third save of the season.

In the opener against TCU, the Horned Frogs capitalized on a 16-strikeout performance by John Brisco and K-State fielding errors en route to a 4-3 win.

Three of Texas Christian's four runs were unearned, including a pair of runs in the third inning that allowed the Horned Frogs to take a 4-1 lead.

K-State managed to cut TCU's lead to 4-2 in the fifth on an RBI single by Hinkle but could have scored more. K-State had the bases loaded with one out when Brisco fanned two consecutive batters to end the threat.

The Wildcats narrowed TCU's lead to one in the top of the 7th when Ringgenberg reached on a two-base error and came home on a double by Hinkle off the top of the center field fence.

Hinkle, who had four hits in the gamne, was stranded as Brisco struck out the final two to nail down the win.

Cage squads make K-State history

For the first time in University history, both the men's and women's basketball teams will be competing simultaneously in their respective NCAA tournaments.

For K-State's men, who will challenge Georgia in a first- round West Regional game Thursday afternoon at Salt Lake City, it is their first appearance since the 1981-82 campaign.

The Lady Cats, who last went to the NCAAs during the 1983-84 season, will play Northwestern at Evanston, Ill., Wednesday in a first-round Midwest Regional.

K-State's men have won three regional championships and advanced to the final four three times and the national finals once. The Lady Cats advanced to the Midwest Regional finals in 1984 before losing to Northeast Louisiana, 78-73.

Women's soccer team wins tourney

The K-State women's soccer team took first place at the Southwest Missouri State Women's Collegiate Indoor Soccer Tournament this weekend.

The tournament was played at Lakes Country Soccer Dome in Springfield, Mo.

K-State, 4-0, defeated Southwest Missouri and Arkansas by identical 2-1 scores on Saturday. K-State dumped Kansas 3-2 to reach the finals and defeated Missouri 3-2 in overtime to clinch the title Sunday.

Long Beach and Louisiana Tech were among eight teams that have appeared in the tournament all six years that it has been played. None of the others were in the tournament this year.

Louisiana Tech, 25-2, is the top seed in the Midwest, Long Beach, 30-2, was top-seeded in the West, and Auburn, 29-1, was the top seed in the Mideast.

First-round games were scheduled to be played March 11 with second-round games March 13, 14 or 15.

The East Regional is at Fayetteville, N.C., the Midwest at Monroe, La., the West at Los Angeles, and the Mideast at Knoxville, Tenn. Regional games are scheduled March 19 and 21.

The national semifinals, scheduled for March 27, and the championship on March 29 will be played at the University of Texas at Austin.

Other teams seeded were Georgia, 26-4, Ohio State, 24-4, Tennessee, 23-6, and Rutgers, 28-2.

The Southeastern Conference put six teams in the tournament, while the Atlantic Coast and Big Ten conferences had four entries each.

In the East bracket Wednesday, South Alabama, 24-5, is at St. Joseph's, Pa., 22-8, and Duke, 18-9, hosts Manhattan, 20-10.

In the second round in the East March 15, Texas awaits the South Alabama-St. Joseph winner. On March 14, Rutgers, 28-2, will host the Manhattan-Duke winner, Villanova, 27-3, hosts North Carolina State, 23-6. In the other second-round game in the East March 15, James Madison, 26-3, will host Vanderbilt, 23-9.

In the Midwest bracket March 14, the Northwestern-Kansas State winner travels to Louisiana Tech, 25-2. Georgia, 26-4, hosts the Kansas-Northeast Louisiana winner. On March 15, Iowa, 24-4, is home against New Orleans, 25-5, and Louisiana State, 20-7, hosts Southern Illinois, 27-2.

First-round games in the West bracket find New Mexico State, 23-6, at Washington, 22-6, and Eastern Washington, 18-11, at Oregon, 22-6.

In the second round March 14, Cal State-Long Beach, 30-2, hosts the Washington-New Mexico State winner, and, at a time and site to be determined, Ohio State, 24-4, will go against the Eastern Washington-Oregon winner.

the University of West Virginia and third-year selection committee member, said that narrowing down the field was, as usual, difficult.

"Every year it's a long, drawn-out discussion," Chiles said. "We layed the top 100 teams on the table and discussed each school extensively."

Chiles said the most difficult part of the process was filling the final five to eight spots on the bracket.

"When you're trying to fill the last five to eight spots, the most discussion occurs because there are 10 to 12 teams deserving and not a lot separating them," Chiles said. "Iowa State and Kansas State were among the final 10-12."

Iowa State did not make the final 64 teams. Chiles refused to discuss the selection of any one school extensively.

UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian said the path set in the four divisions of the tournament leaves no team at an advantage.

"I've said all along that whoever makes it to the final four is going to be really lucky," Tarkanian said. "I don't know much about Kansas State or Georgia...I'm just hoping we'll be on a roll and just play four great games to take us to New Orleans (the site of the final four)."

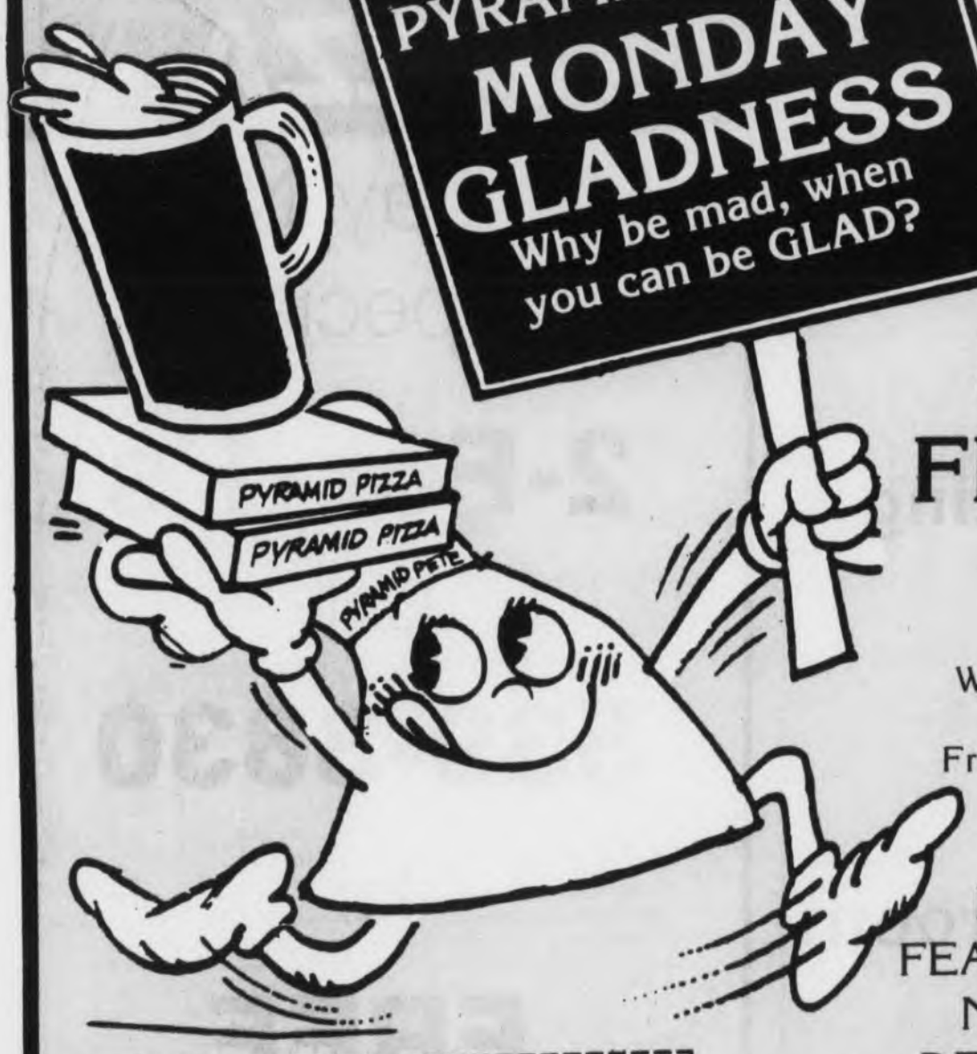
Other Big Eight teams that made the cut include Oklahoma, also in the Western division, which will face the University of Tulsa, a team that Sooner Coach Billy Tubbs has been avoiding for the last two years.

Kansas will play Houston in Atlanta in the Southeast Region, and Missouri will face Xavier in Chicago in the Midwest Region.

Wichita State was chosen as well and will face St. Johns in Indianapolis in the Midwest Regional.

Other sites for first-round action are: West Division, Tuscon, Arizona; Midwest Division, Indianapolis and Chicago; Southeast Division, Atlanta and Birmingham, Ala.; East Division, Charlotte, N.C., and Syracuse, N.Y.

Committee Chairman Dick Schultz, Virginia athletic director, said excluding the Metro Conference was "a very difficult decision."



"The Metro Conference voted unanimously on two occasions to allow Memphis State in its tournament. In effect, this means since Memphis State won the tournament there is no automatic bid for the Metro," Schultz said.

Vermont prisons supplying condoms

By The Associated Press

Safe sex has gone to prison in Vermont, where inmates are being given condoms on request, but in most other states the rule is still no sex behind bars.

Officials in at least three states have talked about following Vermont's policy, which was announced last week, and several states have adopted screening programs and educational campaigns to combat the spread of AIDS and other venereal diseases in prison.

In many cases, state laws against homosexual relations rule out condoms despite concerns about AIDS, the deadly and incurable disease that is spread by sexual contact or contaminated hypodermic needles.

"We can't encourage any behavior that's against the law," said Gail Light, a spokeswoman for the Michigan Department of Corrections. "It's always been against our rules to have homosexual relations in prisons, even before AIDS came along."

Beverly Beck, infirmary supervisor at Montana's state prison near Deer Lodge, said homosexual activity and conjugal visits are prohibited.

"When you have a law against an activity and then provide a tool to break that law, it doesn't make much sense, does it°" she said.

Vermont Corrections Commissioner Joseph Patrissi noted that his state has a long-standing prohibition against homosexual contact in prisons, and said his department would continue to enforce it.

Nonetheless, he said, "We have a responsibility here to make sure this thing doesn't get spread to the general population. I'm sure as heck not going to stand in the way if it's the best medical practice, even though it may not be the best corrections practice."

In some states, there is a fear that the public simply wouldn't accept Vermont's solution. "Certainly, to give an inmate a condom is a bit liberal for North Carolina, or anywhere for that matter," said Richard Panek, director of health services for the North Carolina Department of Correction.

Anthony Travisono, executive director of the Maryland-based American Correction Association, said that "if proper supervision is maintained, there would be no need to distribute contraceptives because there would be no homosexual activity."

But John Reinstein, legal director of the Massachusetts chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, said Vermont's policy would be a "more sensible approach than ignoring the problem."

Cattle industry day focuses on future

By STACEY NANNINGA
Collegian Reporter

Between 700 and 800 cattlemen and ranchers were on hand Friday for the 74th annual Cattleman's Day held at the Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

This year's event was dedicated to Don L. Good, professor of animal sciences and industry and head of the department, for his 40 years of service.

A welcome to the cattlemen was delivered by Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Ag Experiment Station and the Cooperative Extension Service.

Gene Brinkman, president of the Kansas Livestock Association, presented the opening remarks, focusing on the future of the beef cattle industry. Good spoke on the past, present and future of the beef cattle industry and the importance of the relationship between the beef cattle industry and the University.

K-State research was highlighted in the morning program with five animal scientists giving summaries of the research they have been conducting in the past year. One researcher, Curtis Kastner, professor of animal sciences and industry, discussed current and future meat research. Low-sodium meat products and the expanded research and teaching capabilities provided by the Weber Hall expansion were the main points of his topic.

A talk on field research activities across the state with beef cattle was given by Gerry Kuhl, associate professor of animal sciences and industry. Jack Riley, professor of animal sciences and industry, discussed the value of damaged milo for livestock feed.

A report on different grain and forage sorghum types and their performance when fed to cattle was given by Keith Bolson, professor of animal sciences and industry. Robert Cochran, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, presented an update on range research.

The afternoon session provided an international flavor for the visiting cattlemen with speakers from different countries.

The relationship between Mexican and U.S. beef was the focus of a speech by Enrique Sanchez Granillo, regional director of agriculture and livestock research in Chihuahua, Mexico.

He said Mexico has a lot of natural resources and can raise beef cattle very economically, but it does not have the resources to grow grain and therefore must import grain from or export their cattle to the United States.

Sanchez also emphasized the need for improved seed stock in his country. By using technology such as progeny and performance testing, Mexico would be able to improve its beef stock, he said.

The second speaker was Mike Wilkinson, director of Chiltern Beef Ltd., author and nutritional consultant from Marlow Bottom, England. He discussed the impact of the European Economic Community and its regulations and support prices on beef.

Wilkinson said Europe has an oversupply of food because of large subsidies. Europe has become food self-sufficient because of dependancy it had on other countries during World War I and World War II.

The goal of the subsidies was to keep the small farmers in business and to prevent them from migrating to the cities, but he said the program has not been overly successful because the number of people in agriculture has decreased while the farm units have become larger.

Wilkinson cited trends within the EEC against antibiotics, implants and food additives in meat. He said the EEC has established barriers to block the importation of meat of this type.

The keynote speaker was Topper Thorpe, general manager of Cattle Fax, a marketing analysis service in Denver, Colo. Thorpe spoke about where the cattle industry has been, where it is now and where he foresees it going in the future.

He said the number of cattle is down and he expects a period of higher prices. Higher prices need to be seen in the cow/calf sector of the industry to encourage producers in this area.

Commercial exhibitors, as well as K-State researchers, had booths set up for cattlemen to visit. Extension branch experiment stations had poster exhibits of the research they have been doing for the past year.

Tours of the Beef Research Unit were given after the afternoon program. Researchers and graduate students had demonstrations set up so small groups could actually view the research taking place and ask questions.

Opera performers lack exuberance, expression

By LAURIE FAIRBURN
Copy Editor

Opera is a challenging form of musical drama for the artists and the audience. "The Merry Wives of Windsor," performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium, may have been beyond the capabilities of both.

Presented by the KSU Opera Theatre and the departments of music and speech, the production was a disappointing display of artistic expression.

Perhaps we're not supposed to be able to understand the words as they are sung. But I prefer not to depend on the synopsis of acts in the program to glean understanding of the plot. I want to be carried along by delightful melodies, wooed by beautiful voices, lifted by amusing lyrics. I want to be entertained.

Play Review

Instead I was frustrated and bored.

The story involves a gentleman of suspect morals named Sir John Falstaff, played by Glenn Guhr, graduate student in music. Two women, Mistress Ford, played by Veronica Caine-Victor, senior in applied music, and Mistress Page, played by Kathy Lamberson, junior in music education, each receive a love letter written by his hand.

Appalled by his boldness and indiscretion, they decide to play a trick on him. In the process, Mistress Ford also embarrasses her jealous and suspecting husband, played by Eugene Thomas, graduate student in music.

If Caine-Victor had the acting ability and stage presence to match her outstanding voice, she would be a thrill to watch. However, her garbled singing, even though in perfect pitch, and her lifeless dialogue cast shadows on the fine moments she had. She and Lamberson let too many opportunities to be funny and mischievous go by, and the comedy was lost. Lamberson did save several moments by singing words that could be understood.

Another part of the plot was a rivalry among three men for the hand of Anne, played by Debra Huyett, junior in music education. Mister Page, played by Chris Thompson, senior in music education, Mistress Page and Anne have all settled on their choice — and of course none agree.

The three suitors are: Fenton, played by Jon Secrest, graduate in music; Slender, played by Don Livingston, senior in music; and Dr. Cajus, played by Jerry Patterson, sophomore in music education. Now these gentlemen were funny. Livingston and Patterson displayed able voices and a flair for comedy that came as a great relief. Secrest, however, possesses outstanding vocal ability. A duet with Huyett was the high point of the production. Huyett possesses a strong, articulate, beautiful voice as well. These four should be blessed for making the story move with some semblance of energy and conviction.

Meanwhile, Mister Ford is still occupied with proving his wife is untrue. Thomas, as Ford, carried himself well on stage. He was one performer who wasn't afraid to use his face while he sang, and conveyed a great sense of fun. His repartee with Guhr was the comedic highlight of the production. Guhr himself gave a strong performance. Thompson, as Page, gave a relatively safe performance held stable by some amusing expressions.

The production never came together. Even though the company was draped in stunning costumes, placed on a beautifully designed stage and backed by a fabulous orchestra, "The Merry Wives of Windsor" suffered from a lack of exuberance.

Quit smoking.

Cadets take command, learn leadership skills

By JACKIE SHOCKEY
Collegian Reporter

Senior cadets dug into commanding roles Saturday during Operation Goldminer, the ROTC's field training exercises at Fort Riley.

Seniors supervised and evaluated the battalion to help them develop their leadership skills, said Dana Bres, assistant professor of military science and recruiting officer.

"We (Bres and Jones) are on the range to satisfy Fort Riley requirements. The range is actually being run by the seniors," he said.

The exercises included M-16 rifle training, practice on the obstacle course, rappelling, and afternoon and evening land navigation.

Safety with the M-16s was an important factor in rifle practice. Although the students are familiar with both an air rifle and a .22 caliber rifle, it was a new experience for many to use an M-16, Bres said.

As precautionary measures, students were instructed when to handle the weapons, and each rifle was checked after every round of ammunition was fired. Flags were posted around the range warning people that weapons were in use, and if any aircraft flew over the range during practice, the students were told to cease firing.

"We'll move slowly, just to make sure it's done safely," Bres said. "The military obviously has inherent risks. We try to minimize them."

In addition, safety was stressed for students on the range. On the field every student was required to wear earplugs and a helmet.

Bres said for many years it was considered macho not to wear earplugs, and due to this image, many soldiers had problems with their hearing after using weapons for several years. Now the military stresses the use of earplugs to prevent any damage, he said.

Juniors used the training exercises to prepare for a six-week advanced training camp at Fort Riley in July, said Rick Sadat, senior in mechanical engineering and battalion commander. The advanced camp is at a higher level and is required for them to receive their commission.

"The firing of the M-16s and the other skills practiced Saturday were done so that they will do well at the advanced camp," he said.

Hawaii, Maine, New York, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, as well as four universities in Iran.

He also traveled internationally as an Eisenhower Exchange Fellow, visiting and speaking at 13 European universities. McCain was asked by the U.S. State Department to revisit universities in Germany to foster international relations.

McCain obtained many honors during his career, including being named "Kansan of the Year" by the Topeka Capital-Journal in 1973 and "Special Distinguished Kansan" by the Native Sons and Daughters of Kansas in 1977. In 1978 he was given the National Governor's Award for Distinguished Service, and he also held an honorary degree from the Andra Pradesh University in India.

After leaving K-State, McCain was asked by former Kansas Gov. Robert Bennett to serve as secretary of the Department of Human Resources. He stayed in this post until he retired again in 1980.

He then lectured at Washburn University in Topeka, instructed in a master's degree seminar at University of Kansas' Capitol Complex program in Topeka and wrote a weekly column for the Capital-Journal. He also served as chairman of the board of Kansas Good Roads Association.

McCain was born in York, S.C. He received a bachelor's degree from Wofford College in Spartanburg, S.C., and a master's degree from Duke University, Durham, N.C. In 1947 he obtained his doctorate degree at Stanford University, Stanford, Calif.

McCain taught and held administrative positions at Colorado A & M University in Fort Collins, Colo., then spent time serving in the Navy during World War II. He became president of Montana State University in 1945.

King

Something is "drastically wrong" when 33 million people live below the poverty level in a nation with a one trillion dollar budget, he said.

The struggle to correct these problems is "very tremendous," Scott said.

"If a person favors freedom and refuses to favor agitation, he wants crops without plowing the ground. He wants rain without the thunder and lightning. He just wants everything without paying for it," Scott said.

King said contemporary culture has taught blacks to have a "deep hatred for one another."

Children learn to see black as negative on television and from speaking a racist language every day, he said.

"Villains always wear black," King said. "White cake is called angel food, while brown cake is devil's food. The person that goes wrong in the family is the black sheep.

"Linguistics and semantics have taught us to hate us and all our white brothers and sisters to hate us, too," he said.

King said black children are programmed to see themselves as bad people.

"When we are grown people, we hate everything that looks like us," he said, adding that this hatred accounts for the high rate of homicides and suicides among blacks.

Even the lable "minority" causes bias because it means "less than," King said.

"If you start calling somebody a minority, you start treating them as if they are 'less than' you," he said.

King said progress would be made when people learn a new kind of love for one another that is "totally unselfish and seeks nothing in return."

Utilitarian love, "loving someone as long as you can use them," is not enough "as we try to hue out of a mountain of despair, a stone of hope," he said.

To use their efforts in a constructive way, members of the Ku Klux Klan could concentrate on "finding cures to cancer and AIDS because that is what will kill...not black folks," King said.

Although at times evidence of progress in racial equality is hard to find, future efforts to end racism must not be abandoned, King said.

"We've come too far from where we started," King said. "Nobody told us the road would be easy, but I know God didn't bring us this far (just) to leave us."

ty said the Harkin-Gephardt bill could work, but would cause the loss of 2 million jobs.

The report said farmers' prices would be twice as high as they are under the current farm bill and, without export subsidies, the cost to the government would be minimal.

But food costs would be 8 percent higher than under the current farm bill by 1991 and 14 percent higher in 1995, it said.

The report also analyzed an Office of Management and Budget proposal to double a scheduled cut in target price payments and increase the amount of acreage farmers can take out of production and still get deficiency payments.

Under the OMB plan, food costs and the prices paid to farmers would show little change from those expected with the 1985 farm bill, while government spending would drop 50 percent and net farm income would decline by 20 percent, the report said.

"On the basis of the analysis that we did, the '85 farm bill doesn't come out as quite the villain that some people make it out to be," said George E. Rossmiller, an economist for the agricultural policy center.

"It does have some faults," Rossmiller said. "But our bottom line was that we really need to know better what those faults are before we jump in and try to fix it."

"There is no farm bill that is going to save every farmer," Stangeland said. "What we have to be concerned about is saving as many as we can, saving those who are viable and have an ability to pull themselves up by their own boostraps and get healthy."

Lee Turner, Great Bend attorney and businessman, heard about the Ahmadullahs from his niece, a friend of the Ahmadullah family. Intrigued by the story, he offered Shafiullah's father a job in Great Bend, Shafiullah said.

The family moved to Great Bend, and Shafiullah worked on the man's 6000-acre farm. Turner encouraged Shafiullah to continue his education and gave him help financially.

When he gradutates, Shafiullah, like most students, wants to get a job and find a good place to live. He likes it in America, he said, but the best place would be his homeland.

"It is bad to leave your own country," he said. "If I were to tell someone from Kansas to leave, and I even made them go to a better place, they still wouldn't like it as much. A person's homeland is different."

North challenges counsel legalities

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal judge, taking unusually quick action, began hearing oral arguments Monday in Lt. Col. Oliver North's challenge to the legal standing of the independent counsel looking into the Iran-Contra affair.

Meanwhile, the president's daughter called for the court-martial of North and former National Security Adviser John Poindexter, and a member of the Senate Iran-Contra panel said grants of immunity to North and Poindexter could come soon though other officials said it was too soon.

Also on Monday, one of the Nicaraguan Contras' leaders, Arturo Cruz, resigned his post as a director of the United Nicaraguan Opposition, his son said. Arturo Cruz Jr. gave no details other than to say his father was fed up with the "whole mentality" of the rebel movement.

The afternoon court arguments came after the independent counsel, Lawrence Walsh, filed a court brief asking U.S. District Court Judge Barrington Parker to dismiss a second lawsuit by North, calling it a "desperate" effort to derail a criminal investigation.

"Unable to halt the investigation with the force of his arguments, he should not be permitted to do so by the mere force — and volume — of his rapidly proliferating lawsuits," Walsh wrote in response to a suit filed by North's attorneys on Friday.

Walsh, noting that the suit was the second challenge to his investigation in 11 days, said North "continues and expands his determined effort to disrupt an ongoing criminal investigation."

North, the former National Security Council aide who was involved in the arms sales to Iran and efforts to channel money to the Nicaraguan Contras, first challenged the legitimacy of Walsh's probe on Feb. 24, arguing that the law under which it was begun, the Ethics in Government Act, was unconstitutional.

Last week Attorney General Edwin Meese III, in an effort to safeguard the investigation, directed Walsh also to proceed under the authority of the attorney general.

However, North filed a second challenge on Friday, arguing that Meese's action also had been unconstitutional.

At the White House, meanwhile, Maureen Reagan said on Monday that her father was very angry when he saw the Tower commission report, which she said showed that aides had deceived him.

As for her own feelings, she said Poindexter and North, both military officers, should be court-martialed.

She said that "a member of the United States military who lies to their commander-in-chief is guilty of treason and should be court-martialed." And she added that "by omission or commission, they did not tell the president what they were doing. And that's a lie."

K-State sets guidelines for non-sexist language

By BRUCE DOLSBERRY
Collegian Reporter

Temporary guidelines for the use of non-sexist language in all University communications have been established.

Until K-State has enough money to publish an official guide, University President Jon Wefald is asking that the temporary guidelines issued in February be observed.

The guidelines for non-sexist communications include employing a system of address that is fair to all, avoiding the use of "he" or "she" when both sexes are clearly meant and avoiding language that implies a position, office, or occupation is the province of a particular sex.

"A memo like this could go out to people all over the United States," Wefald said. "It's something that everybody, young or old, male or female should be aware of when they're dealing with other people."

"The purpose of the guide is to make people aware of sexist language, which reinforces inappropriate and demanding attitudes, assumptions and stereotypes. Sexist language, is an unconscious form of discrimination and is not condoned by K-State," according to a memorandum by Wefald.

"If we are to live up to our commitment to being an equal-opportunity educational institution, we must demonstrate this commitment in the language we use in the name of the University, both written and oral. We need to change old modes of thought and practice that grow out of an earlier era in order to create an environment where all may thrive and succeed," the letter stated.

The Commission on the Status of Women, a committee appointed by Wefald, wrote the guidelines, said Jane Rowlett, director of Affirmative Action.

The need for a guideline stemmed mainly from campus publications that did not address women properly. Rowlett said her office has received letters from women who have complained about not being addressed in equivalent terms.

For example, one woman professor was referred to by her first and last name, not her title, she said. Another woman instructor was called a girl.

"It's nothing intentional," Rowlett said. "People need to be educated concerning these issues."

For the past year, Bonnie Nelson, assistant professor of English and member of the commission, and Rowlett worked with Cy Wainscott, director of news and information at K-State, to develop guidelines, Rowlett said.

"The guidelines have been distributed in the form of a letter, and it's hoped that it will appear in the form of an official guide," Rowlett said, adding that the guidelines will appear in the University's affirmative action plan.

The University has not printed the guidelines in pamphlet form because of the state's recent budget cuts. Cost estimates to print the guidelines in a pamphlet are $600-$700. There is no indication of when funding will be available, she said.

Basic guidelines have been sent to the University provost and vice presidents, college deans, agency directors and department heads. Rowlett said these University officials have been asked to share them with faculty members.

"We have had good response from people in our office and from women who said they were glad to see the guidelines," she said. "I'm glad the University has this policy."

Sorority plays for children

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

At first glance, the basement of the Union looked as though it had become a playground.

But those weren't kids on the teeter-totter. Beginning Monday, members of several greek organizations learned the ups and downs of participating in a marathon.

Sponsored by Kappa Delta sorority, the Teeter-Totter Marathon is one of three money-making events the organization uses to raise funds for charities.

"In the past years, we had a booth set up in the Union," said Renee Alonzo, senior in elementary education and philanthropy chairman. "This year we wanted to try something different."

To participate, an organization must donate $20 for each hour its representatives decide to teeter-totter. Though non-greek organizations were invited to participate as well, Alonzo said so far, only greeks have been involved, possibly because this is the first year for such an event.

"We don't want this to be an all-greek event," she said. "We're hoping to make it an all-campus organization event."

'This year we wanted to try something different....We're hoping to make it an all-campus organization event.'

— Renee Alonzo

Eighty percent of the money raised in the marathon will go to the Kansas chapter for the Prevention of Child Abuse, Alonzo said. The other 20 percent will go to the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse in Chicago.

Other organizations Kappa Delta supports are Big Lakes Developmental Center, Inc., 1500 Hayes Drive, a center for the mentally handicapped, and the Children's Hospital in Richmond, Va.

Though the sorority raised $127 during the event last year, Alonzo said this year's goal is $800, mainly because the event is more unique.

"The initial costs will kill us," she said, "but in the long run, we should make more."

The initial costs amounted to about $90 for materials to build the teeter-totter. Jim Hellmer, senior in electrical engineering, donated a weekend of his time to build the structure.

Alonzo said the marathon will operate from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Thursday. If weather permits, it will be moved outside the Union Wednesday and Thursday.

She said the sorority is planning to make the marathon an annual event.

"A lot of sororities have philanthropies," she said. "We wanted something that everybody could participate in."

Sites of contamination endanger environment, survey says

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas presently has 332 environmental contamination sites which place soil, surface water or groundwater in jeopardy, a new state Department of Health and Environment survey showed Monday.

Of those sites, the agency said, cleanup is under way at 97, or 29 percent, while 93 of them, 28 percent, are under investigation and 142, or 43 percent, need to be investigated.

Of the six districts into which KDHE divides the state for statistical purposes, the northwest district has the most contamination sites, 86. Then come the south-central district with 72, northeast with 56, north-central with 41, southwest with 39 and southeast with 38.

Most of the 97 cleanup operations are under way in the south-central district, where 35 cleanups are going on at 72 sites, or nearly half of them.

The lowest ratio of cleanups to total sites is in the southeast, where only three cleanups have been initiated among the 38 contamination sites.

Copies of the report were distributed today to legislators and state officials.

"This report has been prepared to provide policy makers and citizens with fundamental information about the quality of the Kansas environment," KDHE said in an introduction to the report.

"While the condition of this state's environment continues to be quite good, we have detected many isolated pockets of contamination. Understanding the extent and nature of contamination in this state is a critical element in meeting our long-held commitment to preserve and, when necessary, restore Kansas natural resources."

The 332 sites include 11 listed on the federal Superfund's national priority list.

These are the listed sites of the Doepke abandoned chemical dump-landfill in Johnson County, an abandoned oil refinery at Arkansas City, abandoned lead and zinc mines in Cherokee County, an abandoned waste sludge pond in Sedgwick County, the Big River sand and gravel site at Wichita, the Strother Field industrial park near Winfield and the Obee Road landfill at Hutchinson.

The 11 also include a candidate site, which is the Furley waste dump in Sedgwick County, and three potential candidate sites — the Hackney grain elevator at Winfield, the abandoned United Oil site and grain elevators at Hutchinson, and the old Golden Rule oil refinery at Wichita.

The other 321 sites are smaller identified or potential contamination sites such as improperly plugged oil wells, saltwater runoffs, and various wastes dumped and abandoned.

Of the total of 332 identified or potential sites, 233 involve groundwater pollution, 35 combination groundwater and surface water contamination, 33 combined groundwater and soil contamination, 19 combined groundwater, soil and surface water contamination and six each soil or surface water problems.

Nearly a third of the contamination sites, 101, resulted from saltwater spills, 67 from oil, 62 from volatile organic chemicals, 32 from metals, 23 from pesticides and the rest from miscellaneous sources.

Counties listed with the highest number of identified or potential contamination sites are Sedgwick with 39, Ellis 24, Rooks 18, Wyandotte 17, Russell 14, Johnson 13, Reno and Graham 10 each, Leavenworth nine, Butler and Harvey eight and Saline, Montgomery, McPherson and Greenwood seven each.

Also, Barton, Allen, Neosho and Cherokee with six each, Douglas, Cowley, Riley and Rush five each, Shawnee, Barber, Ford and Ness four each, Brown, Dickinson, Cloud, Rice, Pawnee and Finney three each and Linn, Chase, Marion, Sumner, Republic, Ellsworth, Stafford, Phillips, Hodgeman, Trego, Decatur, Gove, Logan, Thomas, Scott and Haskell two each.

U.S.-backed Contra leader quits

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — Arturo Cruz, a former Sandinista official whom the United States wanted to remain part of the Nicaraguan Contra rebel leadership, announced his resignation Monday.

Cruz arrived at the Foreign Ministry for a 4 p.m. appointment and brushed past reporters who gathered because of reports from family members that he was quitting as one of three leaders of the United Nicaraguan Opposition rebel coalition.

Asked if the reports were true he responded: "Yes. It was long overdue," then entered the building for an appointment with Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto. Reporters were not allowed to follow him.

In a telephone conversation from Miami earlier, his wife Consuelo said her husband's decision to leave the leadership of the coalition, known as UNO, was final and effective immediately.

She said, "It was a family decision" that was not supposed to be known until Tuesday, "but the leak is out."

In Washington, the couple's son Arturo Jr. said the reasons for Cruz's resignation will be spelled out in a letter scheduled to appear in Tuesday's editions of The Miami Herald.

Bill to ban nuclear waste burial

TOPEKA — Hoping to make the state a less attractive location as a nuclear waste dumping ground, the Kansas House endorsed a bill for passage Monday that would prohibit underground storage of radioactive materials.

The measure, which advanced for a final vote on Tuesday, would add radioactive waste to an existing ban on the burial of hazardous wastes in the state. The proposal gained first-round approval on an unrecorded voice vote.

Studies conducted for the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact have have narrowed the list of geologically suitable areas for a nuclear disposal site to portions of 18 counties in Kansas and smaller sections of four other states.

Rep. Keith Roe, R-Mankato, told lawmakers the measure would not withdraw Kansas from the compact as other bills before the Legislature would do. Instead, he said the measure would impose restrictions on operations of any disposal site aimed at discouraging potential developers.

A developer for the disposal site is scheduled to be selected in June and a decision on the "host" state for the dump is expected to be made before a federal deadline of Jan. 1, Roe said.

In addition to the locations in Kansas, surveys for the compact show 10 counties in Nebraska, two counties in Arkansas and one county in Louisiana have locations that would be suitable for the disposal facility.

School districts face budget cuts

TOPEKA — The Senate Education Committee endorsed for passage Monday a heavily-amended school finance bill, ensuring heated debate when the measure reaches the Senate floor next week.

Committee changes in the bill, which has passed the House, substantially reduced the already-meager budget increases Kansas' 304 local school districts will be allowed for the 1987-88 school year.

That means teachers can expect pay increases only in the 2 percent to 3 percent range for next year, unless the Senate and House eventually agree on higher budget limits than the Senate committee approved Monday.

Skin cancer rampant, scientists say

WASHINGTON — Prompt international action is needed against widely used ozone-destroying chemicals that are indirectly causing skin cancers at an almost epidemic pace, scientists warned at a House hearing Monday.

"At the current rate, about one in seven Americans will develop (some form of) this disease during their lifetime," said Dr. Darrel Rigel, a research physician from New York University Medical Center

"The rate of skin cancer in the United States is increasing at a near epidemic pace," Rigel told an Energy and Commerce health and the environment subcommittee hearing on depletion of the Earth's stratospheric ozone layer.

He said physicians believe the major cause of skin cancer is the ultraviolet rays of the sun, which are filtered by stratospheric ozone. Other witnesses said that while there is still scientific uncertainty, it appears that the ozone layer is being destroyed by chemicals such as chlorofluorocarbons.

Rigel said the estimated number of cases of malignant melanoma — the skin cancer type most often fatal — has risen eightfold in the last seven years, making it the fastest rising type except lung cancer in women.

He said that five years ago New York University researchers estimated that one in 250 Americans would develop malignant melanoma during their lifetimes and projected an increase to one in 150 by the year 2000.

Supreme court eases asylum rules

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday made it easier for illegal aliens to seek political asylum in this country, ruling they need only show "a well-founded fear" they will be persecuted if forced to return home.

The Reagan administration had argued that applicants for asylum should have to show "a clear probability" of persecution.

It remained unclear, however, whether the 6-3 ruling will lead to the granting of asylum for more illegal aliens because the ultimate decision remains with the attorney general. The verdict means only that more refugees are eligible for asylum consideration by him.

The court ruled in the case of a Nicaraguan woman living in Nevada who says the leftist Sandinistas would persecute her if she is forced to return to her native country.

NASA computer signals 'new era'

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — NASA scientists on Monday dedicated what they called the world's most advanced computer system, saying it marks the start of a new era in aviation design and shows the space agency "is back on track."

The system's importance to flight design rivals the advent of wind tunnels and the first flight by the Wright Brothers, said Victor L. Peterson, director of aerophysics at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center.

"This is an historic day in aviation," said NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher. He said the new computer "will help ensure U.S. leadership in aeronautics."

The Numerical Aerodynamic Simulator, built around a Cray-2 supercomputer from Cray Research Inc., is an evolving system capable of making 250 million calculations per second and has enough memory to hold data equivalent to 256 million words.

The system, which cost nearly $100 million to develop, will be upgraded to 1 billion computations per second by next year and 4 billion per second within a decade.

Speaker to analyze pornography's effects

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

Evalina Kane, activist, writer and organizer for Women Against Pornography, will speak tonight at 7:30 in the Union Forum Hall as the second speaker in the spring Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Affairs.

Kane, co-chairwoman of the Task Force on Pornography and Sexual Abuse, will present "The Impact of Pornography on the Safety and Status of Women and Children." The address is co-sponsored by the Women's Studies Program.

"There has been considerable discussion and debate about how to combat pornography," said Flossie Snyder, instructor of interdisciplinary studies and coordinator of the lecture series.

"People feel strongly about questions of censorship and examining the relationship between pornography and violent crimes. We hope these issues will bring a lot of people to the lecture," she said.

The lecture is scheduled to include a slide presentation followed by a question-and-answer session, she said.

Kane has researched and presented analyses of various pornographic issues, including a study of sexual violence against women in rock videos. Her findings were reported on WBZ TV's "People Are Talking," ABC's "Nightline" and CBS "Two on the Town."

In addition, she wrote "MTV: Misogyny in Rock Video," a book giving the results of her studies in sexual violence.

Kane's research has also centered on pornographic images and the disabled. A slide show about her findings is used by the Assault Prevention Training Project, a prevention/crisis intervention service for people with disabilities, in Columbus, Ohio.

Kane organized workshops for the social service community in New York on the effects of pornography on the safety and status of women.

Kane will answer questions during a press conference at 1:30 today in Union 206.

Plan utilizes hospitals for new prisons

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — State hospital buildings in Norton, Osawatomie and Winfield would be the sites for minimum-security prison facilities under a $9.3 million plan unveiled Monday by Secretary of Corrections Richard Mills.

The proposal would create 509 new minimum-security beds to help relieve prison overcrowding, although Mills said even more new space is needed to keep Kansas' prison population from exceeding the state's maximum capacity.

Besides housing prisoners at the three state hospitals, a Shawnee County work-release center also would be converted to a minimum-security facility. Mills said the renovations could be finished by January.

The plan would cost $1.3 million during the current fiscal year, which ends June 30, and $8 million in the next fiscal year. Gov. Mike Hayden has reviewed and approved the plan, said Larry Cowger, assistant to Mills.

Gov. Mike Hayden endorsed the plan describing it as "cost-effective." Hayden said he plans to have the plan included in his proposed budget for the next fiscal year.

Hayden said he liked the idea of using vacant buildings space at state hospitals.

'Taxpayers should realize cost savings involving our obligation to manage the accelerating inmate population.'

—Gov. Mike Hayden

"Taxpayers should realize cost savings involving our obligation to manage the accelerating inmate population," Hayden said in a prepared statement.

Mills presented the plan Monday to the Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction, whose members expressed their frustration with trying to build enough facilities to keep up with a growing prison population.

The current maximum capacity of the state's system is 5,015 prisoners, yet the state is housing 5,381 prisoners, Cowger said, noting the department projects the population will reach 5,588 by June 30 and climb to 6,111 by June 30, 1988.

Besides adding 509 new minimum-security beds, the department hopes to have a combination minimum and medium security prison at Ellsworth finished by March 1989. The estimated $10 million Ellsworth prison would house 352 inmates.

Mills and Cowger said that although the projects will create needed permanent bed space, the number of prisoners will still exceed maximum capacity by the time the projects are completed.

"There's going to have to be some hard decisions made," Mills said. "We've already identified prisoners that could be supervised in communities, but that's not up to us."

Cowger said other changes may be needed in sentencing reform and more lenient parole policies to ease the overcrowding crisis.

"(Lawmakers will) have to make major changes either in the way we send people to prison or the way we release them from prison," Cowger said.

The proposal to house inmates on state hospital grounds was not new. The state already has 141 inmates at Winfield in a pre-release work program and 81 at a pre-release program at Topeka State Hospital, Cowger said.

The largest of the four renovation projects would be at Norton State Hospital. The hospital has about 120 patients but has held up to 350 in the past.

At Norton, 240 minimum-security beds would be created by renovating three buildings, at a cost of $1.4 million. Operating costs would run $334,000 in the current fiscal year and $2.5 million in fiscal 1988. Mills said the department would hire 96 workers for the facility.

At Winfield, 149 new beds would be created by the renovations of a single building on the hospital grounds. The renovation would cost $979,000 over two fiscal years, and operating costs would run $1.6 million. Mills said 50 additional personnel would be hired.

The renovation of a single building at Osawatomie would cost the state $1.8 million over two fiscal years and create 60 minimum-security beds. Mills said 35 new staff members would be hired.

The state also will move into the Shawnee County work release center when the county opens its new jail later this year, Cowger said. The state could begin moving prisoners there in November, he said. The project would create 60 minimun-security beds.

Mills said 13 additional staff members would be hired.

Wefald 'gets personal' in recruitment

By TOM DENZEL
Collegian Reporter

In an attempt to raise the University's enrollment, admissions representatives have sent personalized, hand-written letters to more than 28,000 prospective students.

University President Jon Wefald appointed Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, to oversee the admissions representatives responsible for the letter-writing campaign as part of the recruitment restructuring process under Wefald's leadership.

"This is just one aspect of a vision Wefald had of a personalized recruitment program," Bosco said.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancment, said a personalized student recruitment program will be a mission for K-State as long as he is at the University.

"K-State is not alone in this personalized recruiting effort. Other colleges and universities have been doing this for some time, and now K-State must play the catch-up game," Bosco said.

Nine admission representatives write letters to inform prospective students of upcoming events and the University overall, he said. The letters are in two forms: one handwritten on purple stationery in purple ink and the other on K-State letterhead stationery.

Both form letters include "thank you's" for inquiring about or visiting K-State and answer any questions prospective students might have about the University.

In addition, the letters extend an invitation for these students to visit the campus, if they have not already done so, along with the name and telephone number of someone they can contact in the area of study in which they have shown interest.

"Deciding on a post-secondary educational institution is somewhat compared to trying on a pair of jeans," said Julie Schuler, admissions representative. "You have to try on or visit the campus to see if you fit the campus and the campus fits you."

Some of the letters have newsclips of the prospective student being recognized for an accomplishment with the University's acknowledgement. This effort reassures the students of their success, Bosco said.

"In the letter, we do not guarantee the students success, we just offer them the chance to be successful," he said.

Since Aug. 1, 1986, almost 28,000 letters have been sent out to prospective students in a five-state area of Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and Colorado.

Students receiving the personalized letters are those who have consistently performed well in the classroom and have taken their ACT test at an early stage in their high school career, Bosco said.

These students are organized and have taken the time to evaluate where they might like to continue their education by considering different colleges and universities, he said.

The eight college deans have been involved with writing letters to students expressing an interest in their particular college, Bosco said.

Although some of the colleges wrote personal letters to prospective students before the Wefald administration, others are just beginning, he said.

"It's now more of an organized team effort, each (college) complementing the others," Bosco said.

In addition, alumni send names of prospective students to the University. Admissions representatives mail each person a letter and ask the alumni to mail them a letter expressing their view of K-State, Bosco said.

James McCain's touch still felt at University

The legacy that is James McCain's is one of which everyone associated with K-State can be proud. McCain, who served as K-State president from 1950 to 1975, died early Saturday in Topeka at the age of 79. He had been ill for several months.

During McCain's tenure, the University underwent a tremendous amount of growth and a metamorphosis from a predominantly agricultural school to one with a broad liberal arts philosophy. At the same time, the University's enrollment tripled, going from 5,000 to 15,000.

Most of the growth was in the form of construction. Several buildings, valued at $110 million, were constructed during his administration, including the Union, KSU Stadium, partial completion of the Veterinary Medicine Center and, of course, the auditorium that bears his name.

However, even more impressive than physical changes was the personal touch McCain brought to his position. He had an "open door" policy, and students always felt comfortable talking with him.

Although more than a decade has passed since McCain's retirement from K-State, his presence can still be felt on this campus. His influence in molding K-State into what it is today shouldn't be underestimated.

Thanks to miniseries, attitudes still flourish

A poll taken for ABC to test the impact of "Amerika," its recent TV miniseries, indicated 75 percent of the people asked said they would rather have a nuclear war than be submitted to communist rule. The poll also indicated 66 percent believe the Soviet Union would like to take over the United States.

Experts on the U.S.S.R. generally agree that the general public's view of the Soviet Union is grossly inaccurate, not due entirely to people's lack of initiative to learn, but because U.S. propaganda leaves the public so uninformed.

In actuality, the common people of the U.S.S.R. are no different from us. However, they don't realize this either because of the image given of Americans through Soviet propaganda.

The recent TV series "Amerika" portrayed an unreal image of what life would be like after a the Soviet Union takeover, according to experts. It is unfortunate an accurate version was not shown which would have shown the American people a truer picture — which is not to say the Soviet Union is a wonderful example of societal organization. Few will say that.

However, planting seeds of deception in the minds of Americans will do nothing but produce an ignorant and prejudiced society.

Request for new trial will test legal officials

The Kansas Supreme Court has granted a request for a hearing to determine whether Lisa Dunn should be granted a new trial. Dunn was convicted of murder for her role in a bloody crime spree in 1985 in northwest Kansas.

Dunn requested the hearing because her attorney, Jessica R. Kunen of Topeka, contends that newly discovered evidence indicates Dunn should have been allowed to claim as a defense that she was the victim of the battered woman syndrome, also known as the hostage syndrome.

The battered woman and hostage syndromes are now being used as defenses in court. Having to decide if running away could cause the loss of your own life or the lives of your family or friends could cause someone to do something he or she may not do otherwise.

This new evidence stems from an alleged sexual attack on Dunn by two men. Dunn said this attack happened eight months before the crimes in this case.

Dunn was convicted of two counts of felony murder, two counts of aggravated kidnapping, one count of aggravated robbery, one count of aggravated battery and one count of aggravated battery on a law enforcement officer.

The right to request a new trial based upon new evidence is one that should be granted. Because our legal system is linked by humans, there is room for error and therefore the need for a system to correct errors is necessary.

Thomas County District Judge Keith Willoughby of Colby will preside at the hearing. His task will be to determine if Dunn should be granted a new trial.

If the new trial is granted, it could help define the battered woman and hostage syndromes, therefore helping to establish a new defense.

However, the fact that Arkansas has been seeking Dunn's extradition to stand trial in another murder case should also be considered during the hearing. Former Gov. John Carlin refused the request of the Arkansas authorities, however. Gov. Mike Hayden has not announced his decision on the case.

Willoughby must consider all these aspects in a most discerning manner before deciding whether Dunn deserves a new trial.

Speech rights not always clear

PATTI PAXSON
Collegian Columnist

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

These 45 words comprise perhaps the most hotly debated set of concepts and ideas to be expressed in the history of modern civilization. When this profound passage was ratified in the first session of Congress in 1791 and was named the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, its authors could never have imagined the time, energy and paperwork that would be spent on their creation in the next 196 years.

The First Amendment, or the "rights clause," is the basis of life in America. It guides us through so many aspects of our lives, yet we rarely contemplate its meaning and the true freedom it gives all Americans. Ah, but when the rights inherent in this clause are violated, the yelling, accusing, and demanding can be heard at a feverish pitch.

Such is the case of recent times.

The other night I was doing the red-eye shift of my studying schedule and, with one red eye on the television and the other red eye on my book, I found myself watching "The 700 Club." For those who are not familiar with this show, it is basically the Christian fundamentalists' late-night answer to "60 Minutes."

On this particular segment of "The 700 Club," a lawyer named Bob Skolrood discussed a university-related aspect of First Amendment violations. Skolrood, who was representing the National Legal Foundation, put forth the argument that nowhere in the Constitution (or its subsequent amendments) is there any mention of the well-known phrase "separation of church and state," or any concept inherent thereof.

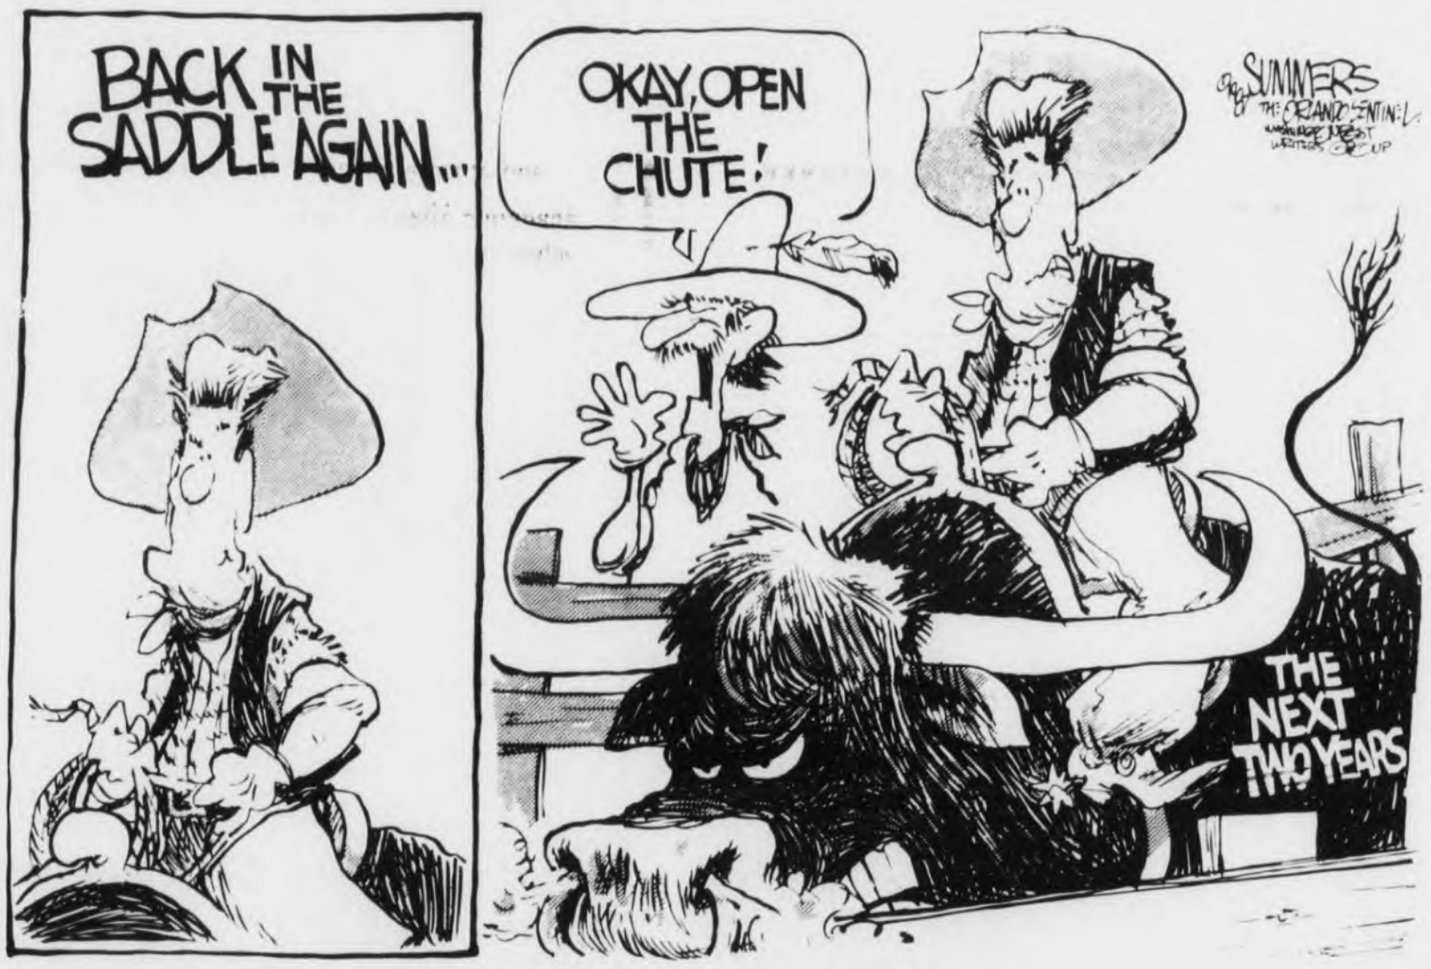
The issue he was attempting to address dealt with the fact that many public universities and colleges across the nation have student Christian organizations that believe they have the right to receive funding and privileges equivalent to those of other student organizations on campus receiving university support.

Skolrood, by way of an analogy, said many American college campuses provide funding from student government for gay and lesbian student organizations and "leftist" organizations, for example. He implied that if THEY (you know, THOSE kind of people) can get support, then why not the Christian student groups? Some analogy, huh?

Perhaps it does not explicitly say in the Constitution that we must adhere to a strict and distinct separation of church and state, but sorry Mr. Skolrood, funding or supporting any religious student organization at any public college or university with money collected from the student body IS a violation of the rights of the students as American citizens. Public schools cannot use student money to support religious groups that request funding for their various religious activities. This is the state forcing the students to "respect an establishment of religion" and thus is forbidden by the First Amendment.

However, what do we do with the phrase in the First Amendment which refers to NOT prohibiting the free exercise of religion? A lawyer or legal genius I am not, but in my humble amount of gray matter it seems to me religious student groups may just be experiencing a bit of violation themselves when it comes to non-support by their respective student governing bodies.

The issue in question deals with freedom of speech as well as freedom of religious expression. If a religious student group at K-State requests funding from the Student Governing Association to sponsor a speaker who will talk about a particular religious matter — say Christian fundamentalism or the rise of Islam, for example — then shouldn't that student religious group be entitled to funding for that speaker if indeed the funds are available?



After looking into the situation here on our home turf, it appears SGA and the University Activities Board try to "stay away" from funding any religious or political group for events clearly religious or political in nature. I could not find any reference in the UAB constitution and bylaws of prohibiting funding of a UAB registered group based on the fact that the group has a religious or political orientation.

Apparently, then, any UAB-registered organization may be entitled to funding for its events if funds are available and the event meets certain requirements as stated in Article 5 section 502 of the UAB bylaws — regardless of the religious or political orientation of the group.

I have got to be overlooking something here, because this sounds too good to be true. Do students really have this much freedom of expression? According to the folks in the UAB office, any registered UAB group may request SGA funding, but if the group is religious or political in nature, it will probably not receive any funding for an event because, as it has been aptly pointed out, if one religious or political group is funded, then all the rest will have the right to be funded as well.

At this point, then, where is the line drawn? Student fees would end up being spent on trying NOT to violate every group's First Amendment rights. Apparently, a couple religious and political groups have been funded in past years through student fees, but the events they requested the money for supposedly had no direct or specific religious or political orientation. Rather the events were more educational or cultural in scope.

I am still not exactly sure how the University can address this issue fairly. I do know, however, that we as Americans should have the highest regard for the 45 words which changed the direction of the United States 196 years ago. Many people have died for those 45 words and that is why they are defended and debated so intensely. By all means, we should exercise those rights given to us by the Founding Fathers, but let's not step on anyone's toes in our quest for expression.

Abused children need our help

RENEE ALONZO
Guest Columnist

What's it like to be an abused child? It is to be tormented physically, emotionally or sexually by adults around you — grown-ups you are supposed to be able to love and trust. This year, 1 million American children will find out exactly what this special pain is like. Two thousand of them will die. The National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse wants to eliminate this American tragedy. And K-State can help.

Child abuse is a national tragedy. Research shows educational programs and counseling works to keep child abuse from happening and the hurt doesn't ever have to happen to a child in the United States again. So many children have been abused that you know someone who has been abused as a child. Or you yourself have been mistreated. It touches every community in our state and nation.

The financial cost society bears in dealing in human suffering and wasted individual potential is immeasurable. Every inmate in Lansing State Penitentiary reported being abused by the time he was 10 years old. Abused children grow up to be abusers of their own children or wives. They are violent people. They are people with few happy memories after a childhood filled with fear and shame.

Kappa Delta wants to help. One hundred fifteen college chapters throughout the United States set aside St. Patrick's Day to collect a wee bit o' the green to donate to the NCPCA. Since most of us will be off somewhere far from the hallowed halls of K-State, we've decided to ask for your help this week, before you go home or to the exciting place you'll be.

"Oh, another greek philanthropy, big deal." You may be thinking that right now. C'mon, admit you're thinking that. But it's not just any other project. Eighty percent of the money raised will stay right here in the Riley County area to prevent child abuse here in Manhattan and the surrounding communities. Some of the money raised goes into various programs for school children and some to educating young parents and single mothers how to be loving and proud parents.

Happy Bear comes to visit the kindergarten children to make them aware of what child abuse is and how to report it. Junior high kids are shown a film about an extraterrestrial who's never experienced the sense of touch on her home planet. The children in the film teach her about good touching and bad touching. In 1987, the NCPCA developed a program for latch-key children to help them get over the fear of being alone when their parents are away at work.

The other 20 percent of the money we raise will be sent to Chicago to the NCPCA offices where it is distributed for more in-depth research for the development of new programs. K-State's Kappa Delta chapter is helping to prevent child abuse by sponsoring a teeter-totter marathon through Thursday this week in front of the Union or inside the courtyard if the weather isn't favorable.

Teams of two will teeter-totter for an hour from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. wearing costumes. Since it's the week before spring break, teams will wear the clothes they'll wear wherever they are next week. Or, they could wear green to show the St. Pat's spirit. The costumes will be judged for originality and creativity.

Many campus groups have volunteered their time and money in helping our cause. We invited all the registered campus groups to make this a K-State effort, not just a greek one. Besides K-State groups, we've obtained the help of Manhattan area merchants. They have volunteered money and prizes for our costume contest. Yes, the team in the silliest costume wins some neat stuff from Manhattan merchants.

Besides being able to catch a few pre-spring break rays while watching the people you know and love looking silly in front of the Union for all to see, you'll be able to donate any money you really don't need for break at a table inside the Union. We all can give a little.

Even if you only give the change from a Pepsi, you'll be helping prevent tragedy in a child's life.

C'mon, K-State. Let's show Manhattan that we don't just go to school and Aggieville here. Let's show them we care about the kids here and around the nation. We can let them know that being a child doesn't have to hurt.

Then let's all take off and have a great spring break!

Corrosive effect

Editor,

I have wrestled with the issue of the restoration of the death penalty in Kansas in my own mind for some time and I have come to believe the death penalty should not be restored. Please understand that this was no knee-jerk conclusion on my part. I am a husband, a father, a grandfather and a Vietnam veteran. I place a high priority on the protection of the innocent, and I believe in appropriate punishment for the guilty insofar as it is intended to deter future criminal conduct and provide restitution to the victimized.

My opposition to the death penalty results from the conclusion that it will accomplish neither. Further, the probability that we will, as a citizenry, eventually execute an innocent person presents an intolerable moral burden to my espousal of this deliberate act. The fact that past sentences of death have fallen disproportionately upon the poor and minorities arouses further misgivings.

But, in the final analysis, I am as concerned with what enactment of a death penalty does to us, the executioners, and to our attitudes about the sanctity of human life. The corrosive effect can already be seen in the unseemly discussion which suggests that the fate of death penalty legislation is tied to the relative cost of executing a prisoner vs. the cost of incarcerating a prisoner for life.

I am also disturbed at the attitude our governor has presented with respect to this issue. Gov. Mike Hayden may regard the death sentence as necessary, but it should, at the very least, be a "sad necessity."

I believe the importance of this issue requires that no citizen be passive with regard to its outcome. For my part, I wish to express my admiration to Rep. Joe Knopp for his courage in publicly opposing a measure which arouses strong emotional and popular support. Rep. Ivan Sand, on the other hand, appears to be hanging his decision upon how much it will cost to carry out the execution process.

If this provides a politic position from which to oppose the death penalty, then I will be grateful for his position even though it springs from impoverished rationale. Sen. Merrill Werts, while recognizing that "...the question of what is good policy is more important than dollars," nevertheless seems adamant in support of restoration of the death penalty.

I encourage all readers to write to the legislators mentioned above to encourage them to vote against the reintroduction of the death penalty in Kansas. Even if it is determined that we can execute people inexpensively, the price is too high.

Corruptive impact

Editor,

In an editorial titled, "Humanities 'under seige' at University" in the February 23 Collegian, Donald Hedrick, arguing for scholarly and "interpretive" work in the humanities, has not said to what innate purpose.

Socrates was the archetype of the humanities. He sought to make man a better human in relationship values which, in its applied specifics, means a better father, a better mother, a better son or daughter or husband or wife, for these are the closest relationships known to man.

If humanities served this purpose, parents will contribute all sorts of money to send their children to go and get it. But humanities has veered far from its innate purpose. In many ways, it actually exerts a corruptive influence. For example, in "The Tempest" referred to in the editorial, Miranda and Prospero have a mutually dependent loving father-daughter relationship, to each the other is all and everything. One will do a psychoanalytic study on Miranda to conclude her dependence is sickly, it denies her individuality etc., perhaps, even hinting a touch of Electra complex (what could they be doing alone on a desert island?)

Humanities has bertayed the people, especially in the period of their greatest need when machine-age, materialism and nihilism have left them groping.

SDI controversy

Editor,

Re: Joe Lask's column "Halting SDI research a mistake" in Wednesday's Collegian. After reading this article, I can only conclude that the opening sentence, "Sometimes we make decisions based on emotions instead of rational thought," was intended to explain all that followed.

In response to Professor Al Compaan's opposition to SDI due to infeasibility, Lask is compelled to "disagree with his logic and presumptuous statements that do nothing more than vent politically based opinions."

First of all, Compaan's judgment is based upon his knowledge of laser physics. Does Lask claim to be more knowledgeable in this field?

Secondly, Lask supports his opinion with those of George Washington, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy. Why not include Ronald Reagan? These men are all politicians.

Later, Lask says, "An argument that SDI is 'technically infeasible' shows no concern for the advancement of science and technology."

If, by this, Lask is inferring that Compaan is uninterested in scientific research, he is obviously unfamiliar with Compaan's work. Anyone who knows Compaan can tell you that he is a first-rate researcher.

Surely Lask cannot argue with the logic of another physicist, Albert Einstein, who said, "One cannot simultaneously prepare for war and prevent war." The solution reached through rational thought is disarmament. As Lask says in his closing sentence, "A sure way not to succeed is not to try."

SGA bureaucrat

Editor,

If you read Patrick Muir's column, "Involvement: Students can make a difference," in the March 2 Collegian, you might believe you know how to become a Student Governing Association bureaucrat like Muir. The column (which had fewer "I" statements than Muir's average) recommended students apply for one of a score of available committees, get accepted and make new friends! How ideal!

But to become a student bureaucrat as Muir did, it would be easier if you knew someone like his classmate Steven Johnson, the outgoing student body president. That was how Muir joined SGA. The students who have felt most comfortable with joining the somewhat bizarre SGA atmosphere have been those who have already had friends in it.

The socially organized greek students have dominated Student Senate for ages. For the most part, the senators' friends and acquaintances have applied for the committees.

Muir's token effort of writing a column to urge uninvolved students to apply is trivial in comparison to how he killed the greatest opportunity SGA has ever had at increasing the diversity of involved students. Muir's one significant act as a cabinet member was to provide Johnson the convenient idea of vetoing a referendum and setting up a committee to investigate the vetoed issue.

Had the referendum passed, it would have guaranteed a reasonable number of seats in Senate to on-campus and off-campus students, thus allowing a perpetual input from these students, their friends and acquaintances. The bureaucrats believe SGA has worked just fine because it has worked well for them — the minority, the elitists, the most homogenous.

The only "difference" Muir has made through SGA is in preserving the status quo. Consequently, he has selfishly perpetuated the inability of University administrators to recognize the range of values and concerns of the diverse majority — the independent students.

John Dierks, a member of Charlie's Neighborhood Bar Dart Team, concentrates on aiming his dart during the Mid-Kansas Dart Association League held every Tuesday evening. Dierks has been throwing darts competitively for three years.

Dart league renewing interest

By JOLA MURPHY
Special to the Collegian

Some K-State students and Manhattan residents are using their spare time to revamp the once-popular and sometimes obsessive sport of throwing darts.

The Mid-Kansas Dart Association has seven teams in Manhattan competing every Tuesday. MKDA teams have at least four members and are sponsored by local drinking establishments.

Jenny Boyce, MKDA president, said Manhattan had as many as 30 teams in local dart leagues several years ago. Now the MKDA is in the process of rebuilding the program.

"We need more young and inexperienced teams to join," she said. "I think that is the key to getting back up to where we want to be.

"I've really enjoyed myself (in the league), and now that I'm president, I've taken on a lot of responsibility to build the program back up."

John Dierks, member of Charlie's Neighborhood Bar team, has been throwing darts competitively for three years.

"It gives me something to do," Dierks said. "It's not real cutthroat competition. I put a lot of emphasis on the fact that I'm still using my hands and practicing hand-eye coordination."

Dart meets consist of three different types of dart games. First the teams play four individual games of 501. Each member starts with 501 points, and as the board is hit, points are deducted. The first to reach zero, two out of three times, wins the game.

One game of Team 801 is then played by each team. In this game, the goal of reaching zero is an effort by the entire team.

The teams then play two games of Double Cricket. In this game, throwers have to hit certain spots on the board. The first team to hit all designated points wins the game.

Although the dart teams are predominantly male, a few females have taken the plunge and joined in the fun despite the drastic male/female ratio.

"I haven't felt inferior yet," said Alexia Pepper, member of Charlie's team. "I just joined to get out and away from my kids."

Boyce, who throws for Auntie Mae's Parlor, said she thinks the men are very receptive to women in the leagues and encourages more to join. Boyce is a three-year veteran to competitive darts.

Tony Short, captain of Brother's Tavern team, said his team is young, but they plan to keep active in the future to improve their dart-throwing skills.

"We are one of the youngest teams in dart leagues, but we are learning quickly and have picked up a lot of useful tips from the veterans," Short said.

Lee Elder, member of Auntie Mae's team and six-year veteran of competitive darts, said he started playing as a hobby. Then, it became an obsession.

"I enjoy the skill that's involved," Elder said. "It's a game that a lot of people can play at different levels and have a good time. It's a fun game you can play at parties."

Elder said he played in a $50,000 dart tournament in Nebraska two years ago and made it to the quarter finals.

Although the members play in teams, MKDA emphasizes individual performance by using a special category called All-Star Points.

Any member scoring more than 95 points in one throw in a game of 501 or Team 801 receives the same amount of All-Star Points. At the end of the season, trophies for outstanding performance will be awarded.

WIBW to televise first-round game

WIBW-TV in Topeka, channel 13 in Manhattan, will televise the K-State men's basketball team's first appearance in the NCAA postseason tournament since 1982.

Tipoff for the Georgia-K-State matchup in the first-round, West Regional game is scheduled for 1:07 p.m. (CST). WIBW will begin its broadcast from Salt Lake City at 1 p.m. (CST), said television programming director Kent Cornish.

After CBS and ESPN declined broadcast rights to the game, both WIBW and KSNT submitted bids to the NCAA for broadcast rights.

WIBW also bid for and received rights to televise the first-round, Southeast Regional game at 1:30 p.m. Friday between Kansas and Houston.

Networks feature Big Eight schools

ESPN and CBS networks plan to broadcast live Oklahoma's and Missouri's debut games in the NCAA tournament. At noon Thursday, ESPN will have the Missouri-Xavier contest from Indianapolis. At 11:30 p.m. Friday, CBS will show the Oklahoma-Tulsa matchup from Tuscon, Ariz.

If K-State gets past Georgia in its first-round game, the 'Cats will make their first appearance this season on national television. At 2:30 p.m. Saturday, CBS will show the UNLV-Idaho State winner vs. K-State-Georgia winner live from Salt Lake City.

And if the television is in the shop

WIBW radio will have live broadcasts of both the K-State men's and women's opening-round games. The pregame show for the Lady Cats' matchup with Northwestern in Evanston, Ill., will start at 7 p.m. Wednesday. The radio station will begin coverage of the men's game with Georgia 30 minutes prior to tipoff Thursday.

Tickets available for NCAA games

Tickets for the Wildcats' and the Lady Cats' NCAA clashes are still available. Admission to the two-game session at Salt Lake City which includes K-State and Georgia is $11. Orders may be placed at the Wildcat ticket office.

For the Lady Cats-Northwestern battle, tickets will be available at Northwestern's ticket office until game time Wednesday. Admission is $5 for adults, and $2 for students.

How to get to games from K-State

Spokespersons from Manhattan's three travel agencies said several people had called about plane fares to Chicago and Salt Lake City, but most 'Cat fans were opting to stay in town for the first-round games.

If fans choose to drive, plan on allowing plenty of time for the road trip from Manhattan as it is roughly 14 hours to Chicago (659 miles) and 20 hours to Salt Lake City (1,025 miles) — if motorists average 50 miles an hour including stops.

One option in traveling to Chicago is taking I-70 east to Kansas City and then Highway 55 north from Kansas City to Chicago. Salt Lake City-bound fans can take I-70 west to Denver, then I-25 north to Interstate 80 which is directly linked with Salt Lake City and avoids most of the mountain traffic.

ICAT members invite Wildcat fans

Wildcat fans are invited to meet with Coach Lon Kruger during the ICAT meeting at 12:30 p.m. today in the K-State Union's Big Eight room. The Wildcats plan to leave for Salt Lake City at 5:30 p.m. today in front of Ahearn Field House.

Rugby team wins opener vs. Omaha

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's rugby team won its spring season opener Saturday by dumping Omaha 14-11 in Manhattan.

Coach Bill Knopic said he was pleased with his team's start and also surprised by Omaha.

"I'm very pleased with the overall play of the team," Knopic said. "Omaha wasn't as tough as we anticipated, but the competition down the road will prove to be tougher."

Omaha took a 4-0 lead on a 40-meter set play before K-State took a 6-4 advantage on David Todd's 40-meter run. Knopic added the extra-point kick.

Omaha momentarily regained the lead, 8-6, on a 15-meter run down the sideline before K-State closed the first half with a five-meter scoring run from Knopic.

Knopic missed the kick which left the Wildcats leading 10-8 at the half.

In the second half, K-State built its lead to 14-8 on Steve Duncan's 10-meter run before Omaha pulled to within three after a 20-meter penalty kick.

Omaha threatened at the end of the game, but K-State's defenders did a "tremendous job" of keeping them from scoring, Knopic said.

In the "B" game Omaha built a 4-0 first-half lead, increased the margin to 17-0 in the second stanza, and went on to a 17-6 victory over the 'Cats. Dave Stoltz scored on a try for K-State and Syed Z. Hassan converted the kick for K-State's lone scores.

K-State's rugby teams will host the University of Nebraska Saturday. On March 21, the Wildcats will play the G.O.A.T.S. RFC team, also in Manhattan.

Embarrassing nickname sticks

Bain finishing 30th officiating year

By DAVE WAGNER
Sports Writer

Official Jim "Boomer" Bain has been a fixture in college basketball arenas for almost 30 years.

When he recalled how he received his nickname, Bain said it was the most embarrassing moment in his career.

"Very early in my officiating career in the Big Eight, I was working a ballgame with Wayne Lichty, a veteran official," Bain said.

"I was very demonstrative back then and was on the baseline with about 3 minutes to go in the half. There was a charging foul at the free-throw line and I came off the baseline and was going to take away the call from Wayne. When I got to the free-throw line, I had my fist up in the air and whenever I called a charging foul, I'd bring it down and shoot it straight out, like throwing a punch at a fighter, and I'd say 'boom.'

"And so that's what I did. Simultaneously, I planted my left foot on the floor and when I did, I hit a pool of perspiration a I did the splits. I can share with you that it was a crushing experience," he added. "When the sickness left my body, I realized that I had ripped my trousers from my crotch up to my beltline in back. At the time the only thing I wore under my officiating trousers was a jockstrap."

Instead of changing pants, Bain agreed to wait out the remaining 3 minutes until halftime.

"I was running up and down the court holding my trousers and everytime I'd make a call I'd let go and my rear end would pop out again. And when I didn't the fans — and this is how I got my nickname — began to chant, 'Boomer, Boomer, let 'em go, let 'em go,' and it just stuck with me the rest of my officiating career."

Bain, 55, has been officiating since 1958 when he began calling basketball at a YMCA church league. From there, he gradually worked his way to working in the Big Eight, (1965-84, 1986-current), the Big Ten (1968-current), Metro (1982-current) and Missouri Valley (1963-sporadically to current) conferences.

This season he has called about 45 Division I contests. When not officiating, he attends to his duties as vice president of GMAC Mortgage Corporation.

Bain, who is married and has three children, said the highlights of his officiating career have been working three NCAA men's Final Fours and two title games: 1971 (UCLA 68, Villanova 62) and 1978 (Kentucky 94, Duke 88).

When giving attribution to his success, Bain recognizes concentration and determination as the foremost reasons why he has excelled.

'Over the years I've devoted a great deal of determination and dedication to basketball officiating, not only knowledge of the rules, but judgment, my physical condition, and accepting all the games I could handle when I began refereeing.'
— Official Jim Bain

"Over the years I've devoted a great deal of determination and dedication to basketball officiating, not only knowledge of the rules, but judgment, my physical condition, and accepting all the games I could handle when I began refereeing," he said.

Going into his 30th season as an official, Bain has been faced with the question of how much longer he can continue to referee effectively.

"I really believe that there's not more than one or two years left in my officiating career," he said. "With my health situation (he suffered a heart attack May 5, 1985, underwent double-bypass surgery May 9 and had some temporary complications July 5) it brought me to the realization that the good Lord could take it away from me any time He wanted to. I feel fortunate that I've been given a second opportunity, so to speak, not only so far as my officiating career, but my life itself."

A logical step for Bain after retiring would be to pursue a referee supervisory position with either the Big Ten or Big Eight conferences. But a wrong call in an important Big Ten game cost him a shot at a supervising position.

During the 1981-82 season, Bain inadvertantly mixed up a player's numbers when calling a foul on Iowa who was playing Purdue. The free throw from the foul resulted in Purdue gaining a last-second, 66-65, win that knocked Iowa out of the Big Ten championship race.

"I pursued the supervisory position in the Big Ten a few years ago," Bain said. "But with the unfortunate situation I found myself in with the error on the Purdue-Iowa game, I guess the commissioner of the Big Ten, Wayne Duke, felt that it wouldn't be a workable situation for me, having experienced the disruption in my officiating career, to come into the position of supervisor at that time."

In reflecting on the incident, Bain commented on the state of officiating in college basketball.

"Because judgments are made in a split second, I'm not sure that we'll ever in officiating achieve a degree of efficiency that's going to be acceptable 40 minutes of every game," Bain said.

"There's always going to be controversy, controversial calls, but I really believe that over the last 10 years we've made great strides in standardizing officiating techniques, administration and interpretation of the rules."

For now, Bain said he has enjoyed this season and believes that so far it has been a relatively good one for he and the other officials around the country.

He hasn't yet made any definite plans for next season, but said that he is leaning toward officiating again.

"Last year, I reduced my schedule to about 30 games, whereas in years past I've been working anywhere from 60 to 65. This year it'll be about 45 games. But I think I've learned from the experience of the heart attack that I'm better able to control my emotions," Bain said.

"For example, not letting myself get as emotionally involved and upset at the office. I'm a mortgage banker and deal with the public and interest rates. It's a stressful profession. But now I recognize and have made adjustments."

Cardinals shun bid from other tourney

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The Louisville Cardinals, denied a chance to defend their national basketball title in the NCAA tournament, spurned postseason play Monday by rejecting a National Invitation Tournament bid.

Coach Denny Crum strode onto the playing floor of Crawford Gymnasium to announce the decision on the NIT and denounce the NCAA's move the day before.

"I'd like the NCAA selection committee to be held accountable for their actions. I would like a public response," Crum said.

The NIT chose Stephen F. Austin as its 32nd and last team.

Crum said Louisville was asked to participate in the NIT, but the players voted only 7-6 in favor of playing.

"The coaches felt if it was not a unanimous decision by the players, we would not be able to do our best," he said.

"A lot of the players need the academic concentration of not going to a tournament, and since we can't go to the NCAA..."

Crum called for "an absolute dead certain formula" for NCAA tournament selection, which he said would have put Louisville ahead of several schools in the final 64.

The Metro Conference's automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament was forfeited Sunday when Memphis State, on probation, defeated Louisville 75-52 for the Metro Tournament title. No conference team received an at-large NCAA bid.

In what he called "the most exaggerated case," Crum asked the NCAA to explain for "me and the thousands of Louisville fans how they could justify selecting Middle Tennessee."

"Our schedule was almost twice as difficult as theirs. We also played, on the road, Indiana, Purdue, Syracuse, UCLA...most of them Top Ten teams, on the road. The most difficult team Middle Tennessee played...was Michigan," he said. "There's no comparison in difficulty of schedule. There's no comparison in the leagues."

"Could it possibly be because the commissioner of the OVC, Jim Delaney, is on that selection committee? Or is it just that they did not do their homework? I would like a response from them," he said.

Delaney did not immediately comment. OVC spokesman Jon Vernon said he responded earlier to similar Crum statements by saying he was only one of eight selection committee members and did not have the power to include or eliminate a team.

As for the NIT, Crum called it "a great tournament."

"But our feeling was if our team did not feel 100 percent in favor of participating they would not practice hard, wouldn't work hard and wouldn't be the representative we would want to be," he said.

It will be the first time in Crum's 16-year tenure at Louisville that the Cardinals have not been in a postseason tournament.

Manning chosen as AP 1st-team All-American

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — David Robinson, the 7-foot-1 center who has been responsible for Navy's sudden success over the past three seasons, is the only unanimous selection on the 1986-87 Associated Press college basketball All-America team announced Monday.

Also chosen to the first team were Steve Alford of Indiana, the only repeater; Kenny Smith of North Carolina, Reggie Williams of Georgetown and Danny Manning of Kansas, a junior and the only underclassman.

Robinson, who averged 59 percent from the field, averaged 27.5 points, 11.8 rebounds and blocked 142 shots — best in the nation — this season. He is the only player in NCAA history to score 2,500 points, grab 1,300 rebounds and shoot 60 percent from the field during his career.

"I'm the only one who can stop me from scoring," Robinson said this season.

Alford, a four-year starter, is third-ranked Indiana's all-time scoring leader with 2,300 points. A member of the gold-medal 1984 Olympic team, he led the Hoosiers to a 24-4 record and a share of the Big Ten Conference title this year, making 86 3-point goals (51 percent) while averaging 21.8 points.

The 6-3 Smith, another four-year starter, used his quickness to lead North Carolina in scoring with a 16.9 average, run the offense and play a key defensive role.

Smith made 51 percent of his field-goal tries, including 75 3-pointers for 41 percent from long range. He led the team in assists (5.7) and tied backcourt partner Jeff Lebo for the team lead in steals with 45.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson calls his fourth-ranked team "Reggie and the Little Miracles." He adds, "Without Reggie, there would be no miracles."

The 6-7 Williams, only senior on the squad, carried the offensive load in leading Georgetown, 26-4, to a share of the Big East Conference's regular season championship and to the postseason title.

Manning, a versatile performer who played forward, center and guard, led the 20th-ranked Jayhawks, 23-10, in scoring (23.7) rebounding (9.7) and field goal percentage (62 percent). In the Big Eight tournament he scored a record 79 points in three games and was named the most valuable player although Kansas lost in the final.

First-assistant men's basketball coach Ron Stewart's main responsibilities are arranging team travel and scouting other teams. Stewart is now gathering information on the University of Georgia Bulldog's basketball team for the Wildcats first game Thursday in the NCAA tournament.

Wildcats can't travel without Stewart

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

In every organization there is an employee who deosn't get much attention, yet is vital to its operation.

First-year assistant coach Ron Stewart does some jobs most people don't notice for the NCAA tournament-bound Wildcats. In fact, without Stewart, the 'Cats would have had a tough time making it to Salt Lake City for their first-round game with Georgia.

"Last night and today we've spent a lot of time on the phone arranging this whole deal, so that, in essence, our team can get on the plane and go play the game," Stewart said.

Stewart said his main responsibilities are arranging team travel and scouting other teams. Those duties are important considering the road schedule of major-college basketball teams and important to Stewart considering K-State has traveled 14 times this season and may travel up to three more times, depending on its success in tournament play.

The NCAA tournament is, of course, the major task at hand for Stewart and the rest of the coaching staff and Georgia is the team K-State needs to learn about in a big hurry. That's where Stewart's job becomes invaluable.

"Specifically referring to the team right now, it's my responsibility to get information on Georgia. Of course, we need to get films, we need to talk to as many people as possible and we need to find out what we can about Georgia in a very short time. That's not all that easy," Stewart said.

Assistant Coaches of K-State

Having coached at Nebraska, Stewart knew of the fine crowds and basketball tradition at K-State.

What Stewart didn't expect, though, has been the one item that has thrilled him the most up until this point about the Wildcat basketball program.

"Probably the most impressive thing to me this year was our 'Midnight Madness' scrimmage.

"I expected it to be successful and expected our year to be successful and I knew Ahearn would be loud at the games, but I really didn't expect the support at...midnight that we got," he added.

Team's success made by great chemistry

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

Chemistry.

K-State assistant men's basketball coach Ron Stewart said great chemistry in all aspects of the program is the element that allowed a group of players, coaches and families — who didn't know each other until a few months ago — to achieve the degree of success the Wildcat basketball program has had this season.

"I think that Coach (Lon) Kruger has assembled a team and staff that was not together at all one year ago that has achieved an unbelievable degree of success.

"A year ago, none of us knew each other. We were all watching other teams play in the NCAA tournament and the players were ging on spring break here. It is incredible that we were able to bring it together," Stewart said.

Stewart emphasized Kruger's importance in the development of team relationships.

"The assistant coaches are very loyal and very supportive of what coach Kruger asks, but he gives us a great degree of our own responsiblity and allows us to work with him and for him. It's a very compatible relationship. He really makes you feel comfortable and a really strong part of things, yet you still have the respect to allow him to make the decisions. The whole compatibility is attributed to him and his style, because he doesn't break you down, he builds you up," Stewart said.

It wasn't until Oct. 15 when the 1986-87 version of the 'Cats started their daily regimen of being a cohesive unit. Since that time, not only have the players, coaches and trainers formed successful bonds, but so have the families of the coaching staff.

Professor of history wins Fulbright honor

By STACEY CAMPBELL
Collegian Reporter

A professor of history, who once almost opted for careers in baseball and the ministry, has been selected for the Fulbright Lectureship and Research Professorship in Australia.

"When I was 18 years old, I had to make a decision between the ministry and baseball," Robert Linder said. "I had a chance to sign with a professional baseball team, but I decided to study for the ministry, and then I switched to history and decided to teach."

Linder will leave in April to spend nine months researching and lecturing as a visiting professor for the history department at the University of Wollongong 50 miles south of Sydney, Australia.

The Fulbright Scholarship was established in 1947 for U.S. Sen. J. William Fulbright, D-Ark.

"Senator Fulbright sponsored legislation to get the scholarship through Congress," Linder said. "He was a great friend of higher education and wanted a greater exchange between students and scholars in all countries.

"Out of 1,000 people to apply, 300 were appointed to study in all areas, both lecture and research professorships," Linder said. "Mine (appointment) is combined."

The award has allowed many Americans to participate in scholarly programs and lectures, Linder said.

While in Australia, Linder said he will research and lecture on religion and American history. He and an Australian counterpart plan to write a book titled, "A Bicentennial History of Evangelical Christianity in Australia from 1788 to 1988."

"The combination I want to experience in Australia is to find out what the educational system is like and expand my horizon beyond the United States and Europe," Linder said. "I've never been to Australia."

Linder has been at K-State for 22 years. Classes he teaches include History of Christianity, Religion in American History, the Reformation Era, the Rise of Europe and the Modern Era.

Linder's interest in history stems from his childhood days.

"I have always liked history," Linder said. "As a fifth grader, I remember buying second-hand history books.

"I was interested in history a long way back, but my interest in religious history combined my personal and professional interest in one package," Linder said. "My concentration of study is history of religion and politics."

'Special' children find homes

By STACEY NANNINGA
Collegian Reporter

Every year, couples adopt parentless children in an effort to give them chances of a family, love and support.

Deb Wyant, social worker with Manhattan Social Rehabilitation Services, said the SRS has "special" children who deserve a chance at having a family that loves them.

The "special" children are those who have some type of handicap. These handicaps may be physical, emotional or mental.

The "special needs" children may also be sibling groups, older children or from a minority group. Wyant handles adoptions through the SRS that involve these "special needs" children.

"We are different in the type of adoptions we handle and the way we handle them," Wyant said. "We work with special children and our client is that child. We match the family to the child and not the child to the family as with most private adoptions."

The adoption procedure through SRS offices takes about six months, Wyant said. Once a family has indicated interest in adopting one of the children in-home evaluations begin.

The SRS does not conduct in-home assessments for a family who is not willing to accept a child over the age of 7. Wyant said the children they have are usually more than 7 years old and the SRS needs families who are willing to accept an older child.

The set age limit for in-home evaluations is 7, but this doesn't mean a family cannot adopt a younger child if one is available.

The SRS conducts studies of the family. They determine if the family would be a good candidate to receive one of their children.

A home assessment evaluates the families motive to adopt, the personality of the family, the children already in the family, the quality of the marital relationship, the attitude of the family toward the adoption and the attitudes of a "special needs" child and parenting one of these children.

Any family interested in adopting one of the children must have a physical examination. Wyant said the purpose of the examination is to determine if the family has any physical limitations that would limit their ability to provide for the child.

Another important factor in the examination is to make sure there is no reason why the parents would not live a normal life span, she said.

"Most of the children we have come from a family in which they were either victims of child abuse, neglected or sexually abused," Wyant said. "These children have already lost one set of parents, and we want to make sure that under normal circumstances they won't lose another parent."

The SRS has certain eligibility requirements for families who wish to adopt a child. The prospective parent must be more than 21 years of age, either single or married. If the prospective parent is married, the couple must exhibit a stable relationship. They must be in good health and be able to rear a child to maturity.

Wyant said the ages of parents adopting children through SRS are anywhere from 21 to 45 years old.

Another aspect taken into consideration when evaluating prospective parents is if the family has recently lost a child due to death or divorce, or if a child has recently been added to the home. If either of these circumstances are present, the family must have had time to recover from the loss in order for the new child to adjust and feel a part of the family.

The applicants must live in Kansas at the time they are applying for the adoption and have the financial resources to provide for themselves now.

Once the in-home assessment has been completed and all other requirements are met, the evaluation is sent to Topeka to the state SRS office where it is placed on file for accessibility to all offices across the state.

The files are reviewed every six months and if a family has not been matched with a child after three years, the family is removed from the files.

When a child becomes available for adoption the local SRS office contacts the state office and obtains all home studies that match the needs of the child they are trying to place, Wyant said.

A staff made up of social workers and a minority representative from the race of the child, when applicable, review the applications and pick a first and second place home for the child.

The local SRS office is contacted and the local social worker contacts the chosen family.

After this initial contact has been made a visit is scheduled between the family and the child. Providing everything works out the child is eventually taken home, Wyant said.

'We work with special children and our client is that child. We match the family to the child and not the child to the family as with most private adoptions.'

—Deb Wyant

The SRS works closely with the family for a period of six months to one year to help overcome any adjustment problems they may encounter. The SRS also provides any counseling that may be necessary.

After the supervisory period has expired, the family is responsible for hiring an attorney and a hearing is scheduled to finalize the adoption.

The children available for adoption through SRS have had legal parental rights severed. Previous family ties are severed because the family is either unwilling or unable to take the necessary steps to make the home safe for the child.

The court requires the SRS to take every possible step to make life in the family acceptable before taking away the parental rights. It may be documented for a period of two or more years that the original family is unwilling to make the changes.

Before SRS puts a child up for adoption, they contact other relatives as a resource of placement for the child. If this doesn't work out, the court then decides to sever the ties.

A family adopting a child who has a severe handicap may be eligible to receive some financial assistance. The financial assistance is provided by the SRS because the child will likely have major medical bills and would not be adopted because of these limitations.

"Our goal is to have all of our children adopted and if it takes additional financial support, we are willing to provide that," Wyant said.

Financial assistance may not be just for medical expenses. The home of the adopting parents may need to be made handicap accessible or other modifications may be necessary. The assistance may be in the form of an initial payment or an ongoing payment for a period of years.

The SRS has a wide variety of children available for adoption. Although each child is classified as a "special needs" child, these needs vary from behavior problems to severely handicapped problems.

Wyant said it takes a special family to adopt the children they have available. These families need to show extra amounts of love, understanding and patience, she said.

"Families who adopt older children need to have a double dose of these qualities," Wyant said. "It's not that these children are not lovable, but they need a little more understanding since they are older."

The cost of adopting a child through the SRS office is minimal. Wyant said the only cost incurred by the family is the cost of the attorney when the adoption is finalized.

Senate committee endorses extension of farmers' service

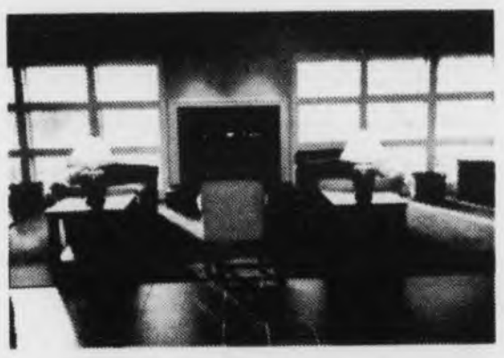
By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Farmers Assistance, Counseling and Training Service would be allowed to keep its in-house attorney, and perhaps add another attorney to its staff, under a bill endorsed Monday by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

The bill would extend the life of the FACTS program for three years beyond its scheduled June 30 expiration date. However, as it was introduced, the measure stripped the program of its ability to hire staff attorneys and provide legal representation for financially distressed farmers.

"We amended it to allow the (agency director) to hire in-house lawyers, contract with Kansas Legal Services or go with private attorneys," said Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa and committee chairman. "I thought that was a pretty good compromise and it passed without a vote against it."

Gov. Mike Hayden has proposed eliminating $160,000 in funding for the free legal services provided by the FACTS program, which was implemented in 1985 as a means of providing counseling, assistance and legal help to farmers in financial crises.



The FACTS program has contracted with Kansas Legal Service Inc., which provided a team of eight attorneys who have handled 560 cases since July 1985.

The hotline has produced 15,000 telephone calls from about 3,800 individuals and families, at a rate of nearly 20 per day.

Of the nine people now on the FACTS staff, four would be lost under Hayden's budget cut proposal, leaving only one farm finance specialist, one attorney, the director and two secretaries.

'Strange' melody mix makes band a favorite

By ANDRE KELLEY
Collegian Reporter

If you've never heard of the Bon Ton Soul Accordion Band, you're not the only one.

They're the entertainment at 8 tonight in Brothers Tavern for the rugby benefit helping to celebrate the "A-team's" (rugby squad, not the TV series) victory this past weekend. The group is a crowd favorite and if you listen, they'll be yours too.

Music Review

The Bon Ton Soul Accordion Band uses a very strange but effective mixture of '60s rock 'n' roll, Cajun and Reggae. They also make good use of horns, guitar and, surprisingly, accordions. Kind of like the Fabulous Thunderbirds meet Lawrence Welk.

The six-man crew is based originally in Kansas City and is led by Richard (Lil' Richie to most) Lucente. Once a nationally acclaimed graphic designer, Lucente is now a full-time musician.

Their first album, (self-titled) is on the Graphic Records label and their lyrics, Lucente claims, are about love and sex and leave nothing to the imagination.

Where the name "Bon Ton" comes from is anybody's guess, but the soul part isn't so hard to figure when they play their own lazy, reggae-like theme song.

One of their tunes "Arms of a Man," has a definite early '60s feel to it, with its hectic guitar and falsetto "shoo-waps."

"Kiki," a tribute to Lucente's wife, is a short but sweet Aussie flavored number that starts out slow but winds into a grade school accordion teacher's nightmare and a rock 'n' roller's foot-stomper.

On "Don't It Feel Right," the lead singer croons closely enough like Billy Vera (of the Beaters) to make you wonder.

And with accordions, horns and wailing guitar, "Steal Away" (one of their best numbers) is an R&B smoothie where they most definitely "be jammin.'"

Like Johnny Reno & the Sax Maniacs, this band is notorious for its wild and unpredictable barroom antics and crowd rousing ad-libs. This is one band you should not miss.

Quit smoking.

Provost candidates to visit with students

By KIM GREER
Collegian Reporter

Students and community members will have a chance today to talk to one of the four candidates vying for the University provost position.

Dennis G. Brown, dean of the College of Letters and Science and professor of chemistry at Montana State University, began his campus visit Monday. He will hold an open forum in Union 212 for University and community members from 10:30 to 11:50 a.m. today. The forum will provide a chance to question Brown directly about campus issues.

The other finalists chosen for the position by a provost search committee will also hold public forums on campus later in the month.

Brown's itinerary included a short interview with University President Jon Wefald Monday morning. Following this meeting, Brown met with members of the Deans' Council, which will give Wefald information to help him make the final selection.

Brown will have another meeting with Wefald at the end of his campus visit.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and member of the search committee, said this meeting will last longer because Brown and Wefald will probably discuss budgets, structure and other elements a provost must work with daily.

Another provost candidate, J.L. Ozbun, dean of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at Washington State University, will follow the same basic format. Ozbun will be on campus Wednesday. He will have a public forum in Union 212 Thursday from 10:30 to 11:50 a.m. He will also meet with the Deans' Council and with Wefald.

Reagan said the other two candidates will make visits to campus after spring break.

He said the next two candidates will follow the same itinerary framework as the first two candidates.

Provost Owen Koeppe will step down June 30 after seven years in the position.

Crews prepare to salvage British ferry

By The Associated Press

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium — Survivors and victims' relatives joined in an ecumenical prayer service Monday for those who died when water rushed through a British ferry three days earlier and turned it on its side.

Salvage crews prepared to right the partially submerged vessel so scores of bodies can be recovered from inside. The Herald of Free Enterprise, which capsized Friday night while leaving Zeebrugge harbor for Dover, rests starboard-side-up on a sandbar.

More than 130 people are thought to have died in the shipwreck.

Olivier Vannesta, governor of West Flanders province, said one more survivor had been located: someone who escaped the disaster but did not report to authorities immediately.

That left 81 people still missing and presumed dead. Vanneste said 409 people survived and 53 bodies had been recovered.

Paul Ellis, spokesman for the Townsend Thoresen line that owns the ship, announced a plan, beginning Monday night, to return bodies to Britain by ferry. Most of the dead were British.

Transport Minister John Moore of Britain said Monday in Parliament that a public inquiry will be conducted into the disaster and the government will donate 1 million pounds ($1.6 million) to the survivors and families of the dead.

Belgian officials said a panel of maritime law experts had begun an investigation.

"All of the survivors, including the crew, have been questioned," said Philippe van Bale, spokesman for investigating magistrate Arthur Doest.

Ship's boatswain Marc Stanley was reported to have said the accident was his fault because he left the front loading doors open, but van Bale said he "denied under questioning he ever made that statement." Stanley returned to Britain on Sunday night.

Bodies were laid out in rows of coffins at a makeshift morgue in Zeebrugge's sports center.

Preliminary identification was done at the naval base adjacent to the harbor. More relatives arrived Monday to identify their kin.

Officials said relatives had identified 34 bodies.

If all 81 missing are declared dead, the final toll would be 134, by far the worst accident of modern times on the ferry runs between Britain and the continent.

At St. Donaas, a small, neo-Gothic brick church 400 yards from the temporary morgue, about 50 relatives and survivors held a 20-minute service.

"It was very simple. But there were deep emotions," said Richard Third, Anglican bishop of Dover. "The service was very moving."

trayed Reagan's National Security Council staff as virtually out of control and criticized Reagan for not keeping closer tabs on what Poindexter and North were doing in connection with arms sales to Iran and possible diversion of some profits to Nicaraguan rebels.

Also at the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that putting together a legal defense for Reagan in connection with the Iran-Contra case "is not necessary."

Reagan has said he had no advance knowledge that weapons profits might be going to the Contras. And Fitzwater reiterated presidential adviser David M. Abshire's Sunday statement that Reagan couldn't have been told about a diversion of profits and then have forgotten it.

In another development, one member of the Senate's Iran-Contra panel, Paul Trible, R-Va., predicted on Monday that the committee would probably vote "this week to grant (limited) immunity to some of the major players" in the affair, and thus compel their testimony about the apparent diversion of funds to the Contras.

Other officials said they believed any decision on possible immunity was two or three weeks away, however, and a spokesman said no meeting has been scheduled this week for the Senate panel.

Speaker recalls McCain's endeavors

By JENNIFER LINDSEY
Staff Writer

In the quarter of a century that James McCain was University president, he transformed a small Kansas college into a true university of excellence, said John Chalmers, former dean of arts and sciences and vice president for academic affairs.

Chalmers, who worked with McCain for 12 years, delivered a eulogy Tuesday afternoon at a memorial service for McCain at Countryside United Methodist Church in Topeka.

In 1950, when McCain became president of Kansas State College, student enrollment was 4,947. By the time he retired in 1975, the college had become a university and enrollment had increased to more than 16,000.

This outstanding enrollment increase was due to the increased excellence of the University as a whole, Chalmers said.

"The only way to attract students is to have a better university. Through (McCain's) leadership, we had a better university," he said.

A key step in the process was designating Kansas State College a university in 1959.

The University improved in many ways under McCain's direction, but his major emphasis was on academics.

"His first priority was for the quality of the academic programs," Chalmers said.

During the 1960s, the College of Business Administration was established, the College of Veterinary Medicine was enlarged and the nuclear engineering curriculum became the first in the nation to be officially accredited.

In addition, the Food and Feed Grain Institute was approved and, in 1973, the College of Business Administration received official accreditation from the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business.

An additional improvement made to attract prospective students was building the K-State Union in 1953.

McCain also emphasized the importance of a qualified staff during his tenure. From the time he began his position, he attempted to increase preparation and high ratings of the faculty — and he succeeded.

In 1950, only 23 percent of the faculty held a doctorate degree but, by 1960, the number had increased to

Leaders slam Contra funds

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Democrats, including one declaring Nicaragua's Contra rebels "mired in corruption," urged colleagues Tuesday to delay $40 million in military aid and insist the Reagan administration pursue opportunities for peace in Central America.

House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas told reporters that Wednesday's House vote on the aid installment will represent the start of a new, long-term struggle over the administration's policy.

He said that while Democrats may lose the opening skirmish, the vote will serve as an important building stone in the battle to cut off aid to the Contras permanently.

House Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois acknowledged that the Contra-aid cause had been hurt by revelations of the Iran-Contra affair, including allegations that profits from arms sales were diverted to the rebels.

"That hasn't helped us. ...I have to be realistic when I see votes slipping away," Michel said.

However, Wright conceded that he cannot count on the votes to enforce a moratorium on spending the money in view of President Reagan's certain veto. He said the $40 million, the last installment in a $100 million aid package approved last year, "probably will go forward."

Most lawmakers agreed, and Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said the money was "in the bank."

But Wright said a strong vote to stall on making the money available will signal the White House that future aid requests will be in serious trouble on Capitol Hill.

At the White House, during a meeting with House and Senate Republicans, Reagan said of the House Democrats, "All they are trying to do is break the commitment that the Congress made last year."

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said "the president most certainly would veto" such a move, and he added, "we think we have the votes to sustain a veto."

Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., a Contra aid opponent, said that because there is no chance of rallying the two-thirds majorities required to override a presidential veto, no political capital should be expended on the $40 million weapons-aid issue.

Dodd said the major battle should be to end the Contra aid effort pemanently — by scrapping a separate Reagan request for $105 million in further aid.

House Majority Leader Tom Foley, D-Wash., said of Wednesday's vote, "What we're demonstrating by this vote is that the president doesn't have the votes to get the $105 million."

Wright and his allies say they want urgent U.S. support for the peace plan offered last month by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias and for significant economic aid to the four Central American democracies: Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador.

Walsh seeks delay of aides' immunity

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lawrence E. Walsh, the independent counsel investigating the Iran-Contra affair, asked Congress on Tuesday to wait at least 90 days before granting limited immunity to key witnesses.

He vowed to challenge in court any attempt to act sooner.

"The danger is substantial," Walsh said, that his probe would be compromised by any effort to move quickly to grant immunity to former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter or his fired aide, Lt. Col. Oliver North.

Key lawmakers in the House and Senate have said in recent days they hoped to move quickly to grant limited immunity from prosecution to Poindexter and North in order to compel their testimony.

But Walsh, speaking with reporters after a two-hour session with the House panel, said if Congress moves before 90 days, "we would then have to do whatever we could to get ourselves as much time as possible to perfect our case" against anyone who might be indicted.

Walsh said he would deliver a similar message when he met with the Senate investigating committee Wednesday.

Under federal law, Walsh would be able to delay a grant of immunity for roughly 30 days. Any court challenge by him would create a conflict with congressional investigators that both sides have carefully sought to avoid.

Earlier Tuesday, Senate committee chairman Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said the panel should not wait until July to arrange immunity to force testimony by North and Poindexter and perhaps others. "If you want the full story, there's no question" that immunity will have to be granted to key figures, he said.

Leaders of the House panel were also meeting Tuesday with their Senate counterparts, in part to deal with disagreements over when to bring up the immunity issue for the investigation's central figures.

Walsh said his request for a delay covered any grant of immunity to retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord, who according to investigators played key roles in both

Soviet progress comes slowly, Gorbachev says

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — In two years, Mikhail S. Gorbachev has steered the Soviet Union toward an arms control agreement, mapped out a rescue plan for the economy and opened a small window for social and artistic expression.

But the Soviet leader had said progress in changing the vast country has been painfully slow, and his campaigns for higher productivity and technological innovation have been met by resistance and indifference.

Gorbachev took control on March 11, 1985, a day after the death of Konstantin U. Chernenko, and became the fourth man in less than three years to hold the post of Communist Party general secretary.

A robust contrast to his aged and ailing predecessors, Gorbachev made foreign trips and traveled to distant regions of the Soviet Union to drum up support for his campaigns.

He held two summits with President Reagan. The first was in Geneva, where hopes for better superpower relations were kindled, and then there was the October meeting in Iceland when they failed to reach agreement on arms control.

In a speedy Kremlin housecleaning, Gorbachev replaced several old guard members of the Politburo with representatives of a younger generation that for the most part embraces his efforts toward broad change in Soviet society.

Some of the nation's most prominent dissidents, including Andrei D. Sakharov, have been released from prisons, labor camps or exile, suggesting to some that Gorbachev is confident enough to withstand criticism.

Emigration of Jews and dissidents, however, has not notably increased.

Provost candidate stresses research, instruction

By STEVE LAWRENCE
Collegian Reporter

Although the faculty may be the heart and soul of the University, the students are the primary reason the University exists, said Dennis G. Brown, dean of the College of Letters and Science and professor of chemistry at Montana State University. Brown is one of four candidates for the position currently held by retiring University provost Owen J. Koeppe.

"We (as faculty) try to unleash the creative energies of students," Brown said Tuesday at an open forum in the Union.

The instruction and research at the University should take priority as the main function, he said.

"All other functions should be designed to complement that function," Brown said.

Although academic issues are important, research can be controversial, he said.

"We create new ideas through research, and that can threaten people," Brown said. Research also threatens the public because many do not understand its purpose.

"Research is the most exciting thing that takes place on a University campus," he said.

Another concept Brown said he would stress is openness and accessibility to faculty and students.

"Communication is one of the most important parts of the job," Brown said.

He said open communication would help to build reasonable consensus between the students' needs and the administration's desires. The structure for communication is already in place, but in order to foster the communication process, Brown said he would make appointments with student leaders to discuss student concerns on regular basis.

Brown said he has an "absolute dedication to quality" and hopes to be recognized as one who achieves goals and sets priorities.

One priority is the possible restructuring of the academic curricula, he said.

"There has been a recent outcry from the business community that students need a better general education," Brown said.

In agreement with the business sector, he said, "People who have a sound educational background work better in the workplace."

Specific curricula seem to be strong while the general education seems to be weak, he said, and it is the general education that gets people through problems they encounter in the the workplace.

"The question, 'How do we know the curriculums are effecting the students?' should be answered," Brown said. "Personally, I don't care if we get at the problem through a core curriculum or in another way, but it has to be addressed."

Brown said the faculty's role as a resource to the University should be re-evaluated in times of low enrollment and be utilized in other areas.

Dropping programs is not the answer either, he said.

One program that should receive continued emphasis is extension education in all Kansas communities. K-State, more than any other institution in the state, has a responsibility to extension education because of its land-grant status, he said.

Brown said he applied for the position because he likes land-grant institutions and would enjoy being the spokesman for academic issues to the president.

Another candidate for the position, J.L. Ozbun, dean of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at Washington State University, will have a public forum in Union 212 Thursday from 10:30 to 11:50 a.m.

Hondurans down U.S. drug plane

TEGUCIAGALPA, Honduras — A U.S. registered DC-3 airplane piloted by an American was shot down by the air force after it entered Honduran airspace on an apparent drug mission, the government said Tuesday night.

The plane was probably carrying narcotics from Colombia to an unknown destination, said a statement issued by the armed forces Tuesday night.

The aircraft was shot down at 11:30 p.m. Monday in western Honduras after failing to answer repeated requests to identify itself or to land on a specified airstrip, the statement said.

The pilot was identified by personal documents as Joseph Bernard Mason, who carried U.S. and Panamanian pilots' licenses, the armed forces said. A spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa, speaking on condition his name was not used, said details about Mason were being withheld while relatives were notified.

Immediate identification of the other two people on board was impossible because their remains were scattered over a broad area, according to the statement.

Kansans' anti-Contra aid plea fails

WASHINGTON — A group of Kansans urged members of the state's congressional delegation Tuesday to oppose aid to Nicaraguan rebels, but conceded they failed to change the minds of two potential swing-vote lawmakers.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., were the targets of the lobbying by a half dozen Kansans, who are part of a national organization called the Neighbor to Neighbor Action Fund.

The two lawmakers last year supported President Reagan's proposal for $100 million in aid to the Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government, but the group viewed them as votes that could change.

However, Kassebaum and Meyers told group members in private meetings that they would oppose efforts in Congress to delay the final payment of $40 million.

Caffeine aids impulsive individuals

CHICAGO — That jolt of caffeine in a morning cup of coffee or tea improves an impulsive, extroverted person's work on complex reasoning tasks, but does the opposite for thoughtful introverts, two psychology professors said Tuesday.

Caffeine in doses equivalent to one to three cups of coffee helps both types of people perform simple mental jobs, the pyschologists said they have found in research over seven years.

When the mental tasks become more difficult, such as proofreading for grammatical mistakes, impulsive people who thrive on snap decisions perform better in the morning with caffeine, they said.

"We found people who describe themselves as less impulsive, people who take their time to make a decision, their performance was severely hindered (by caffeine) in the morning," said William Revelle, a psychology professor at Northwestern University in Evanston.

Revelle said his findings on caffeine's effects on thinking have been refined from research begun at Northwestern seven years ago with studies on 700 people.

Those findings recently have been corroborated by psychologist Kristen Anderson, who worked with Revelle on the earlier research, in a separate study of 100 people, finished last fall.

Hayden seeks student tax incentive

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden submitted to the Legislature today his plan for trying to halt Kansas' "brain drain" by offering national merit scholars a tax credit to offset repayment of their college loans if they live and work in the state after college graduation.

"Kansas has long exported our most basic and valuable resource to other states and countries," the governor said in announcing his plan. "This program will help reverse that trend, opening the door for a return of our finest students.

"Kansas can never keep all of her sons and daughters at home, nor should we. However, too many of our best and brighest leave the state for career opportunities elsewhere, never to return to their native state.

"If we are to continue to develop our economy in the manner we must, if we are to continue to improve our educational system, we must look to these individuals to make vital contributions. We need their minds, imaginations and energies."

Only those national merit scholars who graduated from a Kansas high school in 1985 or later would be eligible. The governor said Kansas had 142 national merit finalists in 1985, 145 in 1986 and 146 this year.

Under Hayden's plan, if they borrowed money to pay for their college education, whether they attended college in Kansas or elsewhere, they could receive a tax credit on their Kansas income tax liability equal to the amount of principle and interest they repaid on those loans during the tax year — as long as they are back working and living in Kansas.

Car tags to include county names

TOPEKA — In addition to carrying the traditional county abbreviations, Kansas vehicle license tags next year would spell out the full names of counties in which the plates are issued, under terms of a bill the House passed Tuesday.

The proposal, which went to the Senate on a vote of 122-0, was among 35 pieces of legislation the chamber debated Monday and voted on Tuesday. Action on the measures came as the House opened the second of three day-long debate sessions in advance of Wednesday's deadline for passing bills in their houses of origin.

Under the license tag measure, the full names of counties would appear in three-fourths-inch type on stickers that would be placed across the bottom of newly designed tags.

The new tags, which will contain three randomly selected letters followed by three numerals, also will feature the two-letter county abbreviations which have appeared on Kansas tags for decades. The newly designed tags are scheduled to be issued starting in January.

Districts asked for budget increase

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden told members of the state Board of Education Tuesday he still wants school districts to be able to raise their budgets by 2 percent or 3.5 percent for 1987-88, and hopes those limits eventually will be approved by the Legislature.

Members of the board, in town for their monthly meeting, met with Hayden in his office to discuss legislation affecting education.

Connie Hubbell, chairwoman of the board's legislative committee, said the board's two biggest concerns are the proposed budget increase limitations for 1987-88 and a proposed reorganization of higher education governance in Kansas.

The House passed a school finance bill with Hayden's proposed 2 percent to 3.5 percent budget limitations in it. But the Senate Education Committee amended the bill to make the budget limits 1 percent and 2.5 percent before endorsing it Monday and sending it to the full Senate for debate early next week.

More than $1,200 has been raised to help support Chuck Primm, a Manhattan taxi driver who remains in critical condition since he was stabbed on Jan. 4.

Kris Kelderman-Hedke, coordinator of victim assistance for Riley County Community Corrections, said the lease drivers for Bell Taxi Transportation donated more than $270 last Thursday as part of the designated "Chuck Primm Day." That amount was then matched by Glenn Puett, president and general manager of Bell Taxi Transportation.

Other donations came from concerned citizens in the community who sent $468 to a bank account in Primm's name at the Kansas State Bank, 1010 Westloop Place, she said.

Kelderman-Hedke said an additional $243 had been raised through donations from the cannisters placed at Mini Marts and Dutch Maid supermarkets.

"I'm most pleased," she said. "The money will be placed in a trust fund for the recovery of Chuck Primm."

While driving for the taxi company, Primm was stabbed more than 25 times by two unidentified assailants on Whiskey Lake Road, about a mile north of the Interstate 70-Kansas Highway 18 exit.

He remains in the intensive care unit at Irwin Army Community Hospital in Fort Riley.

Kelderman-Hedke said she has not planned any more fund-raising events for Primm because she must care for other "victims of crimes who need help."

Kane combats pornography

Lecture uses slides to illustrate point

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

Evalina Kane, an active organizer for Woman Against Pornography, asked an audience in Forum Hall not to turn and look away when they viewed the slide show she was about to present, because the women in the slide show "will never be able to turn away."

Kane's address, which focused on graphic slides of women and children in pornography, was the second in this semester's Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Affairs.

"I brought a slide show because I didn't know how well-informed you are on the subject or how much you have been exposed to," Kane began. "People are uncomfortable when they watch these slides, but I ask you to just look at them and think about the women who are in them. Put yourself in their place and try to figure out why they would make a choice, really a non-choice, to do this."

Kane began her slide show with an ad displaying a woman, bound and gagged, with the headline, "At your command." She said pornographers view their publications and films as a woman's way of showing her sexual liberation and ability to express herself.

"This ad seems to sum up the real truth about pornography: that the woman can't speak because her mouth is gagged and she can't be free because she is tied," she said.

"Pornography is a learning tool which teaches sexual abuse. It supports the subordination of women as human beings and says that women aren't valued for anything except their sexual parts."

Kane said pornographers claim that what is shown in pornography is "special effects modeling," but many of the violent depictions shown in publications are the real act.

"In any other context, these would be considered real acts and treated as real crimes, but we're dealing with an $8 billion a year industry," she said. "The legal system protects the pornographer, but doesn't protect the women in the pornography."

After showing a photograph of a severely battered woman who had been involved in pornography, Kane said, "This is very real, but this isn't the pornographer's or the media's depiction of what pornography is.

"These are the kinds of women who are now coming to me for help. We are currently looking into why these women are so vulnerable to the industry. Some of these women start out as prostitutes and, as I put it, work their way down. The average beginning age of these women is 16 years old."

When Kane viewed some of the pornographic photographs in her first research of the subject, she found it hard to believe the pictures weren't police photographs of dead women because they were so violent, she said.

Staff/Brett Hacker

Evalina Kane, spokeswoman for Women Against Pornography, ponders a reporter's question Monday in a press conference.

Kane gave examples and showed slides of the pornographic exploitation of various groups of women, including blacks, Asians, children, and the mentally or physically disabled.

"You can find racks and racks of this type of specialized pornography which seems to focus on these individuals' vulnerability and celebrate inequality," she said.

As for the centerfolds in Penthouse, Playboy and Hustler, which are viewed as the real concept of what pornography is, Kane said, "These are supposed to be real depictions of a woman's sexuality. Now I ask you, would a woman in real life drape herself in ribbons as if she were a birthday present and sprawl naked on a piano in spike heels she can't even walk in? No."

Kane said this type of pornography presents the "ultimate disposable woman" who can be used, thrown away, then a new one will take her place in another month.

Feminists, in their fight against pornography, have been accused of not having a sense of humor and, in many cases, have been humiliated because of their cause, she said.

"We're told we don't have a sense of humor when we don't laugh at cartoons exploiting women, but when it is brought up that a man be exploited in a violent way, people don't laugh," she said.

"Many of the woman who are fighting pornography are demeaned with articles, photographs and cartoons in pornographic publications. The women who speak out are often punished."

House rejects general fund bills; Democrats, Republicans disagree

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Tempers flared on both sides of the aisle in the Kansas House Tuesday after the chamber rejected two measures aimed at shoring up the state's general fund balances during the next fiscal year.

After lengthy debate, lawmakers voted 72-42 against a proposal to decrease transfers from the general fund bank account to the state highway fund by $10.8 million during the fiscal year that begins July 1.

In addition, the 125-member House voted 97-22 against a proposal that would have saved $4.2 million next year by freezing two forms of state aid payments to local governments at last year's levels.

Before the debate, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Rep. Bill Bunten, had said failure to pass the so-called balance booster measures would force his panel to cut general tax expenditures during the coming year. But after the votes were taken, he said he was not seriously considering such a move.

Instead, Bunten, R-Topeka, lashed out at House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis for not delivering enough Democratic support for the measures to advance for a final vote on Wednesday.

"He's using this as an opportunity to gain some advantage for his candidates in the elections two years from now," Bunten said. "He's totally irresponsible and has been no help whatsoever."

Although 50 Republicans voted against giving first-round approval to the the bill limiting the transfers to local governments and 25 GOP lawmakers opposed the highway fund proposal, Bunten contended most Republican legislators "are willing to do something in this area."

The bill affecting aid to local governments would have reduced payments cities and counties receive through the Local Ad Valorem Tax Reduction Fund and the City-County Revenue Sharing Fund. Funding for both programs increased automatically last year when the statewide sales tax jumped from 3 cents to 4 cents on the dollar.

If spending bills were returned to committee for trimming, Bunten said he's almost certain Democrats would restore funding anyway.

Bunten was joined by House Speaker Jim Braden in criticising the Democrats.

"This doesn't surprise me," Braden said. "Remember, when you're in the minority, you yave the luxury of not having to be responsible. It looks like the majority party is going to have to be the responsible party."

However, Barkis rebuffed the criticism, saying he and other Democrats had not voted for a $5 million one-time state census, which Republicans contend is necessary for legislative reapportionment in 1989.

In addition, Barkis said he and many other Democrats also opposed the death penalty, something the Legislature's staff has estimated will have an $11.4 million annual price tag.

Move stuns Contras

Rebel faction's leader resigns

By The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — Contra leader Arturo Cruz has resigned from the directorship of the Nicaraguan rebel movement's largest political and military organization, complaining that he lacked support for planned democratic reforms.

He implicitly thanked the U.S. government for its support of Nicaraguan rebels, but also charged that "factions" in Washington did not act to prevent non-democratic elements from gaining control of the Contra movement.

His resignation stunned fellow Contra leaders and did not augur well for continued congressional financing of the movement's 5-year-old war against Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government. Cruz was respected in Washington as a moderate.

Cruz said Monday that his departure was "a long time overdue" as he made good on repeated threats to quit the United Nicaraguan Opposition, or UNO, if it didn't bow to his demands for what he called "democratic change."

"Of course I will be attentive, always interested in the political matters of my country and the development of events," he said.

In his resignation letter, Cruz said: "As it became clear that UNO took shape, not as a pluralist structure in the service of an equally pluralist goal, but as an instrument of an exclusive clique, I tried several times to retire after my efforts to change the situation proved simply futile."

He said he was persuaded by friends to remain and persevere in his efforts. "Nonetheless, the exclusive forces resisted pluralism with equal persistence," he said.

"I have given all I can give," he said.

He called the Sandinista government "a tyranny," but said anti-democratic elements in the Contra movement "perpetuate, by means of their habits of intolerance and exclusion, (those same) deplorable aspects of Sandinism."

He noted U.S. support for the anti-Sandinista forces but also said "certain factions within the government of that great nation, because of their singular perspective on the Nicaraguan project, did not act decidedly to prevent its (the U.S. government's) support for the hegemonic forces within UNO."

"I think it's a loss for us," said Alfonso Robelo, one of Cruz' two fellow UNO directors. "It weakens our position, but we have to keep on fighting for our struggle."

All too often, spring break turns tragic

EDEE DALKE
Guest Columnist

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — She bought new clothes, a swimsuit, sunglasses — all in upbeat styles. Spring break was approaching and Laurain Day Buffington, like 265,000 other college students in 1986, was heading to Daytona Beach to enjoy sun, fun and our famous beach.

The day Laurain left the Gordon Junior College campus in Barnesville, Ga., she aced her chemistry final. The 20-year-old journalism student was so excited about her spring break plans it was all she could talk about for three weeks. But she also talked about being careful.

She was well aware that there had been balcony-falling deaths in several cities during previous spring breaks, and well aware that drinking and high balconies could be dangerous. As she left she remarked, "That's crazy, I wouldn't dare hang around them.

"What's the thrill in that?"

But days later, a Florida newspaper's front page story read, "A 20-year-old college student from Georgia plunged to her death Thursday when she lost her grip while trying to climb from one sixth floor balcony to another. Police report that Laurain Day Buffington fell backward onto the parking lot and died instantly."

Lives ending as statistics. It happens every year. Statistics. Daytona Beach records, starting from 1966, report students have fallen from balconies at least 28 times. Fifteen have died. The average fall is four stories. In 1984, three accidents brought one death. In 1985, three died of falls in Daytona Beach alone, and last year in Florida, seven students lost their lives during spring break, three of which were balcony falls.

As a 1983 K-State graduate who transplanted to Daytona Beach three years ago, I have seen spring break from the other side. A spring break enthusiast myself, I recall my own travels everywhere from Padre Island, Texas, to Fort Lauderdale, Fla. I fully endorse spring break as an important — no, vital — aspect of college memories.

Living in Daytona Beach I hear talk about "what those darn kids did this time...." I chuckle to myself and realize I have no room to condemn their actions with the memories of my own only three short years ago. But when I hear of a falling accident at a hotel just down the street, I cringe. I cringe because I know that it was an ordinary student. No one unusual. No one who came to spring break to end his life.

Daytona Beach, with high-rise hotels that line the oceanfront, has been marred with these tragedies. But other spring break "capitals" have had balcony falls as well as other accidents, most alcohol-related. All cities share the concern for safety.

Our city is taking a firm stand. Local business owners especially want the students to have a great time. Your fun increases the chance of return visits. With 300,000 visitors during spring break, accidents are bound to occur, but plunging from a balcony is absolutely senseless. The most significant change in this year's balcony safety program is a new state law which allows the hotel to detain a student acting in a life-threatening manner. Last year, a student could not be detained for disorderly conduct unless a police officer witnessed the action or obtained an arrest warrant.

Last year, the spring break safety committee came up with a list of behavior agreements for students titled "code of ethical conduct." Participating hotels require their guests to sign this agreement. Included in the code is Florida Statutes 509 and 877.03 that state it is illegal to climb over or on balcony railings, windows, roofs or ledges. A few of Daytona's hotels are implementing their own balcony safety plan by sealing balconies and windows in rooms occupied by students.

Now, if understanding and conforming to rules and regulations are exactly the reason why you need to get away for spring break, fear not; the law on balconies simply means this:

—One, if you dangle, jump, balance, do hand-stands, climb or any other version of balcony play that's attempted yearly, you will promptly be held by hotel management until an officer arrives to formally arrest you.

—Two, being arested for such activity generally means your spring break will end sooner than you can say "wet T-shirt contest."

—Three, they'll book you, they'll jail you, they'll call your parents.

No fun.

But, if it IS fun you seek in your Daytona Beach quest, we've got plenty of sun, sand, waves and enough to keep you from sleeping for the entire week. The safety measures the police and hotels endorse in our city are NOT to damper fun. I, for one, am sick of the news that another student was splattered on the pool deck.

Sadly enough, response to the deaths by the students have been only a pause...and then the party continues. Many feel it's not a possibility for themselves. Like Laurain Day Buffington who left saying, "That's crazy...what's the thrill in that?," they think it happens only to the crazies who have completely lost their senses. The other guy — "not my friends."

Until it happens to one of your friends.

A friend of one of last year's victims was quoted, "The night preceding was nothing really too crazy, just partying and meeting people. He was a fun-loving guy, but he wasn't crazy enough to jump off a balcony."

Most balcony deaths have been from an unexpected loss of balance. Another victim's friend reportedly said, "It's so senseless; he was afraid of heights. And he wasn't the kind to take chances."

A newspaper article quoted a 1985 victim's mother, who spoke of the attitudes: "Losing a child is a pain that is profound and unrelenting. There's a cavalier attitude about these deaths. People think the kids deserve what they get," she said. "We encourage the free and easy dispensing of alcohol. Then when tragedy happens, people say, 'What a drunken bum.'

"He was a young man of strong faith, goal- and family-oriented," she continued. "If it can happen to this kid from this kind of family, it can happen to anyone."

Seven died in Florida last year during spring break. Three from balcony falls. Aged from 18 to 22. Two died in Fort Lauderdale, one in Miami, one in Sanibel and three in Daytona Beach. They were from schools in Michigan, Illinois, Arizona, New Jersey, Georgia, Nebraska and Wisconsin. It has affected students and families nationwide.

Wherever it occurred, whatever the cause, these accidents had one thing in common. It was a student attempting to have a good time. With or without enforced regulations, college students should be responsible not only for themselves but for those they traveled with to their spring break destination.

Alcohol may weaken one's responsibility and judgment. History of the balcony deaths show various reasons and situations for the falls. Anyone on a balcony could be caught up in the moment and be at risk. For those students who plan a trip to a spring break "hot spot" such as Daytona Beach, here is a list of "high-risk" thoughts. If you find yourself thinking one, take caution.

"The next balcony is so close." "There's a party over there and balcony-to-balcony is quicker." "I'll just sit up here on the ledge." "I'm just following my friend and he just made it." "If I do a hand-stand and go over I'll still be holding on to the hand rails." "I can simply lower myself down to the next floor." "The others will grab me before I go over."

"Not ME, that's crazy. What's the thrill in that?"

Dual NCAA bids cap fine seasons for 'Cats

Congratulations to the K-State men's and women's basketball teams. For the first time in K-State history both teams will be playing in the NCAA tournament.

The Lady Cats will travel to Evanston, Ill., to meet the Northwestern University Wildcats today, and the men's team will travel to Salt Lake City to play the University of Georgia Bulldogs Thursday.

The two teams have supplied K-State fans with plenty of excitement during the season, complete with one-point victories, heartbreaking losses and runaway victories.

Both teams hope to continue their seasons in a positive way and the fans are hoping this will also occur. K-State can be proud of these two teams that represent the University.

While many fans may not be able to attend the tournament games, fans will gather around televisions or radios to listen to the Wildcats' games. K-State can be "Proud to be a Wildcat...Again."

Also, congratulations go to the state of Kansas for placing all three of its Division I schools' men's basketball teams in the 64-team NCAA tournament. This has happened only once before in the Sunflower state's history; in 1981 all three teams went to the tournament.

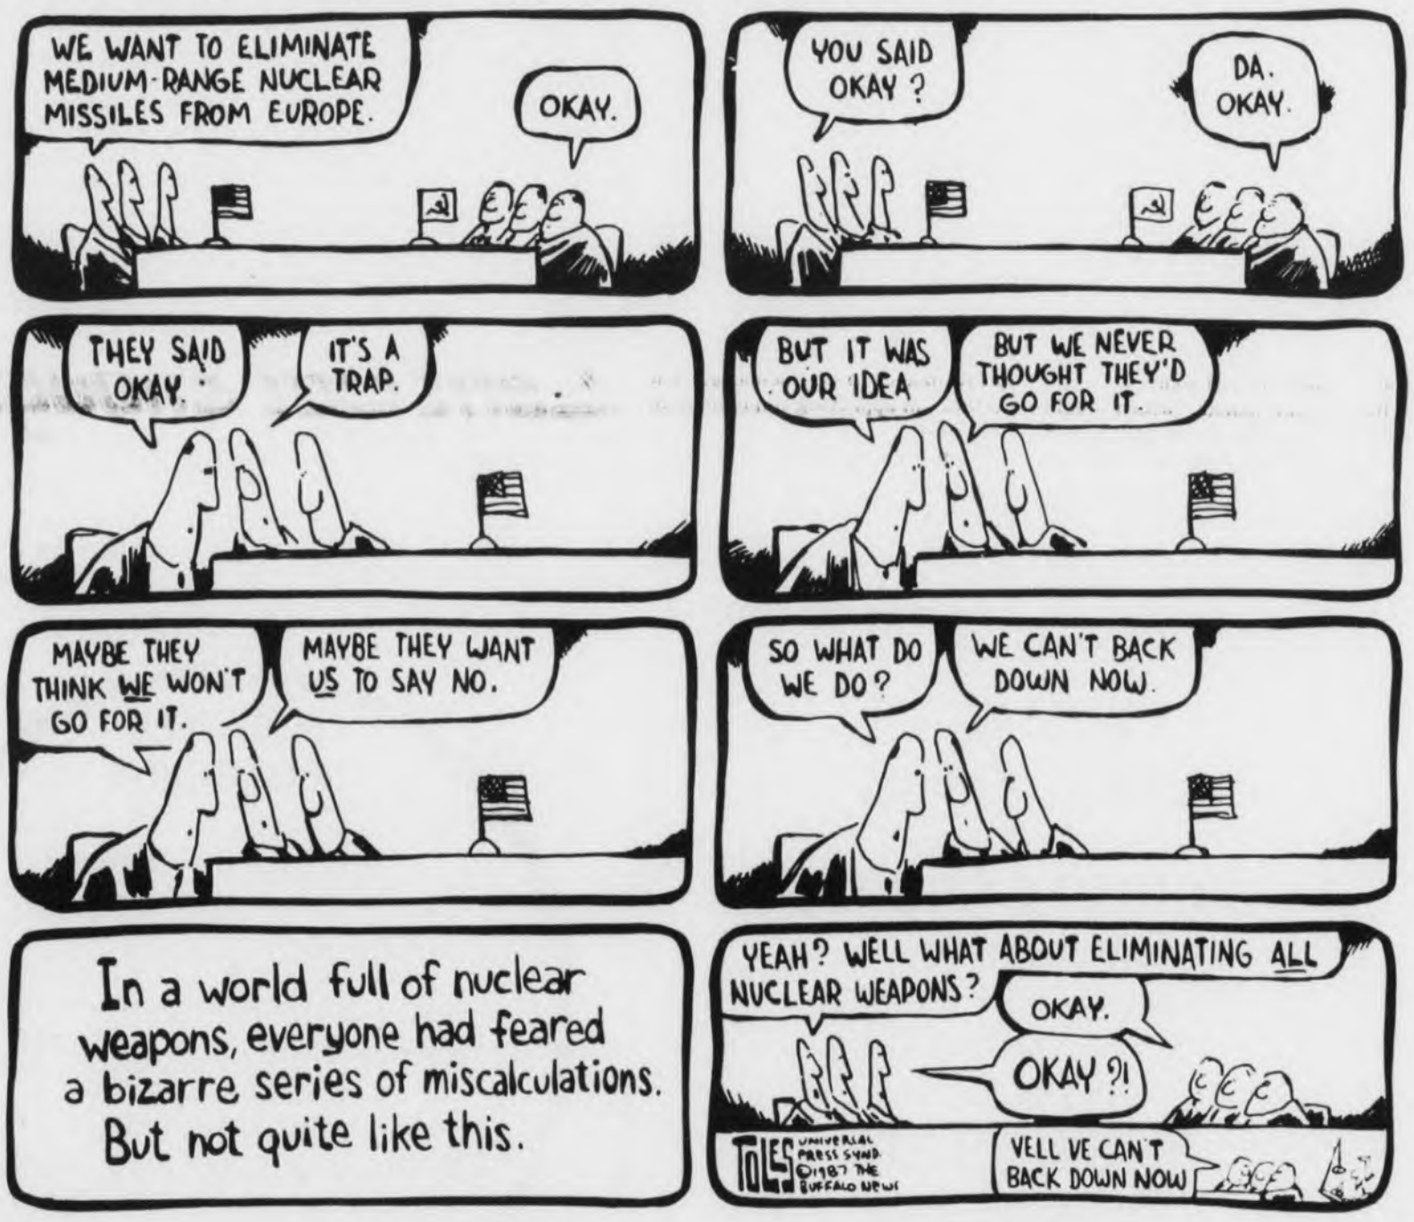
The Wildcats will be joined by cross-state rivals University of Kansas and Wichita State University. Only four other states are sending more schools to the tournament — North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Texas and Louisiana. Of course, these states also have more Division I schools eligible for the tournament.

The Lady Cats will also be joined in the women's NCAA tournament by the Lady Jayhawks. This brings the state's total tournament-bound teams to five. In basketball statistics, the state of Kansas has a .833 field goal percentage.

A "Thank you" goes to the K-State basketball teams for a great season and lots of memories. Go get 'em, 'Cats!

Poisoning of 123 trees is inexcusable, greedy

Once again, in the name of commerce and progress, humans have taken action to destroy part of the natural habitat.



After 25 years of growth, 123 honey locust trees planted to create a naturally beautiful windbreak along Interstate 70 near Junction City were poisoned in what was apparently an effort to increase the visibility of a business hidden from travelers' view by leaves and branches.

Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish said the trees are valued at $51,000, but the cost will be much greater to actually replace them.

In fact, there is really no adequate way to replace them. Any row of saplings planted today will not provide an effective windbreak for many years to come. It will be another 25 years before those saplings reach the same level of maturity as the poisoned trees they are to replace.

An investigation which ended in the arrest of two Georgia brothers was instigated by calls from area citizens who noticed the dying trees with concern and suspected some unnatural reason for the deaths. In the plains of Kansas, trees are a precious commodity and wasting this beautiful and irreplaceable foliage for selfish purposes is inexcusable.

The far-sighted Kansans who planted these investments surely wouldn't have if they could have foreseen the devastation these trees would suffer at the hands of men living for the moment with no thought of anyone's good but their own.

SDI benefits

Editor,

Now that it has been pointed out in previous articles that Star Wars failed its original purpose, let's give it a little credit for what it did accomplish. To start off, the Strategic Defense Initiative has given us a tool that has brought the Russians back to the bargaining table. To be quite frank, they are still scared of a dying program.

If for no other reason, SDI can be given credit for putting Russia in a compromising position. They are asking that we stop research for at least 10 years. The program was very expensive, but we must take into consideration that most of the money was spent on research of which at least some was beneficial to the general public.

Another beneficial product resulting from SDI research is new laser technology. This technology has been implemented in almost every realm of our lives. It is being used in robotics to increase productivity in various types of manufacturing, to make computer chips and also to perform delicate eye surgery.

To the other extreme, we also rely on lasers for at least some of our entertainment. They make the world of compact digital discs go around and can be utilized to create some fantastic special effects in movies, like blasting alien space ships right out of the sky.

Laser technology was not the only form of technology that came about as a result of SDI. Another positive aspect was that some of the research money went through universities like K-State, providing the funds necessary to carry out research in areas such as artificial intelligence and satellite communications. That research funding in turn provided the opportunity for students just like you and me to learn with the benefit of hands-on training.

As SDI fades from our memories, and more important and pressing issues like finding a date for spring formal enter our minds, I would like to give a parting farewell to Ronnie's program and the good things it did by saying "may the force be with you."

Tear down walls

Editor,

Re: Tim Inman's guest column "The fallen U.S. wall" in the March 6 Collegian. This is a time when Americans should be tearing down walls, not building them.

Americans need not fear nuclear annihilation by another force; we are already destroying ourselves by our isolationist attitudes and policies toward other countries. Lord knows I as much as anyone would like to be safe from those "godless commies," but our safety does not rely on military might. We must realize that we will be safe only when we learn to get along with one another, both inside and outside our fair country.

It is no wonder that people are depressed and frightened when there are people like Inman running around telling us that nuclear annihilation is imminent. Instead of giving us solutions and solace, these people want to build stronger walls out of our fears and stronger fears out of our walls.

It is time we look around and see that nuclear annihilation is not imminent. The Soviets no more want to see their country destroyed than we do ours. But destruction of our democratic system is imminent if we continue to hide behind walls of self defense and close our eyes and hearts to those whose political and economic policies differ from our own.

We must remember that we are humans (and thus by nature fallible) and so are our designated enemies. If we can start from that one common point, we may find many other things in common.

Inman quoted the Bible, saying that a man was saddened because Jerusalem had no walls. I believe that if Christ (around whom so much of the New Testament revolves) were here today, he would not tolerate the attitude prevalent in America today. He taught "love thy neighbor," not "build walls between thyself and thy neighbor."

Average aid award to decline by $700

By The Collegian Staff

Tentative estimates by financial aid officials indicate the average K-State undergraduate will be eligible for $700 less in Guaranteed Student Loan funds next year, said Christine Crenshaw, associate director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

Technically, less aid is available because less money for financial aid programs is being appropriated at the federal level to all universities, she said.

By March 15, students seeking financial aid need to send family financial statements to Iowa City to be processed.

"The best financial aid packages can be prepared for those students whose financial aid information has been received by March 15," Crenshaw said.

Crenshaw said the changes of eligibility criteria for GSLs have reduced the estimated amount of money that students will be eligible to receive next year.

The new guidelines are as stringent as those used to determine eligibility for other types of financial aid, she said.

"For students who want to have priority consideration for the supplemental educational opportunity grant, college work-study program and the national direct student loan program, their family financial statement form needs to be in the Iowa City processing center on or about March 15," Crenshaw said.

However, students should not assume they will not receive funding if their FFS form does not reach Iowa City by March 15, she said.

The Pell Grant and GSL can be awarded at any time during the academic year if the student is eligible, she said.

"These are entitlement programs which the student is either eligible for or not," Crenshaw said.

"However, the students that do not complete their family financial statement and do not have it sent to Iowa City by the end of the school year run the risk of not having that aid available when they arrive back on campus in late August."

Crenshaw said the government is reducing financial aid because of the way some students use the money.

"The U.S. Department of Education is less supportive of federal funding to universities because of its prevailing philosophy that most people in education do not creatively make the best use of the federal money they receive," she said.

The USDE fears the fraudulent use or acquisition of student aid funding is increasing, Crenshaw said.

"(USDE) is trying to reduce alleged fraud by making students prove and sometimes double prove what is on their FFS forms is true," she said.

Crenshaw said 50-75 percent of University students receive some aid ranging from $250 to $5,000.

State lottery bill awaits Hayden's signature

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden will sign into law at a news conference Thursday morning a bill to implement a state-run lottery, his spokeswoman said Tuesday.

The Senate and House both adopted a joint conference committee report Tuesday on a compromise version of the lottery implementation bill, sending it to Hayden.

The quick legislative action on a compromise agreed upon Monday night by a six-member conference committee means the first sale of lottery tickets in Kansas could come in September. The Department of Revenue has said instant-win tickets could go on sale that soon.

Instant-win tickets, which would sell for $1, would enable purchasers to determine immediately whether they had won anything — simply by scratching off a latex patch covering the ticket numbers.

The lottery implementation bill becomes law when Hayden signs it and it is published in the Kansas Register, the state's official publication. That usually takes about a week after the governor signs a bill.

Hayden's legal counsel, John Petersen, said he has reviewed the compromise version of the bill and saw no technical problems with it.

"He gave it a clean bill of health," said Kathy Peterson, Hayden's press secretary. "We think it looks OK."

She said the governor plans to sign the bill at his weekly news conference, scheduled for 10:15 a.m. Thursday.

Hayden strongly supported the amendment, and urged the Legislature in his January message to lawmakers to be "deliberate but certain" in approving implementing legislation.

When fully implemented, the bill will launch lottery gambling in Kansas, create at least 120 jobs in the state bureaucracy and generate up to $100 million in gross lottery ticket sales in its first year of operation.

Revenue Department officials say they expect the Lottery Commission to start offering instant-winner lottery tickets for sale by September. Lotto and more exotic games will be added later.

The bill also delegates from the Legislature to the Lottery Commission the authority to enter into contracts with other states for multistate lotteries which are just now being created nationally.

Harley Duncan, state revenue secretary, told the conference committee the first multi-state lottery is expected to crank up early in 1988.

The attraction of multistate lotteries is to create huge multi-million dollar payoffs.

The Senate adopted the conference committee report, 37-3, and the House adopted it, 97-20.

Before giving its approval, the House rejected, 43-72, a motion by Rep. Vincent Snowbarger, R-Olathe, to send the report back to a second conference committee to insert language specific prohibiting casino type gambling in Kansas. Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, conference committee chairman, said there is no way that kind of gambling could be started under the bill.

Only senators voting against the lottery compromise were Ross Doyen of Concordia, Dave Kerr of Hutchinson and Fred Kerr of Pratt, all Republicans.

The six members of the conference committee reached agreement quickly Monday night, signed the report this morning and sent it to the Senate for its consideration first. Then it went to the House.

Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, chairman of the conference committee, said the legislation will give Kansas a "squeaky clean" lottery operation.

"I think the bill is very good," Miller said. "It should be pretty easily understood by the public and by the people running our lottery. I'm very pleased with it."

The Senate agreed to withdraw two amendments its Federal and State Affairs Committee placed on the bill, and the two sides reached compromise on the only other point of contention in the bill.

The Senate agreed to remove a provision giving the governor autocratic power to remove members of a five-member Lottery Commission created to administer the state's lottery operation.

Faculty Senate prohibits surveillance

By KRISTI BARANCIK
Collegian Reporter

Faculty Senate unanimously approved Tuesday a resolution prohibiting the photographing and compiling of records on lawful activities of students, employees or guests by KSU Police Department or University-authorized security personnel.

The resolution requests the University ensure the destruction of any existing photographs, films, videotapes or other electronic recordings in the Department of Public Safety's possession.

"What the faculty has said is that the University is a place where everything possible must be done to ensure an atmosphere friendly to free and open participation in discussion on the part of all of us, regardless of our nationality or the inclination of our opinion," said Lyman Baker, instructor in English and co-sponsor of the resolution.

"A number of students have said they can't participate in demonstrations because there is no way of knowing what is going to end up in the files and where those files will end up," he said.

If violence does break out, nothing in the resolution prevents the police from recording the event.

"If someone breaks the law here, an evidentiary record can be made of the action in progress," Baker said.

The resolution does not restrict the activities of people other than University staff, nor does it affect organizations such as the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, he said.

"We (K-State) can't prevent those things. We aren't the U.S. government," Baker said. "The only thing that we have control over is what goes on at the University.

"It is important for the University to get its own house in order."

The resolution states that K-State has no general interest in collecting and keeping security-related information about students, employees and guests engaging in peaceful activities.

"It is an obligation for the University to (stop unnecessary record keeping) if it really is a university," Baker said. "A university should not be buying into the idea that surveillance records be kept."

In other business, Senate approved an amendment to the reorganization of academic units policy. When reorganizing academic units such as a department, administrators must meet with affected persons to further explain changes and discuss their concerns.

In addition, Senate passed a resolution requesting the Board of Regents to reconsider its decision to discontinue the English doctoral program.

Wind ensemble to give first concert of season

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Symphonic Wind Ensemble will present its first concert of the semester with pieces varying from Broadway to contemporary tunes.

Free of charge to the public, the ensemble concert will begin at 8 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium, said Stanley Finck, assistant professor of music and director of K-State bands for the last four years.

Five pieces, all written by different composers, will be featured. Music of the performance includes the prologue from Bernstein's "West Side Story," "Overture for Band" by Mendelssohn, "Symphonic Movement" by Nelhybel, "Serenade" by Bourgeois, and "Gallimaufry" by Woolfenden. The concert performance will be about an hour long.

The highlight of the performance is the "Symphonic Movement" piece by Nelhybel, Finck said.

"This comtemporary composition is written for a wind band medium," he said. "This particular piece is rather intense and exciting in general."

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble is composed of approximately 42 students, mostly music majors, Finck said.

After spring break, the ensemble will go on the road March 25-27. The band will tour seven western Kansas towns to play for schools and community groups.

City to celebrate arbor days

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan will celebrate two arbor days — March 21 and April 7.

Several other proclamations were read, including one naming March 9-15 as Employ the Older Worker Week designed to promote job opportunities for elderly Manhattan residents.

Arbor Day activities will include a public celebration March 21 at the City Park playground, and an Arbor Day awareness program scheduled for April 7 at Marlatt Elementary School.

The video features clips of tree plantings and maintenance in the Manhattan area and may eventually be distributed nationwide.

In other business, the commission approved an application for a private club license by Rip & Mo's, 710 N. Manhattan Ave. Applications for cereral malt beverage licenses for Falsetto's Pizza House, 1127 Moro St., and Cafe LaGrande, 606 N. 12th St. were also approved.

Cheesecake: a slice of heaven

By MARGARET MAY
Features Editor

The wonder of cheesecake — that tantilizing, rapturous dessert, although banned from the plate of the dieter, cannot be stricken from the mind.

Sinking one's teeth into the creamy, delightfully light softness of a piece of cheesecake is a slice of heaven. This golden-yellow temptation has survived through the years and evolved into hundreds of varieties.

The main ingredient in cheesecake is, of course, cheese. Although cream cheese is the most common, others used in some cheesecake recipes include neufchatel, cottage cheese, farmer cheese and ricotta.

Other common ingredients include cream, either sweet or sour; sugar; thickening ingredients such as flour, cornstarch or gelatin; milk; eggs; butter or shortening.

Creating a masterpiece of cheesecake may seem like the impossible dream, but according to "The Joy of Cheesecake," by Dana Bovbjerg and Jeremy Iggers, most are quite easy to make when a few basic techniques are remembered.

The first tip has to do with eggs. If a recipe calls for egg whites, the yolk must be completely separated from the white. Then the whites must be beaten until they form stiff peaks, but not overbeaten. The air whipped into the egg whites helps add lightness to the cake.

If the cheesecake is to be removed from the pan after baking, a springform pan should be used. The sides of a springform pan expand and are removable from the bottom. A cheese pie is usually served in the pan it is baked in.

A cheesecake is usually done when the top appears firm at the center and the edges have just begun to brown.

One last tip is how to cut the final masterpiece — with dental floss. Knifes are usually too thick to cut the cake cleanly. Waxed or unwaxed floss can be used. Just hold a long strand of dental floss taut and press it through the cake. When it gets to the bottom, let go of one end and pull it out to avoid ruining the cut by bringing the floss back up.

A crust is usually part of any cheesecake or cheese pie.

BASIC CRUMB CRUST

1½ cups graham cracker crumbs
6 tablespoons butter, melted
1/4 cup granulated sugar

Prebaked crusts are crisper than chilled ones; this is important if the crumbs are a bit soggy.

If you are prebaking the shell, preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

Place the crumbs in a mixing bowl and add the butter and sugar. Blend well.

Press the crumb mixture in the bottom and partly up the sides of a greased 9-inch baking dish, pie pan or springform mold. Smooth the mixture along the bottom to an even thickness.

Chill the crust for 5-10 minutes in the freezer until it is set or bake for 10 minutes in a 350-degree oven. Cool before filling.

Variations of crust include using vanilla wafers, gingersnaps, zweiback, matzo, pumpernickel bread, melba toast, stale angel food cake or leftover spice cake.

To make a low-calorie crumb crust, use 3 tablespoons of softened diet margerine and 3/4 cup graham cracker crumbs. Margarine can be substituted for the butter if cholesterol is a worry.

If a bland cracker is used in the recipe, add 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon, 1 teaspoon grated nutmeg, 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind after blending the butter and sugar with the crumbs, then press the mixture into the baking pan as directed.

CHOCOLATE CRUMB CRUST

Add 2 tablespoons of unsweetened cocoa to the crumb mixture.

Toppings are another added plus to cheesecake. They add flavoring and color to basic cheesecake and can also hide small (or large) imperfections (such as cracks) that may occur during baking or cooling.

The following are just a couple ideas for toppings, but the sky is the limit — everything goes.

DARK SWEET CHERRY TOPPING

1 jar (17 ounces) pitted, dark sweet cherries in heavy syrup
1 tablespoon granulated sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1/4 cup water
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon brandy
1 teaspoon butter

Drain the cherries and save ½ cup syrup.

Combine the sugar and cornstarch in a small saucepan. Slowly add the syrup, water and lemon juice, heating the mixture over medium heat. Stir constantly until the sugar dissolves and the liquid comes to a rapid boil.

Stir the mixture for about 3 minutes more or until the mixture thickens and clears. Remove from the heat, then stir in the brandy and the butter. Cool to room temperature.

Arrange the cherries on the cake. Pour the cooled mixture over the cherries. Refrigerate until set, about 4 hours.

CHOCOLATE GLAZE

6 squares (6 ounces) semisweet chocolate
1/4 cup butter
1/4 cup confectioners' sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
⅓ cup water

Melt the chocolate and butter in the top of a double broiler. Remove from heat.

Stir in the sugar, vanilla and water, and blend well.

Spread the mixture over the cake, then chill before serving.

After all this preparation, the actual cheesecake can be decided upon. Cheesecakes come in varieties that would astound even the most avid of cheesecake fans. After the basic cheesecake comes those such as Kilimanjaro Cheesecake, Angel Cheesecake, Lunar Cheesecake, Ginger Cheesecake, Daiquiri Cheesecake, Pineapple Cheesecake, Pumpkin Cheesecake and many others.

HEAVY CHEESECAKE

1 pound cream cheese
1 cup granulated sugar
3 large eggs
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup self-rising flour
1 cup sour cream

Preheat the oven to 325 degrees.

In a large mixing bowl, beat together the cream cheese, sugar and eggs until smooth and light.

Add the lemon rind, lemon juice and flour and mix into the cheese mixture.

Stir in the sour cream, just enough to blend together.

Pour the mixture into the prepared crust and bake for 45 minutes. Allow to cool in the oven for 30 additional minutes.

Prop the oven door open and allow the cake to cool further — to room temperature. Chill.

Serve the cake chilled, with whipped cream and sprinkled with cinnamon.

MOCHA NO-BAKE CHEESECAKE

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
3/4 cup milk
3 large eggs, separated
1 tablespoon instant coffee powder
1 pound cream cheese
⅓ cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/4 cup confectioners' sugar

Soften the gelatin in 1/4 cup milk and set aside.

In the top of a double boiler, combine the egg yolks, remaining milk and coffee. Cook, stirring, until the mixture thickens. Remove from the heat. Add the gelatin and stir until smooth.

In a large mixing bowl, beat the cream cheese, sugar and vanilla until light and fluffy. Stir in the gelatin mixture.

Beat the egg whites until they form soft peaks, then gradually add the sugar, beating until a meringue is formed. Fold the whites into the cheese mixture.

Gently pour the mixture into the prepared crust and chill overnight or until set.

DAIQUIRI CHEESECAKE

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1/2 cup granulated sugar
⅓ cup light rum
1/2 cup lime juice
1 teaspoon grated lime rind
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
4 large eggs, separated
1 pound cream cheese
1/2 cup confectioners' sugar
1 cup heavy cream

In a medium saucepan, or the top of a double boiler, combine the gelatin, sugar, rum and lime juice. Stir in the grated rinds, then add the egg yolks, thoroughly mixing all ingredients. Cook the mixture over medium heat, stirring constantly until it thickens, then remove the saucepan from the heat and allow to cool.

In a large mixing bowl, beat the cream cheese until it is light and smooth.

Add the gelatin mixture to the cream cheese and mix to blend all ingredients thoroughly.

Beat the egg whites until they form soft peaks, then slowly add the sugar and continue beating until they form stiff peaks. Fold the whites into the cream cheese mixture.

Whip the cream until it is stiff, then fold it into the cheese mixture.

Pour the mixture into the prepared crust and chill for 4 hours or until set.

Excess salt use may increase risk of high blood pressure

By JACKIE SHOCKEY
Collegian Reporter

Americans are notorious for adding unhealthy products to their diets. With the new health craze, however, there has been a growing awareness about which foods to add or subtract from the diet, one of which is salt.

Excessive salt intake is considered unhealthy because it increases the risk of high blood pressure. People with high blood pressure are warned against adding too much salt to their diets.

"There have been many studies which point to the fact that high blood pressure and salt intake are directly associated with one another," said Guy Smith, the sports medical physician of Lafene Student Health Center.

"Americans already take up to four and five times the amount of salt that they need," Smith said. "If you're out in the desert, stranded for several days without access to any salt, that would be different. Sure, then you'd need to add salt to your diet, otherwise most people have enough."

A study by the American Heart Association suggests people follow one basic rule to reduce their sodium intake — take the salt shaker off the table. In addition, salt consumption can be reduced if, during food preparation at home, only ½ the amount of salt called for in a recipe is used.

The study also said food labels will usually describe the sodium content of the product in milligrams. One-half teaspoon of table salt contains 1,000 milligrams of sodium. The average American consumes roughly one to two teaspoons of salt daily. The body actually requires only about one quarter teaspoon of salt.

For many years people have believed that heat injuries are directly related to low levels of salt intake. For this reason, many athletes added salt tablets to their diets.

"Athletes should be warned about the amount of salt intake they need; they should be told not to add any more salt to their diets than they would normally get," Smith said.

Smith added that the only athletes in any real danger are the football players. Many don't realize that they should drink water rather than adding salt to their diets, because of the amount of body fluid lost during excercise.

Smith warned people to stay clear of all processed foods because they are notoriously high in sodium. If a person wants to purchase some processed foods, he suggested looking for those labeled 'low salt.'

The American Heart Association agrees with Smith — people should watch the foods they purchase, especially prepackaged products. The organization says to watch for the words "soda," "sodium" and "Na," the chemical symbol for salt, on the labels.

"My real preference would be for Americans to adjust their tastes, rather than to switch to the salt substitutes," Smith said. "The salt substitutes are made with potassium, which can be toxic (if taken in large quantities). They are especially harmful to people with kidney problems."

"Basically, I think people are beginning to watch what they eat. There has been a growing public awareness recently about what people should and should not have in their diet," he said.

The American Heart Association says a reduced-sodium diet will mean eating salty foods only occasionally, cutting down on the amount of salt used in cooking and at the table, and reading package labels regularly to learn about the sodium content of prepared foods. Experimenting with herbs and spices as seasonings will help produce deliciously flavorful meals.

Group studies changing hospital to jail

Officials examine Norton, other sites

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A deputy secretary of corrections agreed Tuesday to supply lawmakers with a department proposal to convert Norton State Hospital into a minimum-security prison.

Steve Davies, deputy secretary over institutions, told the Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction he would provide it with details of the proposal. He said the department has considered the proposal but has not actively pursued it.

Davies also told the committee about a department proposal to turn two sites in Rooks County in northwest Kansas into work camps for minimum-security inmates. The plan would add 150 beds to the state's crowded prison system at a cost of $1.1 million.

The committee also reviewed the department's $9.3 million proposal to create 509 new minimum-security beds at four sites — Norton, Winfield and Osawatomie state hospitals and the Shawnee County Work Release Center in Topeka.

The proposals come at a time when Kansas' prison system has exceeded its maximum capacity. According to department figures, the system's maximum capacity is 5,015 prisoners, yet the the state is housing 5,381 inmates. The department projects the number of inmates to reach 5,588 by June 30 and climb to 6,111 by June 30, 1988.

"We're going to have to have more space," Davies told the committee.

The department's proposal, which the committee is considering and Gov. Mike Hayden has endorsed, already includes a renovation of three buildings at Norton State Hospital. Total cost of the project would be $3.5 million over this fiscal year, which ends June 30, and the next fiscal year. Of that, renovations would cost $1.3 million over the two years.

The current proposal for Norton would create 240 new minimum-security beds.

Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence, asked Davies to give the committee information about converting all of Norton State Hospital to a penal facility, saying he wondered whether the state could save on some costs by just taking over the entire hospital for a prison.

Currently, the hospital, one of four for the treatment of the mentally retarded, houses about 120 patients, but it has housed up to 350 in the past. Davies said up to 540 inmates could be kept there if it became a minimum-security prison, with an estimated cost for renovation of $2 million.

Davies said the department saw advantages in converting the entire hospital to a prison, as opposed to the current plan, which would put inmates and patients on the grounds.

However, Davies and Larry Cowger, assistant to the secretary of corrections, were quick to point out that the proposal had not been reviewed by Hayden nor actively pursued by the department.

Cowger said department officials thought it would have too many problems in trying to get support from the state and local officials for converting the hospital. He also said officials worried what how such a change would affect the state's system for treating the mentally retarded.

"It just didn't work out in this session," Cowger said.

Under the Rooks County proposal, a school in Zurich would be converted, as would a church camp at Webster Reservoir.

Representatives pass hazardous waste bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Hoping to make Kansas a less attractive location as a nuclear waste dumping ground, the House passed a bill Tuesday that would prohibit underground storage of radioactive materials in this state.

The measure, which advanced to the Senate on a vote of 111-11, would add radioactive waste to an existing ban on subterranean burial of hazardous wastes in the state.

Studies conducted for the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact have narrowed the list of geologically suitable areas for a nuclear disposal site to portions of 18 counties in Kansas and smaller areas in four other states.

Rep. Keith Roe, R-Mankato, the bill's sponsor, told lawmakers the measure would not withdraw Kansas from the compact as other bills before the Legislature this session would do. Instead, he said the measure would impose restrictions on operations of any disposal site aimed at discouraging potential developers.

A developer for the disposal site is scheduled to be selected in June and a decision on the "host" state for the dump is expected to be made before a federal deadline of Jan. 1, Roe said.

In addition to the locations in Kansas, surveys for the compact show 10 counties in Nebraska, two counties in Arkansas and one county in Louisiana have locations that would be suitable for the disposal facility.

The compact's consultant did not find any areas suitable for a dump in Oklahoma, the largest nuclear waste producer of any of the five member states. The compact is seeking a location capable of holding five million cubic feet of low level radioactive waste.

Under the measure Roe sponsored and carried into debate Monday, nuclear waste could be stored only in vaults and earth-mound bunkers, where the waste could be hauled away later.

Opponents to the bill, such as Rep. Don Mainey, D-Topeka, said they fear passage of the bill would be in direct violation of federal regulations governing the low-level radioactive waste compacts.

The five states signed the compact agreement five years ago.

'Angel Heart' a major disappointment

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

Thanks to the ratings controversy, "Angel Heart" has received plenty of publicity in the last two weeks. Director Alan Parker agreed to cut 10 seconds from a steamy sex scene between Mickey Rourke and Lisa Bonet, and then the film received the R rating — instead of the X the ratings board threatened.

Film Review

This controversy makes the movie sound like hot stuff (and the scene between Rourke and Bonet definitely is), but overall "Angel Heart" is a major disappointment. It's an amazingly beautiful movie, but it's also amazingly slow.

Set in 1955, "Angel Heart" features Rourke as a private detective named Harry Angel (whose suits look like discarded potato sacks). One day a mysterious man named Louis Cyphre (Robert DeNiro) shows up and asks Harry to hunt down a singer named Johnny Favorite. Harry accepts the job, but strange things soon start happening. It seems the people he talks to keep dying, and the evidence for each murder points toward himself.

This is an interesting basis for a movie, but "Angel Heart" almost completely lacks suspense — until the final 10 minutes that is. The first murder is effective. We don't actually see it, but we are there when Harry discovers it. He then realizes that earlier in the day he had handled the murder weapon, a revolver. So he wipes the gun clean of fingerprints, as well as everything else he touched.

But this sounds more promising than it actually is. Harry stumbles from one clue to the next, but never does it seem like he's really onto anything. Ultimately the clues lead us to a "Twilight Zone"-style ending that's far from convincing.

"Angel Heart" would have made a great eight-page comic, but stretched over 1½ hours the material wears hopelessly thin.

Visually "Angel Heart" is a stunning film. It may well be one of the most gorgeous bad movies ever made. From the beginning to the end, the film is filled with amazing camera shots and magnificent sets.

The world created by director Alan Parker is filled with creaking electrical fans, rusty iron gates, shadowy stairways and grimy windows. When the story is set in New York the streets are filled with slush, and when the story moves to New Orleans the streets are forever wet from rain. It's a world that glistens at night, as if the buildings are carved from graphite.

The casting is nearly perfect. Mickey Rourke has an anarchic and irreverent quality that makes Harry Angel fascinating. He's the kind of guy who can say absurd things like: "Ever watch the Mickey Mouse Club? Because today is Wednesday. Anthing-can-happen day." and actually get away with it.

DeNiro's role is relatively short, but his presence is felt throughout the movie. During the second meeting with Harry, DeNiro crunches the shell of a hard-boiled egg, and it seems as if he's crushing every bone in Harry's body.

Lisa Bonet is one of the best things in the film, but her role is surprisingly brief. She plays a young woman named Epiphany Proudfoot, the mulatto daughter of Johnny Favorite. Harry is eventually led in her direction and then finds himself attracted to her.

But one of the most impressive scenes in the film features an actress named Elizabeth Whitcraft. She gives Harry some information and then they retire to her bedroom. The scene that follows is brief but very sexy, much more so than anything in "9½ Weeks."

The excellent performances can't overcome the glaring weaknesses in the screenplay. It's a movie that relies almost completely upon how shocked we are by the trick ending. But important parts of this ending are predictable, especially for those familiar with "Twilight Zone," "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," and EC Comics.

Lady Cats to test Big 10's Wildcats in Midwest match

By CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

The home-court advantage is a plus to any team, especially the K-State women's basketball team. The Lady Cats finished the regular season with a perfect 13-0 record in Ahearn Field House.

Northwestern, 19-9 overall, also knows about home-court advantage and how to use it. The Wildcats finished with a 12-3 record in McGaw Hall in Evanston, Ill. Those three losses came to Iowa, Ohio State and Tennessee — all Top-20 teams.

K-State, 22-8 overall, will battle the Wildcats of Northwestern tonight in a first-round, Midwest Regional game in the NCAA women's basketball postseason tournament.

Both teams received at-large berths, and the winner will challenge the Midwest's top seed Louisiana Tech in Ruston.

Tipoff time from 8,100-seat McGaw Hall is 7:30 p.m. The game will be broadcast on WIBW-Radio (580 AM).

"It should be a pretty good game," said Northwestern Coach Don Perrelli. "(K-State) is a strong, aggressive team and they match up very well against us. The NCAA committee did a good job in matching the teams up."

Although Perrelli said he doesn't discuss upcoming games with media, he did say he won't alter the Wildcats' play for the NCAAs.

"When you get into the NCAA tournament, the one thing you don't do is change your playing style from the way it was during the regular season," he said.

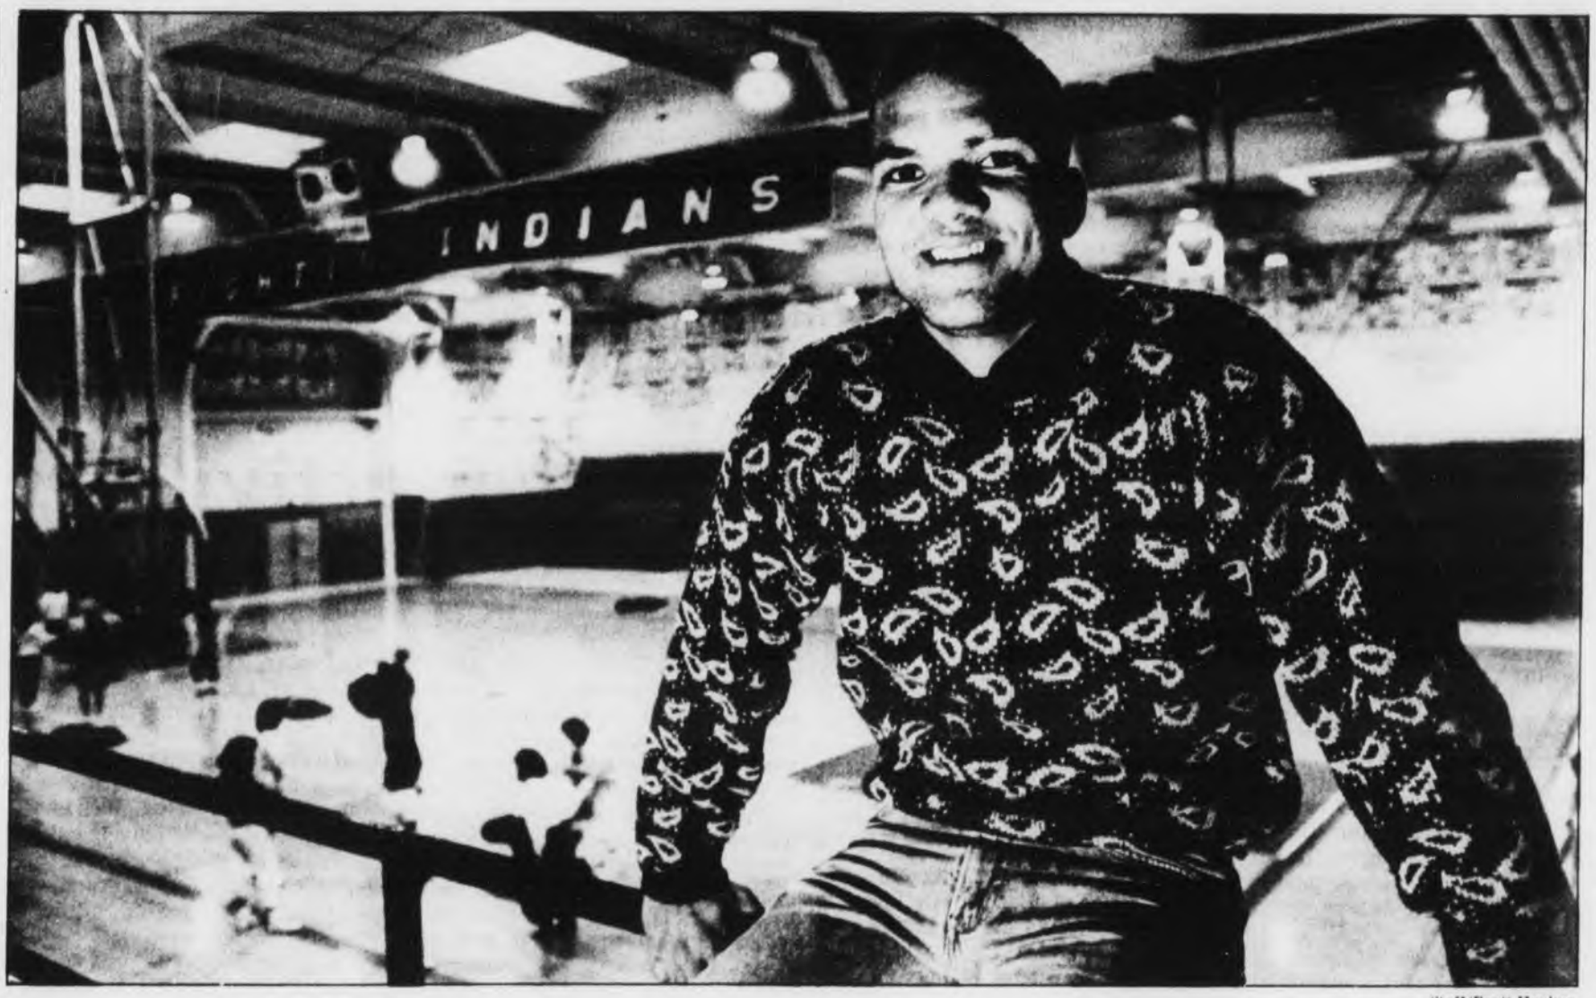
The two teams are amazingly similar.

The Lady Cats, seeded ninth in the tournament, have four starters scoring in double figures per game: Carlisa Thomas, 11.8; Tracey Bleczinski, 10.2; Sue Leiding, 15.7; and Susan Green, 13.0. The fifth starter Theza Fitzpatrick averages 7.4 points per game.

Northwestern, the region's No. 8 seed, also has four starters scoring in double figures: Joanne Palombo, 12.6; Anne Marie McNamee, 12.2; Kelly Byrne, 10.5; and Judy Banathy, 10.4. Laura Arnold, the fifth starter, averages 7.1 points per game.

"They're a stong team," said K-State Coach Matilda Mossman. "They have four players averaging in double figures and personnel-wise they are a lot like us.

"Basically we don't know that much about them," she added. "We're just going to have to practice our game this week and go in there and play good basketball."



Experience in the starting lineup is evident in both teams. K-State has four seniors and one sophomore in its starting rotation, while Northwestern starts three seniors and two juniors.

Similarities also exist in the points scored and points allowed per game categories.

K-State averages 71.8 points per outing; Northwestern nets 71 per outing. The Lady Cats' defense has allowed its opponents just 64.7 points per outing, while the Wildcats also allows the opposition less than 70 points per game.

Both coaches have an approximate 2:1 win-loss ratio. Mossman is 121-61 in six years of collegiate coaching — 54-34 in her third season at K-State. Perrelli is 226-104 in his 11th year and 51-33 in his third year at Northwestern.

NOTES: The Lady Cats are 9-8 on the road this year...In the only meeting between the two teams on Dec. 3, 1983 in Evanston, K-State won 97-65...The Lady Cats are coming off a 85-51 loss to Kansas in the finals of the Big Eight Conference Tournament...Northwestern's last outing was a 79-48 win at Minnesota...K-State defeated Minnesota, 79-68, Dec. 1 in Ahearn Field House.

Manhattan High School senior J.T. Marshall has been contacted by roughly 100 universities in the last four years — all vying for his basketball talent. Marshall said he has narrowed his decision to five to 10 schools, with Arizona State, Colorado State and K-State among the front-runners.

J.T. knows how it is to be in demand

By RON RENO
Contributing Writer

J.T. Marshall is no different from thousands of other high school seniors who must soon choose a college.

But there's a twist in Marshall's case. He literally has 100 options.

Marshall, the 6-foot-5 star of Manhattan High School's basketball team, estimates he has been contacted by roughly 100 colleges and universities in the last four years — all vying for his services on the basketball court.

Tabbed as the best high school player in the state by some observers, Marshall averaged 20.5 points and 9.5 rebounds per contest while leading the Indians to a 18-3 mark this season.

Manhattan will take on Wichita North (18-3) in a first-round game of the Class 6A finals Thursday at Allen Field House in Lawrence.

Trying to decide among all the options has not been an easy process for Marshall, who elected not to make a decision during the early-signing period in November.

"They all say the same things," Marshall said. "They all say, 'we really think you'll fit in, it's a real nice place down here, you have to visit,' and things like that.

"They all stress academics and athletics and how you'd fit in. It seems like most of the time, if you had two phone calls in a row and you wrote down what they said, they'd stress the exact same points both times."

Still, Marshall said he attempts to sort through all the mail and phone calls — of which he gets plenty — while he contemplates the decision.

"I usually get about three or four calls a week during the season, and maybe two or three letters a day," he said. "Before the early-signing period, it was five or 10 calls a week and four or five letters a day.

"Usually I kind of weed out the smaller schools, the lesser-known junior colleges and the ones that really don't have an established program. Every other one I think I take seriously. At least I'll look at it and see if I'd be interested, how I'd fit in and stuff like that."

Marshall said the process began four years ago when, as a freshman, he received his first recruiting letter. The deluge began in earnest his sophomore season, and has only intensified since.

Mike Leahy, Manhattan High basketball coach, said Marshall has handled the pressure extremely well. Leahy went through the same process last year with Howard Bonser, who eventually signed with K-State before leaving the team in mid-season for personal reasons.

"I think he's handled it very well. He's a very intelligent young man, and he knows what he wants," said Leahy of Marshall. "I think he's looked at it very realistically and hasn't let it bother his play. Whether he feels it internally or not, I don't know. He responds awfully well to challenges, such as when there are scouts in the gym."

Horror stories about inconsiderate recruiters, phone calls at all hours of the night and underhanded recruiting tactics abound, but Marshall said he has experienced none of these.

"The ones that contact me the most are usually the nicest," Marshall said. "They're real con-

Mets drop first three outings

By The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Off their first three exhibition games, the opening day pitcher for the world champion New York York Mets might have to be John Mitchell.

Mitchell, more likely open for AAA Tidewater, allowed one run in three innings against Toronto Monday, a brilliant performance compared to his predecessor, Sid Fernandez, who in the first three innings surrendered 11 runs, including five home runs.

That came a day after Dwight Gooden allowed nine runs to St. Louis in a first inning capped by Terry Pendleton's grand slam. It was the first grand slam every allowed anywhere by Gooden, who just two days earlier had indicated during batting practice that he had regained the old hop on his fastball.

That left the team that won 108 games in the 1986 regular season and eight more in the playoffs and World Series, at 0-3 in their first three exhibition games. Fernandez and Gooden, who were a combined 33-12 last season, had allowed a .545 opposition batting average and had an ERA of 23.40 in five innings.

"Dwightmare!" exclaimed the headline in one New York tabloid on Monday. "Shelled!" shrieked another over a picture of Fernandez on Tuesday.

The reaction?

"We'll schedule an intra-squad game so half the squad knows what it's like to win one," said Manager Davey Johnson.

"I never had a day this bad, but I don't think it's a concern" said Fernandez, who was 16-6 last season and was one of the heroes of the World Series with 2 2-3 hitless innings that kept the Mets in the seventh game they eventually won.

Fernandez's performance came with heavy winds blowing out and seven of the runs he allowed were unearned — courtesy of a throwing error by rookie third baseman Dave Magadan.

Gooden, who also has to contend with the publicity from his offseason run-in with the police in his hometown of Tampa, didn't have those excuses and his performance was more mystifying.

"It got behind on hitters and since I'm a power pitcher, they knew what was coming," said Gooden, who didn't throw a curve during his outing. "I can't let it bother me. But after a while, I just hoped they'd hit it hard at someone to get the inning over."

Players selecting smaller bats

By The Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Willie McCovey went to the San Francisco Giants' bat rack the other day planning to see what was left of his Hall of Fame swing at age 49. He struck out in his search.

"I didn't bring any of my own bats to spring training, and I couldn't find one big enough. Joel Youngblood has a big bat, but I didn't see any of his," McCovey said. "All the young players are using little 'ole bats now.

"I'm amazed that they're all going that route. I'm even more amazed that they think they can't handle bigger bats.

"I think it's the main reason you don't see as many guys having 40-homer years now. With a light bat, you have to make perfect contact to hit the ball out."

Willie Mays, who reached the Hall of Fame seven years before his former teammate, shares McCovey's opinion.

"I've tried to convince some of the players that with more wood at the end of their bats they could get more distance," Mays said.

Bats 35 inches or longer and weighing 36 or more ounces were commonly used, especially by power hitters, not too long ago. The averages now are 34 inches and 32 ounces, according to Chuck Schupp, director of sales for Louisville Slugger bats on the pro level.

"The drop is because the younger players have become so used to the feel of aluminum bats. There's no doubt in my mind," says Giants President Al Rosen, and that's the consensus around baseball.

Aluminum bats, used by most players from Little League through college, weigh 31 ounces or less.

Rosen and Bob Kennedy, the top men in the Giants' front office, plan to force-feed more wood to hitters in the organization.

"The Giants have taken the initiative and ordered bigger bats for their minor leaguers," according to Schupp.

The two Giants' executives also think that if the minor leaguers can adjust to thicker handles, choke up on occasion and not swing from the end of the bat all the time, they will strike out less.

Rosen said he discovered how extreme the bat situation was becoming when one player put in an order for a 32-inch, 30-ouncer.

He said, "I sent the order back to him with a note attached: Little League practice starts at 4 o'clock tomorrow."

Wildcat says 'thanks for the memories'

WILLIE THE WILDCAT
Guest Columnist

Another college basketball season is drawing to a close as the NCAA tournament opens this week. Both the K-State men's and women's programs have exceeded preseason expectations and landed at-large bids.

I'm really excited about traveling to Salt Lake City and cheering on the Wildcats. On the other hand, this will mark my last appearance as Willie the Wildcat.

As the mascot, it's been a great year for me and K-State athletics. The interest generated by new coaches and players began with football season and has increased during basketball season.

I love being a part of the new enthusiasm created by a resurgence of purple pride. I hope people will get involved in groups such as ICAT and help increase student support of K-State athletics.

As I look back on the year, the memories are what make the time and effort all worthwhile. Here are a few of my favorites:

- Getting passed up by a victory-crazed student section during our thrashing of the University of Kansas in football.
- Being written a ticket for riding my scooter without a tag before a home football game.
- Seeing the expression on a 6-year-old's face as a Wildcat Santa hands him a piece of Christmas candy.
- Making the all-night drive to Nashville, Tenn., only to have people think I'm the Kentucky Wildcat.
- Stepping in the layup line with the University of Oklahoma basketball team and slam dunking just to say, "You're not so great."
- Continually watching 500 20-year-olds maim one another for a plastic basketball worth 8 cents.
- Praying that if I fell off my stilts I would bounce back up like Steve Henson going for a loose ball.
- Receiving word that KU Coach Larry Brown and Big Eight Conference Commissioner Carl James had decided that my dunking was endangering the backboards and that I would have to stop.
- Opening a handmade Valentine's Day card from a second-grade girl in Des Moine, Iowa, who hoped she could meet me some day.

While I could go on and on, the point is that it's a great experience to be Willie the Wildcat. Being Willie is a perfect example of the saying, "The best things in life are free." If you're thinking about how much fun it would be to wear the head, come to tryouts a few weeks after spring break and find out.

Don't be afraid of embarrassing yourself, the head is your protection. Don't be afraid of the time commitment. You can either spend time watching the game or being a part of it. Don't be afraid of not being good enough. K-State fans love Willie, and you have plenty of time to develop your skills.

If I sound like a recruiter, I am. The people who have been Willie the Wildcat in the past have worked hard to build a tradition of which K-State is proud.

Go ahead, give it a try.

NCAA Notebook

Hey, pal, can you spare a dollar?

The odds against K-State winning the men's basketball crown are 250:1, said USA Today's Denny Sheridan. Kansas and Missouri are both at 20:1; and Oklahoma State stands at 30:1.

North Carolina is the favorite to take the title at 3:1, with the other top seeds Indiana (4:1), Georgetown (6:1) and UNLV (7:1) close behind. Wichita State, which plays St. John's Friday in a Midwest Regional game at Chicago, is listed at 2,000:1.

A gambler's dream would be if long-shot Pennsylvania won the title at 1,000,000:1.

USA Today lists Wildcats at 40th

In the final power ratings published in USA Today, K-State was ranked 40th. The Wildcats' first-round opponent, Georgia, was listed at No. 38.

Speaking officially about NCAAs

A total of 96 officials will work the 32 first-round games in the NCAA tournament with each conference receiving an automatic bid in the field being guaranteed one official.

The number of referees will be trimmed to 12 for the four regional finals and further reduced to nine for the Final Four with no official working more than one game.

Conference lands 5 in tournaments

For the third straight season, the Big Eight Conference is sending five teams into postseason competition — four to the NCAA and one in the NIT. It's the fifth straight season at least four Big Eight teams have competed in the NCAA or NIT and the eighth straight season that at least three conference squads are in postseason competition.

Missouri and Oklahoma are making their eighth trips to the NCAA tourney, while Kansas and K-State are making trip No. 17 to the NCAAs (tied for 7th most in NCAA history).

Big Eight teams are 93-75 collectively in the NCAA tournament — Kansas 28-17; K-State 23-20; Oklahoma 10-8; and Missouri 6-8. Conference teams have been to the Final Four 20 times with Kansas making the most appearances at seven.

Big 8 schools schedule tough teams

The NCAA said the Big Eight Conference had the toughest non-conference schedule of all Division I conferences this season. It's no wonder, based on last week's wire service polls, 11 of 17 teams (not counting the Big Eight) were on league schedules 14 times.

Of the 60 non-Big Eight teams in the NCAA field, 27 posted a record of 72-40 (.643) against outside competition while the Big Eight went 72-40 against non-conference opposition (.643) — the first time since 1980 the league failed to hit the 70-percent mark.

Big Eight teams faced nine Division I conference champions and defeated the leaders from the Atlantic-10, Metro, Mid-Continent, Missouri Valley and PCAA leagues. Oklahoma (5-3), Kansas (5-3), Missouri (2-3) and K-State (1-2) were a combined 13-11 against the 60 non-Big Eight qualifiers.

Bypass surgeries numerous despite new methods

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — The use of tiny balloons to unclog heart arteries is growing dramatically, but it seems to have done little to cut into the high prevalence of expensive coronary bypass surgery, a study has found.

The non-surgical procedure, known as angioplasty, is being done on increasingly sicker patients with better results, researchers found.

However, the researchers say that while angioplasty was used on 150,000 Americans last year, bypass surgery was performed on 250,000 Americans in the same period.

Both angioplasty and bypass surgery are performed to relieve obstructions in the critical arteries that feed the heart muscle. These blockages can contribute to heart attacks, and their major symptom is chest pain called angina.

The first angioplasty was performed 10 years ago. By 1979, it was conducted on 3,000 people, usually those with a single narrowing of one coronary artery. That grew to 60,000 people in 1984, 100,000 in 1985 and 150,000 last year.

In several papers presented this week at the annual meeting of the American College of Cardiology, researchers described the results of a large follow-up of angioplasty sponsored by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute that examined differences in angioplasty between 1980 and 1985.

Dr. Katherine Detre of the University of Pittsburgh said the statistics show that angioplasty is being performed on people with far more advanced heart disease than it was in the early days, and that results continue to improve.

The procedure was successful 87 percent of the time in 1985, compared with 67 percent five years earlier.

Despite the more complicated cases, the death rate is the same — about 1 percent. And the need for emergency bypass operations to rescue patients from unsuccessful angioplasty fell from 6 percent of cases to 4 percent.

"Angioplasty is being done in much more severely affected patients, and it's more successful. It's a good news story," said Dr. Eugene Passamani of the heart institute.

He attributed the results to better equipment, but said another factor is that more experienced and skillful cardiologists are performing the procedure.

Dr. Martial Bourassa of the Montreal Heart Institute said angioplasty "has very important social and economic advantages" over bypass surgery. It costs about half as much, and patients can be back at work in a few days instead of requiring months of recuperation.

However, Detre noted that the procedure does not appear to be supplanting bypass operations. She speculated that instead, it is often performed on people whose conditions aren't considered to be bad enough to require surgery.

In angioplasty, a catheter is pushed through an artery into the heart arteries. There, doctors position the tip in a spot that is narrowed by a fatty buildup, and then inflate a tiny balloon which forces open the artery.

In a third of the patients, the blockage comes back within a few months, but the rest often have long-lasting relief from their angina. While the success rate is higher after bypass surgery, these patients, too, may have re-clogged arteries months or years later.

The federal study was based on a comparision of 1,155 patients who received angioplasty in 1980 and 1,857 who had it in 1985. The later patients were far more likely to be over age 65, to suffer severe angina or to have had heart attacks, among other differences.

Senate endorses bill urging Amtrak study

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Senate passed and sent the House a bill which authorizes the Department of Transportation to conduct a $50,000 feasibility study to determine if it would be worthwhile to subsidize an Amtrak passenger train between Kansas City and Denver.

The bill, which passed 26-14, calls for the transportation agency to establish a state plan for rail passenger service and look at the possibility of restoring a passenger train across central Kansas.

However, some senators had reservations about the amount of state subsidy it might take to put the trains on the track. Four cosponsors of the bill voted against it, citing the potential cost as the reason for their concern.

They are Republicans Jim Allen of Ottawa Ross Doyen of Concordia, Jeanne Hoferer of Topeka and Wint Winter Jr. of Lawrence.

Supporters envision a full market study of the feasibility of bringing back a passenger train. The agency would check the safety of tracks between the two cities, make rider projections and analyze the overall market. Amtrak would use the study to estimate how much of a subsidy it would need from the state to restore service.

Sen. Joe Norvell, D-Hays, said such a route would link Kansas to both coasts, allowing Kansans to ride Amtrak to Denver, Salt Lake City, Las Vegas and Los Angeles to the west and St. Louis, Chicago and numerous other points to the east.

Opponents said taxpayer money would be better spent subsidizing bus companies who are pulling out of the state because of dropping revenues. Others pointed out that Amtrak operates at a loss on even its most popular routes.

Amtrak currently runs a train from Kansas City to Taos, N.M., which runs through Topeka, Newton, Hutchinson and Garden City. However, Amtrak has said it will not restore the Kansas City to Denver route without a state subsidy to help it break even.

Interest centers on a train which would stop in Lawrence, Topeka, Manhattan, Junction City, Salina, Russell and Hays on its way to Denver.

Takeover activity rebounds

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Takeovers are back.

Rebounding from an early year breather, merger-and-acquisition activity sizzled anew Monday with the announcement of seven major takeover proposals with a combined value of $5.4 billion.

Chrysler Corp. agreed to buy American Motors Corp., USAir Group Inc. agreed to acquire Piedmont Aviation Inc., Allegheny International Inc. agreed to a buyout by the investment firm First Boston Corp. and New York developer Donald Trump agreed to purchase control of Resorts International Inc.

In addition, Caesars World Inc. received a takeover bid from money manager Martin T. Sosnoff, Supermarkets General Corp. drew an unsolicited offer from Dart Group Corp. and Harper & Row Publishers Inc. got a buyout proposal from Theodore Cross, who founded and later sold a New Jersey book publishing company.

These proposals follow an investor group's offer Friday to buy Taft Broadcasting Inc. for $1.35 billion, and the announcement by privately held MacAndrews & Forbes Holdings Inc. of a possible bid to buy the two-thirds of Revlon Group Inc. it does not already own for $720 million.

The burst of new offers appeared coincidental, and involved mostly friendly deals that seemed designed mostly for strategic reasons.

Chrysler, for example, sees AMC providing the additional production and distribution capacity it sought. USAir wants Piedmont to help build the major route system now seen as necessary to survive in the airline industry.

Even so, the surge brought to mind the frenetic deal-making of late 1986, when the end of the old tax law triggered an explosion of takeover attempts before the new law took effect Jan. 1.

Suitors and their targets rushed to complete deals because the old tax law made many mergers less costly. And the capital gains from takeover-related stock trading by corporate raiders and other investors generally were taxed at a lower rate.

Many merger specialists correctly predicted a sharp drop in the pace of takeovers for at least the first few weeks of 1987, and noted that activity often slows early in the year as companies re-evaluate their holdings and goals.

After 868 transactions worth a combined $42.6 billion closed in December, only 382 deals valued at $4.5 billion were completed in January, according to Mergers & Acquisitions magazine. In February, 148 deals were closed. Those deals were valued at $2.1 billion, an amount the magazine said is likely to be revised.

siderate, you just really hate to say anything like 'don't contact me as much,' because they're really nice people."

Marshall said he has received advice from nearly everyone he knows about choosing a school. But the decision is clearly his, said his mother Shirley Marshall.

"We'd kind of like to see him stay in the area so we could see all his games," she said. "But it's a decision he has to make. I wouldn't want to be responsible for having him go somewhere for four years where he wouldn't be happy."

Marshall said he has narrowed his decision down to "five or 10" schools, with Arizona State, Colorado State, Drake and K-State among the frontrunners. He said he is seeking a school with well-established basketball and academic programs that won't require him to redshirt his first season.

Though Marshall said his experience with the recruiting process has been pleasant as a whole, he is still eager to put an end to it once the season is over.

"When I finally sign my name on that paper, it will be a big relief," he said.

control of the party and government apparatus. But he is encountering some resistance at all levels — from workers not inspired by promises of a higher standard of living, from military conservatives who see no results from what they perceive as gestures to the West on arms control and from entrenched bureaucrats.

The extent of resistance is unclear. Officials tend to refer only to "shortcomings" in carrying out official policy or "insufficient attention" to the demands of the times, and the average Soviet does not publicly criticize the leadership.

Living conditions have not changed substantially, and the people still face long lines for meager supplies of food, consumer goods and quality entertainment.

If job performance is any indication of how seriously the workers are taking Gorbachev's efforts, the leader's problems are widespread.

The official Tass news agency reported last week that 60 percent of the country's heavy industries failed to meet January output targets because of tougher quality control.

Gorbachev's efforts toward what he calls "democratization" have been met with enthusiasm by the controlled media and by intellectuals. Much of the labor force, however, is unsure how the reforms will affect their daily lives.

The democratization campaign aims to encourage a freer exchange of ideas and broader participation in decision-making.

Here, too, Gorbachev has encountered opposition.

McCain

more than 45 percent.

When McCain began his presidency, he established committees to make recommendations on tenure and salary schedules according to faculty rankings.

He had great administrative skills in discovering the hidden talents of subordinates and re-assigning them according to their strengths, Chalmers said.

With the academic program improvements, McCain wanted to guarantee a college education to those who desired one.

"I cherish no goal for Kansas State College more devoutly than to be able to say, 'Show me any youth in our state with demonstrated ability to succeed in one of our courses, and regardless of financial circumstances, we shall make it possible for him to attend this college,'" said McCain in 1950.

This goal was aided by the endowment of the Putnam Scholarships in 1954. This gift of an outright $100,000 and annual return of $30,000 stimulated similar gifts and scholarships significantly improved the K-State endowment program.

Establishing a worldwide reputation for K-State was another concern of McCain. In 1956, K-State made a contract with the government of India and the International Cooperation Administration to join with four other land-grant universities in a program of technical assistance in agriculture, veterinary medicine and nutrition.

Under the contract, scientists, veterinarians and home economists from K-State were sent to India as advisers. In return, several Indian leaders came to K-State.

Another exchange program was established with Justus Liebig University in Giessen, West Germany, for K-State students and faculty.

Through all his programs, McCain's eagerness to hear other's opinions and suggestions resulted in his "open-door, open-mind" policy.

"He was concerned with what the students thought, so he met with them, talked with them and never shut them out," Chalmers said.

This policy lead to the initiation of many progressive programs for students and faculty during his administration.

Some of the programs concerned women's rights, drug education, affirmative action and pregnancy counseling.

In addition to accepting suggestions and opinions from others, McCain was well-known for offering advice when others requested it.

"Thousands of students and thousands of students' parents have learned from him. He was a teacher who taught by being a friend and by sharing of himself," said Dr. Karl Menninger, pioneer in the field of psychiatry, during his memorial address to McCain.

Though many of his years in administration were clouded by the political unrest of the Vietnam War, McCain's openness helped keep the campus under control.

For example, he was instrumental in allowing the 1970 demonstration to mourn the killing of students at Kent State University in Kent, Ohio. McCain spoke at the event and incorporated the demonstration into University activities the Iran arms sales and a resupply operation for the Contras.

The independent counsel said that he was not sure all loose ends in the investigation could be tied up in 90 days but that the time period represented "a fair balance" between his need to develop evidence and the need of Congress and the public to resolve unanswered questions.

Walsh said he also had discussed with congressional investigators the possibility of granting immunity to other, lower-level witnesses, but that no names had been cleared so far beyond an initial list of three, including North's secretary, Fawn Hall.

Emerging from the meeting, members of the House panel appeared to agree with Walsh about granting immunity quickly.

"I kind of tend to think we shouldn't do it," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis. "I think the Senate is moving kind of quick."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said, "I think you have to give the prosecutor a reasonable chance to do the job."

Before the meeting, Rep. Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., the senior Republican on the House panel, said he was keeping an open mind on the immunity issue. But he has expressed reservations about going forward with immunity for high-ranking officials before lower-level witnesses are interviewed.

Archibald Cox, who was the Watergate special prosecutor and now is president of the citizens' lobby Common Cause, sent a letter Tuesday to investigators cautioning against yielding to pressure for quick results.

"The public will be shocked if the principal players revealed thus far in the Iran-Contra affair escape prosecution solely because of undue haste by the select committee," he wrote.

Contras

Arias has proposed a cease-fire for all the region's conflicts, together with negotiations aimed at political settlements and free elections not only in Nicaragua but also in El Salvador and Guatemala.

The House Democratic Caucus is urging support for a policy package that includes a six-month moratorium on future aid to Nicaragua's rebels, backing for $300 million in aid to the democracies, support for military aid to Nicaragua's neighbors if needed, and support for the negotiating process.

Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., head of the House Democrats' Contra policy task force, said it is clear the administration has neglected the negotiating process. "We believe this administration has squandered opportunities for peace," he said.

Bonier also said it is essential for the administration to fully account for aid delivered to the Contras to date from all sources — public and private.

"Congress must know the full extent of corruption in the Contra program before we spend another dime on aid," Bonior said. "The American people want no more of a policy that is mired in corruption."

The moratorium idea appeared to be picking up additional support after the resignation on Monday of Contra leader Arturo Cruz, who said promised democratic reforms were far from becoming a reality.

Cruz, a former Sandinista ambassador to the United States who defected to the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels, has been widely regarded as one key to congressional support for Contra aid because of his reputation as a moderate and an advocate of democracy.

"This is clearly the death note of the Contras," said Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn. "This should add opposition to what is clearly now a failed and dying policy of the administration."

Jocks are wearing more lace this year.

The K-100 Sonterra™ for men.
The K-110 Finesse™ for women.

The second lace helps Kaepa athletic shoes perform under pressure better than any other shoe.

A conventional shoe can't duplicate your foot's movements, because unlike your foot, it doesn't have moving parts. When your foot flexes, the shoe distorts, pinching down at the top of your foot and bulging out at the heel.

The Kaepa upper is made like your foot, with two parts. Each part is secured by a separate lace. When your foot moves, the two parts move like a body joint, smoothly mimicking your foot's flexing action.

For athletes, it means better fit and performance at the times they need it most—when they're moving their feet.

For the rest of us, it means a shoe so lavishly comfortable, getting out of bed and walking to class becomes a distinct possibility.

So whether you're a serious jock or just a person looking to offset the agony of learning with a little pleasure, you should seriously consider getting into high-performance lace.

Congressional battles continue in Iran affair

House freezes $40 million in aid to rebels

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted Wednesday to freeze $40 million in aid for the Nicaraguan Contras for six months and to order the Reagan administration to use the time to account for millions of dollars in allegedly missing previous aid.

The 230-to-196 vote marked the first in a series of expected congressional battles over Contra aid this year. The resolution was supported by 213 Democrats and 17 Republicans and opposed by 156 Republicans and 40 Democrats.

Democrats said Wednesday's action was justified by alleged corruption in the ranks of Nicaragua's anti-leftist insurgents. But Republicans said the vote was a bid to break a promise made by Congress last year and could "hand Central America over to the Soviet Union."

The House vote, heralded in advance by Democratic leaders as a signal that congressional support for the Contra program is at an end, sends the issue to the Senate.

A Senate vote is expected next week on a resolution disapproving the $40 million outright.

Final congressional action to block the money would draw a certain veto from President Reagan, and leaders of both parties say such a veto would stand up.

But House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas made clear that the real target is not the $40 million — the last installment of a $100 million aid package voted last year — but the $105 million Reagan has requested for the Contras for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

"I think the exercise is very useful...in awakening the administration to the reality that they must focus on other ways to find peace and secure our interests in Central America," Wright said Wednesday.

Committees seek businessman's immunity

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congressional committees voted Wednesday to seek limited immunity for Iranian-American businessman Albert Hakim, sources said, as investigators worked to penetrate the tangled financial web of the Iran-Contra affair.

At the same time, independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh met with the Senate Iran-Contra panel to press his case for a 90-day delay before partial immunity is granted to two former Reagan administration officials, ex-National Security Adviser John Poindexter and his former aide, Lt. Col. Oliver North.

The exact votes in the House and Senate committees on limited immunity for Hakim were not disclosed, although a two-thirds majority is required for such proposals to pass. He thus becomes the fourth person to receive Congress' approval for limited protection from prosecution in the case.

Sources, including one House committee member, speaking on condition they not be named, identified Hakim, who is believed to possess records vital to a complete understanding of the Iranian arms sale and apparent diversion of funds to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

The presidentially appointed Tower commission said Hakim, 50, was involved in the U.S.-Iran initiative, including the opening of a "second channel" with the Iranians after doubts arose about the reliability of an earlier go-between.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate panel, said that Walsh and the congressional investigators will be working toward a compromise on granting immunity to North and Poindexter.

Inouye said such a compromise would delay the start of hearings by three weeks — until the middle of

Professors critique high school actors

By DANA BRADLEY

The K-State Players and the theater honors fraternity Theta Alpha Phi critiqued and encouraged young actors during the Second Annual High School One-Act Play Festival Wednesday in Nichols Theatre.

High school actors showcased their talent in one-act plays of their choice during the all-day festival. Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech, said the event is a learning experience for the high school students.

A K-State theater faculty panel provided an educational focus by giving two informative critiques of each play.

Shelton and Harold Nichols, professor of speech, critiqued the actors' work after their play. In response to the comments, students were able to ask questions of Shelton and Nichols and get detailed feedback on how to better present their work.

The festival, in its second year, allows high school students to view works done by other students.

"This is a good chance for the students to come together and see what other people are doing," Shelton said.

Melissa Hatfield-Riggs, instructor of speech, agreed with Shelton that the festival is a learning experience for high school actors.

"This is an attempt to allow the students to perform and get constructive criticism and feedback of the work," she said. "It also allows them a chance to see our facilities and helps their instructors in working with them."

"This is our first year here," said Ken Church, Concordia High School drama instructor. "They get a chance to interact with college students. The purpose of this is not to be ranked, but to learn."

For the high school students involved, it was a chance to have some fun and work on their plays.

Michelle Kopp, an Onaga High School senior, said the festival helped tremendously because it was the first time they had presented their one-act play.

"It's fun to do this in front of other actors, especially since this our first presentation of it," she said.

The one-act plays in order of performance were "An Actor's Nightmare" by Marysville High School; "When Shakespeare's Ladies Meet" by Onaga High School; "Where Have All The Lightening Bugs Gone" by Peabody High School; "A Tale of Pyramus and Thisby" by Concordia High School; and "An Actor's Nightmare" by Bishop Meige High School, Shawnee Mission.

The Wamego High School drama students were asked by the school's principal and superintendent not to perform their one-act play, "Voices From The High School," said Rhonda Miracle, instructor of speech and publicity coordinator for the event.

"The piece contained monologues about sex, drugs and other problems often faced by high school students," she said. "These are issues that are important in high schools, but apparently the material was a little too strong for (the administration).

"We are obviously very concerned about this kind of censorship going on in theaters around here," Miracle said.

Festival participants also had an opportunity to interview for theater scholarships being offered by K-State during their visit, Shelton said. Currently, seven scholarships are being offered to incoming freshmen and transfer students who are theater majors.

The scholarships, ranging from $500 to $900, are offered by the College of Arts and Sciences and Theta Alpha Phi.

As a token of appreciation, certificates of performance were given to each of the drama instructors.

Tuition could rise 10 percent in 1989

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

K-State students will be seeing significant tuition increases beginning in the fall of 1989 if a bill recommended Wednesday by the Kansas House Appropriations Committee becomes law.

The bill requires a 20 percent fee-cost ratio for resident students at all Board of Regents institutions and a 60 percent fee-cost ratio for non-resident students at K-State, the University of Kansas and The Wichita State University, said Mark Tallman, director of legislative affairs of Associated Students of Kansas.

Currently, the fee-cost ratio at K-State is 18.2 percent for residents and 51.6 percent for non-residents.

Non-resident fee-cost ratios at Fort Hays State, Emporia State and Pittsburg State would be 50 percent, Tallman said.

The fee-cost ratio is the amount students pay in tuition to fund the total cost of education compared with the amount the state pays. Education costs include faculty salaries, library support, academic computing and operating expenses, he said.

These fee-cost increases would amount to about a 10 percent tuition increase at K-State for resident students and a 16.3 percent increase for non-resident students, he said.

The bill was tabled by the appropriations committee Feb. 26 but was reintroduced this week. If passed, it will not be as financially burdensome to students as it might have been, he said. The previous proposal would have amounted to an average tuition increase of 20 percent.

"We think this bill is definitely better than as was first proposed," he said.

K-State will be hit harder than other Regents institutions, he said, because it currently has a lower fee-cost ratio than the others.

Tallman said he was concerned about shifting a greater amount of educational costs to students.

"The whole point of the bill is to require that students pay a higher

House passes smoking bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After a spirited debate, primarily between smoking and non-smoking legislators, the Kansas House passed a bill Wednesday that would prohibit smoking except in designated areas in all indoor public places across the state.

Under the bill, which advanced to the Senate on a vote of 78-44, anyone found guilty of smoking outside the designated smoking zones in public buildings would be subject to a fine of not more than $20, including court costs.

Before approving the bill, lawmakers turned down an attempt to short-circuit the legislation by adding language to impose an outright ban on the use of all tobacco products in Kansas.

"This is not a pick-on-smokers debate in the Legislature today," said Rep. Donna Whiteman, D-Hutchinson, who promoted the measure on the House floor.

Instead, she said the bill would preserve smokers' rights while protecting 78 percent of all Kansans who do not smoke.

Whiteman, a non-smoker, rested her case on a recent surgeon general's report that showed the so-called sidestream smoke from tobacco products poses what she called "an extreme health hazard" to many non-smokers.

State law already prohibits smoking in elevators, theaters, libraries, museums, waiting rooms of doctors' offices and in many governmental meeting rooms, Whiteman said.

The bill would extend the ban to places such as schools, restaurants and any other place open to the public. Proprietors or operators of public places could designate smoking areas, and the measure places few restrictions on locations where smoking would be allowed.

However, a proprietor who fails to post "no smoking" signs could face a maximum $50 fine including court costs.

Rep. Don Mainey, D-Topeka, a smoker, unsuccessfully offered language that would have banned all smoking in the state, regardless of location. However, the amendment would not have banned the sale of tobacco products, assuring collection of $60.4 million in state cigarette tax revenue.

"I'm not offering this amendment as a joke," Mainey said, "because I'm trying to quit."

Mainey said if lawmakers were truly serious about doing something to protect the public from health hazards associated with smoking, they would embrace his amendment. However, the House rejected the language on a vote of 70-35.

Another smoker, Rep. Robin Leach, D-Linwood, also attacked the proposal.

"I am totaly amazed about how anxious we are to save ourselves from each other," Leach said.

Rep. Theo Cribbs, D-Wichita, a non-smoker, told the chamber he was against the bill because it infringes on smokers' rights. He said voluntary efforts to provide no smoking areas should be sufficient

Five convicted for promoting jazz

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — A judge Wednesday convicted five leaders of the Jazz Section, a cultural group that promoted jazz and other non-sanctioned art forms.

Two defendants were sentenced to prison terms of 10 months and 16 months, while the other three were given suspended sentences.

About 150 supporters outside the courtroom sang "Give Peace a Chance." Their rhythmic clapping could be heard throughout the court proceedings.

Some spectators tried to prevent plainclothes agents from filming them but were pushed away by a man in a raincoat. One handcuffed defendant shouted "long live jazz" before he was led away.

Authorities have denied the trial has political connotations, but Western human rights activists say it is the largest political trial in Czechoslovakia since the Communist state tried human rights activists in 1979.

The five defendants are leaders of Jazz Section, an independent publishing and musical organization founded in 1971 as part of the official Musician's Union.

The group fell into disfavor with the government for publishing unauthorized art and arranging jazz and other concerts without state sanction. In 1984, the state banned the group's parent organization, the Musician's Union.

Judge approves surrogate adoption

LONDON — In a test case brought by the government, a judge ruled Wednesday that a married couple can adopt a 2-year-old girl born to the husband and a surrogate mother who received a $7,500 fee.

At issue was whether the couple could adopt the child even though the surrogate mother accepted money for her services and a 1958 adoption law bars "payments in return for consent to adoption."

High Court Judge Sir John Latey said he was convinced the surrogate mother was not motivated by financial gain but wanted to help childless couples.

The judge also said the girl has been living with her natural father and his wife since she was two days old and was "thriving...(in a) loving, normal, parent-child relationship."

He said the natural mother did not oppose the adoption.

Latey said the surrogate mother originally agreed to bear a child for $15,000. She received $7,500 but then published a book about her experience, earning an undisclosed amount, and turned down the second $7,500 installment.

FAA admits altering work records

WASHINGTON — Altered work records affecting 446 fired Chicago-area air traffic controllers were innocent mistakes, Federal Aviation Administration officials told a House panel Wednesday.

Robert Miller, assistant manager of the Chicago Air Route Traffic Control Center, acknowledged that the work records erroneously were changed to show vacationing air traffic controllers as absent without leave during a 1981 strike.

"In hindsight, it is readily apparent that mistakes were made," Miller said in testimony before the Public Works and Transportation oversight subcommittee.

The subcommittee is holding hearings to determine if the rights of 446 Chicago controllers were violated when they were dismissed after an illegal August 1981 strike by the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization.

In all, 11,400 controllers were fired, but the subcommittee said a disproportionately high number were dismissed at the center near Aurora, Ill.

FACTS receives 3-year extension

TOPEKA — The Farmers Assistance Counseling and Training Service would be extended for three years and be allowed to keep its in-house attorney under a bill which passed the Senate, 40-0, Wednesday and advanced to the House.

The FACTS program is scheduled to expire June 30. As the bill was introduced, it would have stripped the program of its ability to hire staff attorneys and provide legal representation for financially distressed farmers.

Gov. Mike Hayden had proposed eliminating $160,000 in funding for the free legal services provided by the FACTS program, which was implemented in 1985 as a means of providing counseling, assistance and legal help to farmers in financial crises.

However, Hayden has since relented to Senate demands and agreed to provide funding for FACTS legal assistance.

The program has a toll-free telephone number for farmers seeking assistance, either in training for new careers, help in dealing with the stress and emotional problems associated with bankruptcy, and legal advice in reorganizing debts and preventing foreclosure.

House bill to limit pornography

TOPEKA — Despite warnings about riding roughshod over the First Amendment, the Kansas House overwhelmingly endorsed a proposal Wednesday that would prohibit the display, sale or distribution of material deemed "harmful to minors."

The measure, which advanced to the Senate on a vote of 94-24 with four abstentions, defines material as being harmful to children if it includes or promotes nudity, sexual conduct, sexual excitement or sexual violence.

"Kansas' No. 1 priority is our children and our grandchildren," the bill's sponsor, Rep. Marvin Smith, R-Topeka, told lawmakers as he promoted the proposal during debate.

However, Rep. Dale Sprague, R-McPherson, said that although the proposal had some merit, it would be better for the Legislature to wait until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of a similar measure in Virginia.

Sprague said he feared Smith's bill would "clutter the landscape of the First Amendment."

The biggest problem with the bill, Sprague said, was that it uses a standard obscenity test of applying contemporary "community standards" to determine whether something is harmful to minors.

Committee hears 'boot camp' plan

TOPEKA — Young, first-time offenders would go to a corrections "boot camp" for 90 days instead of serving longer prison sentences, under a proposal Secretary of Corrections Richard Mills presented to lawmakers today.

Mills urged the Legislature's Joint Committee on State Building Construction to consider the plan as another way to help ease the state's prison overcrowding problems.

The committee also is considering the department's $9.3 million proposal for creating 509 new minimum-security beds at four sites, three of them state hospitals. Committee members said they were frustrated over efforts to keep up with the state's ever-growing inmate population.

Mills acknowleged the department was frustrated as well, saying sentencing laws or practices related to the parole of inmates must be changed before the problem can be solved. However, he and committee members also said the system needs more immediate relief than that.

According to corrections figures, the maximum capacity of the state's prison system is 5,015 prisoners, yet the state is housing 5,381 inmates. The department projects the number of inmates to reach 5,588 by June 30 and 6,111 by June 30, 1988.

Student to audition for country music show

Nashville Network program nominates singer for video

By TODD SCHULTZ
Collegian Reporter

A K-State sophomore has been given a break that may launch his country music singing career.

After sending in an audition tape, Garth Gardiner, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, was selected for a video audition to appear on "You Can Be A Star" on The Nashville Network.

Gardiner will go to Nashville for the video audition Memorial Day weekend but won't know until fall if he will be on television.

"If you have good stage presence and poise, you have a pretty good chance," he said. "There are a lot of people who try, and a lot don't get it, but I think with the right amount of dedication, I can make it."

His audition tape included two George Strait songs, "The Chair" and "It Ain't Cool To Be Crazy About You."

A friend who owns a studio in Wichita made the tape for him. The accompaniment was done with an electric guitar, electric bass, a drum set and a synthesizer that sounds like an electric piano. The parts were mixed together to sound like a band, he said.

Along with the audition tape, Gardiner sent a picture and a resume, including experience, awards, interests and goals.

His ultimate goal is "to get a recording contract with a major record label and to make it in the country music business.

"There is something about performing in front of an audience that really excites me. That's what motivates me to reach my goals," he said.

Gardiner hopes to follow in the footsteps of country music star George Strait.

Strait, while in college, advertised himself as a singer looking for a band and has been with that band since.

"There are a lot of people in country music today who have swayed from the traditional sound of country music," Gardiner said. He believes George Strait has brought back the traditional country sound.

Gardiner's rural background has helped him understand country music better than someone who has always lived in the city, he said.

"If I hadn't had an excellent (music) teacher in high school, I don't think I could have gotten very far," he said.

Support, correct breathing and tone are the same in any type of singing, but in country music, vowels and consonants are pronounced differently, Gardiner said.

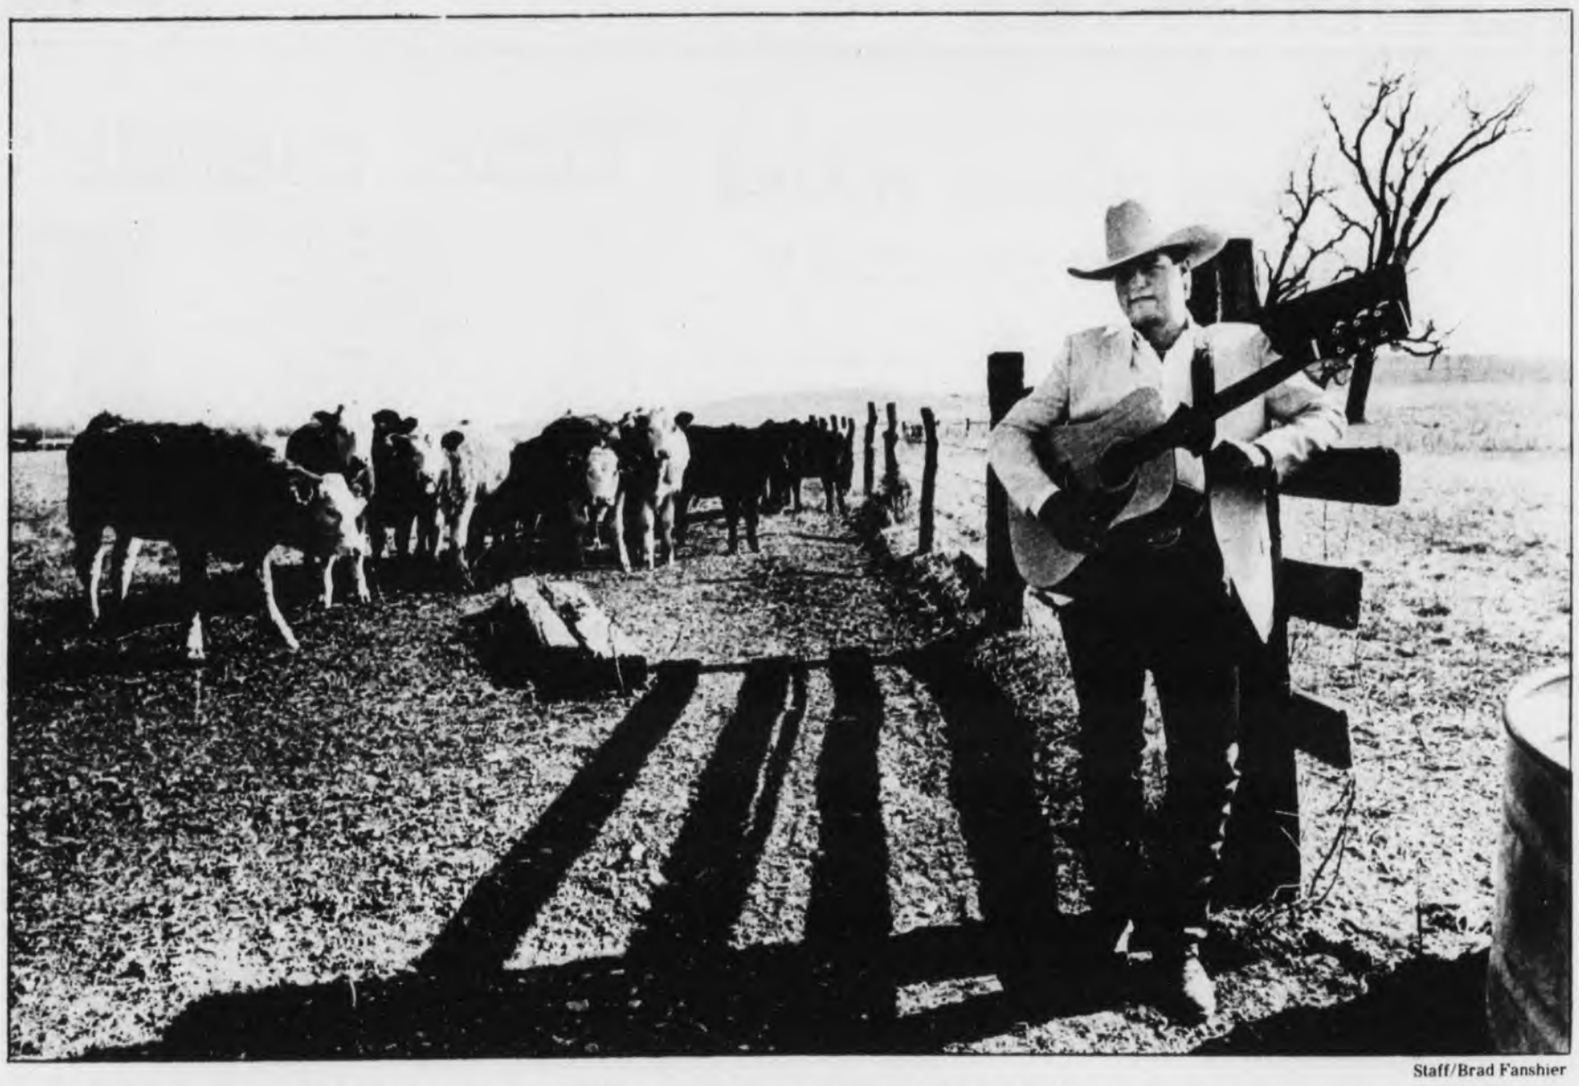
While studying music, Gardiner sang mostly classical pieces.

Last fall for his voice jury, he learned the aria, "Vo Far Guerra," from the opera "Rinaldo" by Handel. The voice jury is the final exam for students taking voice lessons and is performed before the voice faculty.

He has sung other Italian arias, as well as songs from musicals.

"Although I enjoyed singing classical music, my interest has swayed now to country music," he said.

While at Ashland High School, Gardiner sang in "The Sound of Music" and earned the lead in both "Oklahoma!" and "The Music Man."



He sang in high school competitions for four years and received first-division ratings at the state level each year. He also sang in the southwest district Kansas Music Educators Association honors choir.

As a high school senior, Gardiner won his division at a National Association of Teachers of Singing vocal contest.

At K-State, Gardiner has sung in Men's Glee Club for two years and in the FarmHouse Quartet.

Gardiner has not written any music, but plans to in the future.

"I don't want to go with a cocky attitude, but I think my chances are as good as anyone's," he said. "With the right attitude and talent, anyone can do it."

U.S. participant to speak on Spanish civil war

By The Collegian Staff

Fifty years ago, Milton Wolff and about 3,200 other American freedom fighters left "the home of the free" for Spain, to liberate the Spanish Republic from a fascist takeover led by military leader Francisco Franco.

Wolff, chairman of Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade, will speak on "The Good Fight — 50 Years Later" at 3:30 p.m. today in the Union Big Eight Room.

More than half the members of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade died in their unsuccessful attempt to defend the Spanish Republic and only about 350 of the veterans are alive today. The Spanish Republic fell in 1939 to Franco with the aid of Italian fascist dictator Benito Mussolini and German leader Adolf Hitler.

"Fascism represents a political movement (by a government) that is willing to use unlimited violence to suppress popular movements that seek power and benefits for workers and peasants," said John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy.

Wolff will talk about the brigade's work in Spain and its repercussions.

When Abraham Lincoln Brigade volunteers returned to the United States, they were persecuted and pegged as disloyal and un-American because the Communist Party supported the anti-fascist movement. The United States and other western nations were practicing a policy of isolationism, and thus did not intervene, Exdell said.

Though the Abraham Lincoln Brigade did not succeed in its quest, its dedication to working toward freeing countries from aggressive takeovers still continues.

Providing clean water is immediate priority

Sixteen months ago, cancer-causing agents were detected in the water of a resident of Moehlman Bottoms, adjacent to the Riley County Landfill. While the problem went uncorrected, the resident was forced to haul good water from a neighbor nearby.

Four months ago, another contaminated well was discovered in the vicinity. And the first resident continues to haul water.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment, which ran the original water tests, has said the suspected source of contamination is the landfill. Now the department says it's up to Riley County to take care of the problem. Just last Thursday, water tests were finally taken by the county on 13 other wells near the landfill.

KDHE recommended the contaminated water not be used for cooking, cleaning or bathing, and the department could offer no encouragement the problem would be resolved soon. It took a petition filed last week and presented to county commissioners to get a meeting established to discuss the creation of an alternative water source for the area.

A similar problem occurred in 1985 on nearby Hunter's Island. Those residents now belong to a water district and have their water piped in, which is what the majority of Moehlman Bottoms residents would prefer. "We just want good water," they said.

Though most residents are not pointing fingers at anyone, perhaps they need to. Tests have shown the groundwater is moving to the east and south.

Regardless of which governmental entity ultimately will be found responsible for cleaning up the mess, the affected residents need clean water. Now.

And someone must take the initiative to provide usable water. This must be given utmost priority.

Crackdown on crime will present problems

The good news is the Kansas prison system is not like the one in Texas. After years of lawsuits over crowded conditions, cruel treatment, inadequate facilities and insufficient staffing, a federal judge ruled last month that Texas was operating "grossly unconstitutional prisons."

The bad news is the Kansas prison system may soon be like the one in Texas.

Last week, Gov. Mike Hayden approved plans to house as many as 600 minimum-security prisoners in vacant buildings on the grounds of state hospitals for the retarded and mentally ill. Hayden said, "We're going to deal with it (prison overcrowding), and we're going to deal with it head-on. It's going to cost a lot of money, but I'm not going to skirt the issue at all."

Yet, even as Hayden was promising to deal with the problem of prison overcrowding, he continued his bent of "getting tough on crime," especially drug offenses — the same policies that have caused the crisis in Texas prisons. As a number of studies have shown, "getting tough on crime" by lengthening sentences has failed to prove itself as a cost-effective measure for reducing crime.

A year-long study of serious crime (murder, rape, aggravated assault and robbery) in Columbus, Ohio, concluded that a proposed five-year mandatory sentence for any felony (even less serious ones) would reduce crime by only about 4 percent. The study added, however, that the Ohio prison population of 13,000 inmates (currently crammed into a 9,000 capacity area) would swell by a factor of five.

Furthermore, "getting tough on crime" per se means incarcerating more offenders of so-called victimless crimes (the victim and the offender being one and the same, as with prostitution and drug abuse) and leaving less room in prisons for murderers, rapists, arsonists and robbers. Yet, Hayden, in his zeal to back up his tough talk, has continued to ignore these facts.

In the end, Hayden, as well as Kansans in general, need to ask themselves if Kansas can afford to "get tough on crime."

Racist beast prevails to a despicable extent

Many recent events make it abundantly clear that this country is still gripped by an ugly and uncontrolled beast — racism.

The shameful reactions that were all too widespread across the country on the recent anniversary of the great civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday provide clear evidence of a longstanding and unfounded hatred between the races. The very existence of an organization like the Ku Klux Klan and its all-encompassing power in places like Forsyth County, Ga., is a despicable commentary on the state of civil rights today.

In his recent campus visit, Martin Luther King III suggested KKK members use their energies to benefit society instead of trying to tear it apart by "finding cures to cancer and AIDS because that is what will kill...not black folks."

In the future, the citizens of this country must truly live by the laws that guarantee equal opportunities and equal treatment to every individual — regardless of the color of that person's skin.

Time, friends will conquer grief

GLORIA FREELAND
Guest Columnist

My husband died a year ago Feb. 3 at the age of 31. Many people might say, "Oh, a year ago. She should be over that by now."

But I'm not over it. I'm still grieving, and right now I feel like I'll be grieving forever. In some ways, Feb. 3, 1986, seems like yesterday; in other ways, it seems like 60 years ago.

Between then and now I've had a baby. Between then and now, I've gone back to work full time. I'm sure I'm functioning better now than I was a year ago. A year ago, it was all I could do to gather the energy to get out of bed. Now I still have days when I'd rather pull the covers over my head, but more often than not I can think in terms of what I want to accomplish each day.

A year ago, I was pregnant and terrified of being a single parent. Now I have a beautiful, contented 8-month-old daughter who seems to be growing and developing quite well in spite of my previous inexperience as a mother. A year ago, I wouldn't have had the strength to stand up before a class of 20 Reporting I students. Now I can stand up before them, give a lecture and even discuss how to write obituaries (even when my own husband's obituary stands out so clearly in my mind).

A year ago, shopping for groceries or going to Wal-Mart or walking near Denison Hall where he taught would send me into a panic. Now I can do all those simple things without panicking even though I still feel painful twinges.

Over the past year, I have learned how resilient the human spirit is and I have learned how valuable family and friends are. Both my family and my husband's family have been extremely supportive as have been a few good friends. My college roommate from 14 years ago is one example. Deb seemed to know instinctively what to do and say to help me in my grief.

She wrote to me every day for the first few weeks after Jerome's death and she still writes and calls at least once a week. She sent inspirational verses, invited me to the zoo with her daughters, allowed me to cry, sent a huge box of Christmas ornaments (because she knew my first Christmas without him would be difficult), remembered other holidays and was (and is) there whenever I needed (need) her.

Other friends have helped by listening — really listening — to me talk about my memories of Jerome and my up and down emotions by inviting me to their homes for meals, by giving me daily hugs, by acknowledging significant dates (our wedding anniversary, my birthday, Christmas, Valentine's Day, the first anniversary of his death), by remembering Jerome with love and laughter and tears. To those who have been able to open themselves to my pain I give my deepest appreciation.

But during the past year, I also have had people ignore me rather than face me with my grief. At first I was hurt, then I became angry, and now I realize they just didn't know what to say and were afraid to face another's pain. Having gone through the most devastating year of my life, I have some ideas which might help a person deal with another's grief:

—Don't ignore the grieving person. Reach out, and even if the words "I'm sorry" don't come out, at least hold the person's hand or somehow indicate your concern.

—Don't pretend the situation is normal for the person or that it will ever be "normal" again.

—Let the grieving person talk about the one who died. It might make you uncomfortable, but it is the only way the person has of working through the grief.

—Call the grieving person or stop by to visit. The person who is grieving should not be expected to make the first move because the depression, hostility, loneliness and panic tend to paralyze the person into inaction.

—Invite the grieving person out, but be specific about dates and places. Don't just say "Let's go out sometime." The grieving person needs to have something to look forward to even if it's only lunch or a trip to the zoo.

For those who are grieving, I have some ideas which helped me:

—Try to reach out to others. Don't hold up at home by yourself.

—Balance going out with time to yourself. You can't be moving so fast you don't allow yourself time to think.

—Read books and pamphlets on grief. They may not seem appropriate at the time, but you'll eventually find something that makes sense or strikes a chord with you.

—Write. Keep a journal or write poetry if it helps. Sometimes my feelings were so deep I couldn't find the words to express them, but other times, writing was therapy for me.

—Ask people who knew your loved one to write what they remember about him or her. I did that and I'm so glad I did because now my daughter will know a little about what her dad was like through the words of others.

—Talk about the person. Find someone who is really willing to listen.

—Don't deny your feelings of anger, depression, panic or whatever. They're all normal and they don't mean you're going crazy.

—Find others who may have experienced a similar loss. Keep in mind there still will be differences because not every situation is the same.

—See a counselor who is a specialist in grief.

—Stay away from other major changes in your life if possible. Although the first inclination is to "run away," that may not necessarily be the thing to do. You've already had a major upheaval in your life. Don't add others if you don't have to.

—Realize there's nothing magic to take the pain away and no magic timetable on which to judge your progress. Grief is hard work. Grief has changed your life. Nothing will ever be the same again.

—Remember that death in inevitable, but so is life. A friend has told me that many times this year. Even though you don't understand why the sun is still shining or why others — including yourself — are still breathing, you go on because there is nothing else for you to do. And, eventually, some of that sunshine will get through and you'll be glad to be alive. It doesn't happen overnight and it comes in small doses, but happiness does return.

For me, the happiness creeps in when I watch my daughter playing or when I laugh at "Bloom County" or when I get excited about my job. One thing that helps me keep going is remembering my husband's knack for making the most out of each day. He wrote the following paragraph in a 1979 New Year's Eve letter to his parents:

"...Look not to the past, for it is only a shadow of what has been. Look toward the future, for there the light shines and illuminates the past we must travel. But most of all, live in the present and realize that with each new day the sun still rises and we still hold the key to life."

I keep it on my bulletin board and read it every day. Somehow, it comforts me knowing that is what he truly believed and what he would want me to live by.

Tips for surviving spring break

RON HONIG
Collegian Columnist

The question asked most often in the last three weeks has been, "Where are you going for spring break?" Of course many people know where they would like to go and then they know where they will probably go. A lucky few, however, are going where they want. These are the ones who, despite an ailing economy, prior commitments and mom's disapproval, are going to have fun over spring break.

That decision of where to journey can often be a difficult one, but by following some guidelines the task becomes much easier.

Do you want to see relatives? If the answer is no, then precede to the next question.

Do you want to meet a prospective relative? If the answer is yes, precede to the next question. If not, consider going home.

Do you want to lie in the sun or play in the snow? Answering this question will help you pick a general direction of travel.

Many people choose to travel south to enjoy the sand, surf and sin, or sun. Others head to the mountains to get in the last remnants of winter. Unfortunately, I won't have the opportunity to do anything that exciting this time. The closest thing to skiing I'll get to do this break is slide down a stairway banister. Lying on a sun-drenched beach? More like "Gilligan's Island" reruns for me.

If one is still having difficulty picking a vacation location, they should look at it from the other end and eliminate a few possiblities. A week-long hedge trimming seminar in Tomahawk, Wis., is probably out. A tour of the Alaskan coast by submarine doesn't hold much water either. Another poor choice may be the Tequila Triathlon in Topolobampo, Mexico. Well, maybe a few people would be interested but it's not recommended.

One also has to figure out how they are going to get to their destination. Flying is fast and expensive. Buses are slow, reasonably priced but sometimes boring. Driving may be the best way, especially if you are traveling with friends. The argument over who is to drive may be settled simply by assigning the duty to the person with the biggest vehicle. For long trips, the criteria may be changed to the person with the fastest vehicle.

A crucial factor which determines the length and quality of any spring break adventure is one's monetary quantity. Money comes somewhat hard for me, thus I am usually forced to sell my textbooks, beg from my parents and mortgage the dog. Pawn shops this time of year seem to get an oversupply of desk lamps, party favors and calculators.

If you're a smooth talker, you can sometimes talk your parents into financing the entire trip. This is usually only accomplished if you can convince them that you will get some educational value out of the trip such as visiting a museum or art gallery. Deep inside, though, you know the only art you will see is the pictures hanging in the lounge of the ski lodge.

Since the major expense is renting a place to stay, choosing one is a challenge in itself. Low cost is the major consideration; a hot tub is the next. Renting a small place, drawing straws for the one bed and having everyone else use sleeping bags is one way to lower the cost. Crashing on the beach or in a van is a way to eliminate the cost. Unfortunately, the ski buff doesn't have the second option.

I have always loved to travel, but one hesitation I have is packing for the affair. I can usually be seen doing almost anything to avoid sitting down, figuring out what I need and stuffing it in a suitcase. If there's a phobia attached to packing, I have it. By the time I finish packing, I need a vacation.

Filling the suitcase right before I go often causes me to forget my shaving kit or dress shoes. However, the packing of a suitcase too far in advance may lead to the carrying of unnecessary items such as clock radios or three times the number of underwear needed to make it a safe trip. I usually wind up with more shirts and Band-Aids than needed but come out short on the jeans and socks.

Everyone has a unique way of packing their luggage. Some pack a lot, some a little. Gender may sometimes play a role in a person's technique as well as personality. Stereotypes often depict women as heavier packers, but this is not always the case. I hitched a ride with a male friend who was going my way over spring break. I had packed what I believed to be a modest bag of clothes along with a pair of boots and a backpack. I scarcely had room in the car after the man had finished transferring his total volume of belongings from room to vehicle. This guy had everything in the car: radio, tapes, textbooks, shelves, clothes and even a trash basket. It was like moving to school again.

What to bring is a major question. There's little use in bringing textbooks; save that space for something else. Always throw in more towels than you need. Have so many that you say, "I can't believe I'm packing this many towels." Take one less sweater. You'll never wear it; why bring it?

The ride back to school is usually not as exciting as the original partaking in the quest. Your reluctancy to return home is only interrupted by periodic doses of sleep. Often, people try to study, but it is usually a feeble attempt at best. The worries of the paper that did not get written or the exam on Monday begin to block out the fond memories of your trip.

I'm looking forward to a fun spring break this year. But unfortunately, I already have a list of things to do over break. The list isn't finished and it already far exceeds both my motivation and ability. Who knows? Maybe this will be the year I get something done over break.

Well, I guess I do know.

Letters

Interest in Senate

Editor,

Re: Steve Milligan's letter "SGA Bureaucrats" in Tuesday's Collegian responding to Pat Muir's column "Involvement: Students can make difference."

If you found yourself shaking your head in agreement with Milligan, then it tells me one thing — that you do have some interest in student government.

To be quite frank, it is too easy to just agree with the attack made on your student leaders. If this is something that concerns you, at least enough to complain about it, then do something about it.

Applications for at large members and chairpersons for the five Senate standing committees are available in the SGS office, Union ground floor. In fact, it specifically states in the SGA bylaws that one of the responsibilities of the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee is to work on matters concerning student representation.

If you are unhappy with your student government, then do something about it. The applications are due Friday.

My applause goes out to both Muir and Milligan for generating some interest in your student government. They've been able to accomplish in just one week what we've been trying to do all along — get more students interested in the workings of student government.

Golden tans not so 'healthy'

Booths promote skin disease

By The Collegian Staff

As spring break approaches, many students prepare for trips to the beaches of Florida, California, Texas and other sunny spots by tanning themselves through artificial means.

While a tan may seem essential to some, students should recognize the potential hazards associated with exposure to artificial light, said Dr. Robert Ecklund, assistant student health physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

"The ill effect of ultraviolet light exposure has two categories; the short-term exposure — sunburn, and the long-term exposure, which is an area of chief medical concern — ultraviolet light exposure," Ecklund said. "The long-term exposure causes premature aging, thinning and wrinkling of the skin."

Other long-term effects include actinic keratosis, a precancerous crusty growth on the skin; basal carcinoma, a slowly progressive erosive process in which the skin is eaten away; and malignant melanoma, a "deadly aggressive form of cancer," Ecklund said.

"Malignant melanoma has increased tenfold in America since 1930, increasing from a lifetime incidence of one in every 1,500 people to one in every 150 people today," Ecklund said. "Malignant melanoma demonstrates the second most rapidly increasing rate of occurrence among cancers — second only to cancer of the lung in the female.

"We do not recommend artificial sunlight exposure," Ecklund said. "A dermatologist summed it all up when he said, 'you cannot tan without damaging the skin.'"

"We have a warning sign on the tanning booths warning customers about malignant melanoma and eye injuries if goggles are not worn during tanning," said Linda Collins, owner and manager of New Beginnings, 1107 N. Third St.

"We have a booth that you stand in. It has 40 bulbs, and light is reflected from the floor, the door and on the walls," Collins said.

"We use (ultraviolet alpha rays) lamps," she said. "They are recommended in these type booths to be 'safer than the sun itself.' They produce only 2.3 percent of (ultraviolet beta) rays."

"The main concern I have is that parlors used to use the UVB lights, but they have switched to UVA, saying to their clients that they are safer than UVB," Ecklund said.

"This is true as far as protecting from short-term damages, but UVA lights are no safer than UVB light as far as protecting from long-term and potentially very hazardous effects of ultraviolet light exposure," Ecklund said.

Another concern with tanning beds is the spread of disease.

"A personal concern of mine is that there is a big possibility that disease or infection could result from tanning beds," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center. "The majority of the people who tan are naked, and the care that is taken between clients could be questionable.

"If someone has an open sore that gets infected, they might not correlate that to the use of a tanning bed," Burke said. "Tanning beds are a warm, moist place, and it is a fantastic place to harbor bacteria and infection."

Mar Y Sol, 1214 Moro St., uses a disinfectant cleaner to clean tanning beds, said Bruce Slimmer, manager of Mar Y Sol.

"We use a disinfectant acrylic cleaner which we spray over the Plexiglas and wipe up with a cloth or paper towel," Slimmer said.

Ecklund said the desire for Caucasian females is to be darker.

"Medically they would be better off if the societal trend would move away from this societal 'healthy' look."

As an alternative to the tanning beds, Ecklund said he suggests tanning tablets containing beta carotene. The tablets temporarily pigment skin a yellowish tone.

Another alternative is the use of artificial tanning lotion which leaves a temporary pigment on the skin.

Blood drive falls short of campus goal

By The Collegian Staff

In this spring's blood drive in the Union, the Red Cross Bloodmobile collected an unofficial count of 1,337 units of blood — 63 units short of its goal — said Phyliss Hammond, Bloodmobile chairwoman.

The Bloodmobile was in Manhattan Feb. 24-27.

The blood drive came closer to the goal of 1,400 units, set by the Wichita Red Cross, than the Bloodmobile drive last spring when 1,254 units were collected, she said.

Campus housing groups competed to get the most people to donate blood and time to last week's blood drive.

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity had the highest percentage of its members participate, while Goodnow Hall had the largest number of members participating in the residence halls.

The Bloodmobile usually collects fewer units in the spring than in the fall drives. People are usually not sick as often in the fall as in the spring, while in the spring they usually feel busier and the weather conditions are worse, said Charlene Nichols, junior in journalism and mass communications and student co-chairman for the Bloodmobile. Nichols is a member of Circle K, which has sponsored the Bloodmobile since 1964.

Last fall the Bloodmobile collected 1,594 units, which was 194 units over the goal. The biggest year was the fall of 1983 when 1,700 units were collected, she said.

The next Bloodmobile is slated for October 27-30.

Ag college increases telefund total

Alumni from the College of Agriculture pledged nearly $6,000 more than last year's total in the college's recent telefund. The college raised $68,125 with 2,512 pledges recorded. Telefund is a phone-a-thon organized by the KSU Foundation utilizing student and faculty volunteers from the different colleges within the University.

The College of Agriculture directs 50 percent of the money raised by the telefund to scholarships for new and current students, 40 percent to special projects and 10 percent to educational and development programs for students and faculty.

Scholars to participate in exchange

Three professors have been chosen to participate in the 1987-88 Mid-America State Universities Association Honor Lecturer Program.

The professors selected are Burton Kaufman, professor of history, Horst Leipold, professor of pathology in veterinary medicine, and Richard Marzolf, professor of biology.

MASUA is an organization of 14 state universities that cooperate in a scholar exchange between the schools. Each professor participating in the program is involved in a circuit seminar and can be invited by any of the participating colleges to speak.

Alumni endow $500 scholarship

The John O. and Madeline B. Miller Scholarship, an endowment fund to benefit students in the colleges of Agriculture and Education, has been established at K-State.

The scholarship, which provides a $500 award to each college, is funded by John and Madeline Miller of Topeka. John Miller is a 1934 K-State graduate in agronomy, and his wife, Madeline, is a 1940 K-State graduate in music education.

The scholarship awards are available to juniors and seniors with established financial need and a grade point average of 2.5 or better.

Senior greeks gain posts as national house representatives

By BRUCE DOLSBERRY
Collegian Reporter

Four K-State seniors have been selected to be chapter consultants for their fraternity and sorority national chapters.

"It's very unusual for K-State or any other college to have four students selected to be chapter consultants," said Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser.

At least one K-State student has been selected every year in this position for the past 12 years, Robel said. Last year three students were selected from K-State.

"We have a very strong greek program," she said.

"To my knowledge, I'm the first to be selected from our chapter at K-State," said Lisa Goering, senior in biology, who will be a consultant for Alpha Xi Delta. Goering and the other consultants will attend training sessions beginning in June.

"Five chapter consultants were chosen nationwide," she said. "I'm really looking forward to the experience; I'll be doing a lot of traveling, spending only three or four days at each chapter in the region I'm assigned."

Having four people selected to be chapter consultants is an honor for the greek system at K-State, said Doug Scheibe, senior in journalism and mass communications of Sigma Phi Epsilon and one of the four selected.

Being selected a chapter consultant is not an easy task. Of the 14,000 Sig Eps nationwide, only 11 have the opportunity to be a consultant, Scheibe said.

About 100 applications are accepted by the committee that considers prospective consultants. Past experiences and achievements are the qualities most important in being selected for the position, Scheibe said.

Role playing, meeting with undergraduates and university officials, public speaking, counseling and a lot of traveling are some of the duties of a consultant, said Mike Riley, senior in political science, who will be a consultant for Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

For Sig Ep candidates, training starts on June 21 in Richmond, Va., and lasts until mid-August, Scheibe said. In August, the national chapter assigns individuals a region that consists of 25-30 chapters. Scheibe said he will be assigned to the region that includes Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

"They assign regions based on our personality and what they think the chapters in that region need. There are 11 regions around the nation for the Sig Eps," Scheibe said.

"Kappa Alpha Theta has a different training system," said Sherri Caster, senior in pre-physical therapy, who will be a Theta consultant. "We have homework assignments that prepare us to become consultants throughout this semester. We have a 10-day workshop at our national headquarters in Indiana in June and then are assigned a region."

The position will last one year for all four students. After the year is up, they can apply for another position with the chapter.

"It's a great opportunity," Caster said. "I'm really looking forward to meeting new people and traveling."

Union gallery displays best entries from annual photography contest

By The Collegian Staff

Winning entries from the 12th annual Union Program Council Photography Contest are now on display in the Union Art Gallery.

Ron Grotenhuis, junior in architecture, won best in show for his entry titled "Raise" in the amateur buildings and structures division.

The 10 categories attracted 130 entries from students, faculty and staff. Entrants could also compete in more than one division, said Marilyn Woodward, adviser to the UPC arts committee.

All divisions had entries except the amateur life at K-State. Woodward said she was disappointed that no one had entered this category.

Winners received $15 for first place, $5 for second place, and $30 for best in the show. Honorable mentions were also given to some in each category.

The three judges decide individually, judging the photos on a scale of one to 10 points, she said. Photos were rated on technical quality, visual design and originality.

Woodward said she was "fairly pleased" with the entries and that the pictures are "always of pretty high standards."

The number of contest entries was consistent with the average of past competitions, Woodward said.

The catagories were: professional black and white; professional color; amateur buildings and structures; amateur landscape; amateur flowers and plants; amateur animals; amateur people; amateur still life and interiors; amateur sports/news related photography; and amateur life at K-State.

Winning photographs will be on display through April 3.

Lady Cats lose to Northwestern in overtime

Associated Press

K-State guard Susan Green tries to drive around Northwestern University's Anne Marie McNamee during the first half of the NCAA tournament game Wednesday in Evanston, Ill. The Lady Cats lost to the Wildcats in overtime, 62-61, to end the season at 22-9.

By DARAN NEUSCHAFER
Sports Writer

The K-State Lady Cats' trip to the NCAA postseason tournament ended rather abruptly last night, but not after K-State tried to get its money's worth before losing to Northwestern, 62-61, in overtime in Evanston, Ill.

The Lady Cats, making their fourth appearance in the NCAA tournament and first under head coach Matilda Mossman, fought back hard in the second half to force the overtime.

But Northwestern's Laura Arnold sank a free throw with five seconds remaining to give the Wildcats the win and move them into Saturday night's second round against Louisiana Tech.

"It was a great game between two very good basketball teams," Mossman said. "It was not a great offensive showing by either team, but each team did what they had to do defensively to win the game."

K-State did not score in the overtime period until senior guard Susan Green canned a 10-footer with 2:10 left to pull the Lady Cats back to within one, 60-59. Sue Leiding then gave K-State its first and only lead of the game at the 1:50 mark when she made two free throws to put K-State up, 61-60.

Green fouled Northwestern forward Joanne Polombo in the act of shooting with 1:09 left. Polombo missed the first free throw but made the second to knot the score again.

After calling timeout with 21 seconds remaining, K-State got the ball inside to Leiding who missed a six-footer. Green got the rebound and put up another shot which also did not fall. Then Green, who scored a game-high 23 points, was whistled for an intentional foul while going for the loose ball with five seconds left to send Arnold to the line.

"We played extremely tough basketball," said Lady Cat assistant coach Teri Lasswell. "It is a tough way to lose. Right now you feel like you don't know whether the sun will come up tomorrow or not."

The Lady Cats were hindered by both cold shooting and Northwestern's quickness in the first half. After a 20-minute delay at the outset of the game due to difficulties with the game clock, Northwestern scored the first six points of the contest.

K-State shot only 33 percent from the field in the first half, something Lasswell said had to do with the delay.

"We never got into the flow in the early going," Lasswell said. "It (the delay) made it a deal where we had to keep trying to get ready to play over and over."

Senior guard Theza Fitzpatrick got things going for K-State as she scored the Lady Cats' first five points. But still, midway through the first half, K-State found itself down 14-5, as both teams were having trouble holding on to the ball.

Northwestern then got its fast-break offense in gear with some long passes down court which were converted to easy layups. It used its transition game to maintain the lead, but Green kept K-State in the game as she scored the Lady Cats final seven points of the half.

K-State trailed 32-22 at the intermission, but went on an 18-8 run in the first 10 minutes of the second stanza to knot the score at 40-40.

Northwestern came right back, however, with some deadly long-range shooting provided mainly by Anne Marie McNamee, who scored 14 points for the Wildcats. The Wildcats built their lead back to six, 50-44, but Green again brought the Lady Cats back as she scored eight of K-State's last 10 points of the game.

Green's layup with 33 seconds remaining after going coast-to-coast pulled K-State into a 57-57 tie and sent the game into overtime.

Bulldogs look to beat K-State in first round

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

The University of Georgia men's basketball team has been tough on teams from Kansas in recent NCAA tournament play.

In the Bulldogs' last visit to the NCAA in 1985, Georgia dumped Wichita State, 67-59, in a first-round, East regional game before losing to Illinois in a second-round clash.

Now it is K-State's turn to defend the Sunflower State's honor.

The Wildcats will make their first appearance in the prestigious 64-team field in four years today against Georgia in Salt Lake City.

K-State is seeded ninth in the 16-team West regional while Georgia is at No. 8. Tipoff for the opening-round game is 1:07 p.m. (CST). The game will be televised by WIBW (Manhattan cable channel 3) and broadcast on the Wildcats' Radio Network.

Georgia, 18-11 and 10-8 in Southeastern Conference play, is coached by Hugh Durham. Durham has led the 'Dawgs to seven consecutive postseason tournament appearances, including a Final Four showing in 1983.

"Georgia is a good basketball team," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "They tied for third in their conference, they beat Louisiana State twice and Kentucky twice, so obviously they are good."

Kruger said Georgia's loss of three players — one because of injury and two due to grade problems — forced Georgia to change their traditional style of up-tempo, pressure basketball.

"They are primarily a zone team," he said. "They like to slow things down and play a half-court game. It's very tough to get away from teams like that. The game will probably go down to the wire, like most of our games have."

K-State has had many close calls this season. The Wildcats' 19-10 record features 14 games decided by five points or less. In the last four games of the season, the 'Cats went 2-2, with eight points separating them from going 4-0.

Kruger remains optimistic about his team, despite criticisms that "the 'Cats can't win the big ones" abound.

"We're playing our best basketball of the year right now," he said. "Our play against Nebraska (in the Big Eight Conference postseason tournament) was not as bad as people think. Nebraska's a good team, and we didn't shoot the ball well.

"Winning that ballgame, I think, got us the NCAA bid. The players (K-State) were aware of this, and it may have affected their play."

'Do or die' situation faces 'Cats

By JENNY CHAULK

Twelve men gathered in K-State's basketball locker room Sunday afternoon to watch, wait and possibly even pray.

The Wildcat basketball team was hoping to see its name appear on the TV screen, confirming an invitation to the 64-team, NCAA postseason men's basketball tournament.

K-State's last appearance in the NCAA tournament — or any postseason action besides the Big Eight Conference tournament — was in 1982.

Finally, after three 16-team regionals and 50 selections had been announced, the West Regional bracket appeared on the screen with K-State listed as the ninth seed going against No. 8 Georgia in Salt Lake City.

"We were in the locker room watching and waiting," junior center Ron Meyer said. "Once it came on, we were all jumping around."

"I jumped out of my chair," senior forward Percy Eddie said. "This was one of our main goals. It means a lot."

"It was a big emotional feeling," said junior forward Norris Coleman, K-State's leading scorer. "We got scared because we were in the last 14 teams named, and we'd seen some surprise teams get in earlier."

Mild winter weather aids Wildcat rowing crew

By CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

Going in a straight line for 2000-meters (35 feet less than 1 1/4 miles) sounds easy enough. How about rowing a boat for the same distance on Tuttle Creek during a windy day? Not quite so easy. But the K-State crew does it five (sometimes six) days a week.

If you saw the movie "Oxford Blues," you probably remember seeing actor Rob Lowe rowing the rivers of England as part of the eight-man Oxford crew.

Rowing may seem to be as distant to the people of Kansas as across the Atlantic Ocean. But it's not.

The K-State collegiate crew is preparing to open its 24th season in good shape.

The crew begins the season March 21 at the Heart of Texas Regatta in Austin. Eighteen teams are scheduled to compete in the 1300-meter races.

Last year the crew placed third overall. Kansas took top honors last year in overall competition.

"KU had a good team last year but they don't have the will power this year and I think we can beat them," said K-State crew Vice President Aaron Rice.

"If we row the fastest team that we have, I think we'll do well this spring," he added.

"This year Kansas State is a little bit better off in this earlier season because we've been able to row practically every night we've wanted," said K-State Coach Don Rose. "It's been great this spring in that the winds have been down and the ice went off the lake early.

"A lot of years the high wind we have up on (Tuttle Creek) makes it tough for Kansas State to get good workouts," he added. "Because when it's to windy the waves are too big and swamp the boats. Therefore, we can't get out on the main lake. It does handicap us some times."

The biggest handicap though is that the crew doesn't have any indoor facilities — dryland rowing machines, tanks, or weightlifting machines, he said.

"If we had that, it wouldn't be so bad when we have these high winds. We don't have hardly any facilities for those things here," he added.

Even though rowing is the oldest collegiate sport in America and K-State has had a rowing crew since 1964, the University does not fund the program. The majority of the funds each year come from donations by alumni and other interested people.

The lack of University support hasn't deterred Rose though.

"In a way it's kind of fun to struggle against the odds and make a go of it," said Rose. "There's just enough guts in me and so forth that say 'I'm going to think about it and well that's not the last word.'"

Rose got his first taste of rowing in college. At the University of Wisconsin he lettered in rowing and gymnastics. After graduation he was assigned to Fort Riley as part of his ROTC duties where he became interested in Kansas.

He coached the crews at

The K-State men's rowing crew practices Wednesday on Tuttle Creek Reservoir for the Heart of Texas Regatta next week in Austin, Texas. The men's and women's crew teams will compete in the week-long event which will end March 21. The teams have been practicing five to six days a week on Tuttle Creek in preparation for the spring rowing season.

players averaging in double figures. The Bulldogs' leading scorer is 6-foot-4 senior guard Dennis Williams, who nets 16 points per game. Willie Anderson, a 6-7 All-SEC junior guard, averages 15.2 points per game. Chad Kessler, a 6-8 senior forward, averages 11.9 points per game.

Kruger said containing Anderson is a vital key to defeating Georgia.

"They have an excellent player in Anderson," Kruger said. "He plays outside, but he likes to go down inside. To stop him, we have to play him straight up with our man defense and be very aware of him when he's in the game."

Kruger said Mitch Richmond will draw the defensive assignment against Anderson.

Georgia's other starters are Derrick Kirce, a 6-6 freshman forward averaging 4.3 points per game; and Eric Burdette, a 6-8 freshman center averaging 5.5 points per game.

"Georgia plays primarily six or seven people," Kruger said. "Our game plan will keep that in mind. We'll try to spread things out. They are conscious of trying to conserve energy and stay out of foul trouble. We like to play a lot of people, so we'll try to use this situation to our advantage."

Kruger said he will stick to the same starting lineup he's utilized in K-State's last three ballgames: Richmond, Charles Bledsoe, Steve Henson, Lance Simmons and Lynn Smith.

"We've gotten out of the gate well with this group," Kruger said.

Against Oklahoma, Nebraska and Missouri, the 'Cats took early 22-12, 7-0 and 11-3 leads, respectively.

"This group is playing with good awareness and alertness," he said. "They complement each other well."

Because Georgia's starting lineup is much taller than K-State — the 'Cat starters are outsized by 16 inches — Kruger said it wouldn't be unusual to see Richmond move to a shooting guard position early in the game, with Norris Coleman filling the forward slot.

averages, and that is something that did not happen tonight, but Susan Green did an excellent job of picking up the slack," Mossman said.

Green's 23 points sent her over the 1,000 career point mark. Green became the third Lady Cat this season to reach the 1,000 point plateau, as Leiding and Carlisa Thomas each went over the mark earlier in the season.

Leiding scored 10 points for the Lady Cats, while Fitzpatrick and Thomas each chipped in nine and eight points respectively.

Northwestern was led by Judy Banathy who scored 15 points, all in the second half. Stephanie Chambers added 10, and Arnold came off the bench to chip in nine points.

Princeton and then Columbia University for several years before returning to Kansas.

"We weren't back very long when Tuttle Creek lake was finished," Rose said. "I was returning to school...and I said 'Well, we got the lake, we got the water, let's have rowing. So we did."

And after 24 years, rowing and Rose are still around and going strong at K-State.

Last year, the K-State crew won the Big Eight championship race in Lawrence and repeated as winner of the Head of Des Moines River race last fall. They also won the Founders Day race against Washburn University. The crew placed sixth at the Midwest regional but decided not to go to the National Championship in Syracuse, N.Y.

The number of crews has expanded over the last several years. This year's team includes a men's varsity, junior varsity and two freshmen eight crews; women's varsity and freshmen eight crews. They are also sponsoring the new high school crews.

"There are seven different events," Rose said. There's an eight-man, four-man, and pair with a coxswain; four-man, pair, single and double skull races.

Another 'Cat player, freshman starting point guard Steve Henson, was more subdued.

"I wasn't really surprised," Henson said. "As soon as it came on, everybody started jumping around. I wasn't really expecting that. I knew we had a good enough team."

Henson's confidence in the 'Cats is indicative of how the 1986-87 edition of the K-State men's basketball has matured over the course of the season.

The squad boasts only two seniors — Eddy and Lynn Smith — and five members of the 12-member team are first-year K-Staters.

"It's been a challenge to get this group to believe in themselves," Coach Lon Kruger said. "Coming in, no one knew what they should expect of themselves. A few months ago, they didn't even know each other."

Kruger pulled the 'Cats together, and now they will make their 17th NCAA tournament appearance. The 'Cats and the University of Kansas are tied for the seventh-most appearances by any school in NCAA history.

Consequently, the 'Cats are undaunted by the fact that Georgia, their first-round opponent, is making its seventh straight postseason tournament appearance.

"It just comes down to who wants to win," Eddy said. "When we line up and go head to head, whoever plays the hardest will come out on top and what their team's done in the past has nothing to do with that."

"They don't have the players that got them to the Final Four in 1983," Mark Dobbins said. "When we get out there (to Salt Lake) it's a matter of who wants to get after it."

Meyer said the 'Cats felt somewhat assured they would get an NCAA bid after they beat Nebraska in the first round of the Big Eight tournament.

"We talked about it (going to the NCAA tournament) a lot," Meyer said. "I don't know if we'd have gotten in if we hadn't won that game.

"I don't have any idea how we'll react," he said. "There's a danger of being complacent now — they've done something that hasn't been done for a while. We want to win a basketball game, not just be satisfied with getting there."

"Not many teams get this opportunity," Smith said. "We really want to win because we know it's a do or die situation."

"Last year, we were sitting at home," Meyer said. "If you've ever played basketball, it's always been a dream to get into the NCAA tournament.

"Now we've got our chance," he added. "And no matter what we do in the tourney, we know we have the potential to be one of the top teams in the country."

Tuition

percentage of the institution's budget," Tallman said. "We think students are paying their fair share already."

If passed, the bill would probably go into effect in the fall of 1989, Tallman said, with a phase-in period lasting until 1993.

Scheduled tuition increases for fall of 1988 are 3 percent for resident students and 10 percent for non-resident students, Tallman said.

The only Regents institution that would not be subject to tuition increases under the bill is WSU, because students are already paying the 20 and 60 percent fee-cost ratios, he said.

"We want students to be aware of the impact of this bill," he said. "The bottom line is that students will be paying higher tuitions."

Another bill recommended by the committee would allow the Regents to set different admissions standards at each institution, Tallman said.

Currently, all admissions standards are the same at the Regents institutions, he said. Each institution has an open admissions policy which states that any graduate of a Kansas high school must be admitted at the freshman level.

If passed, the bill could allow some institutions to adopt closed admissions policies, he said.

"There's been a growing interest in that at KU," he said.

Senate rejects bill on open meetings

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A controversial proposal placing language in state law to make clear that government officials could travel and socialize without violating the Open Meetings Act was rejected Wednesday by the Kansas Senate.

Only 13 senators voted in favor, while 27 opposed the bill.

Immediately after the vote, the Senate placed the bill back on its debate agenda with the intention of closing what some said was a huge loophole that essentially destroyed the Open Meetings Act.

However, rather than continue to debate the issue, the Senate decided to send the bill back to its Federal and State Affairs Committee for further work.

Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, the committee chairman, said his panel would meet Thursday and strip the disputed language from the bill. In its original form, the bill permitted government bodies to meet in private sessions when discussing sensitive topics related to security of public buildings, public officers and employees.

Presently, the Open Meetings Act is silent on whether a majority of a quorum of a public body can meet socially and travel together. Attorney General Robert T. Stephan held in a legal opinion three years ago that they can do that under the law. An attorney general's opinion is not law in Kansas, but a guide for officials until it is tested in court.

Some public officials want specific language written into the Open Meetings law to be certain they are not violating the law if they meet socially or travel together.

The proposed amendment to the law would not have prohibited discussion of official business. It only said public officials could not transact business or take binding action.

Before putting the bill back in committee, the Senate debated whether members of the Legislature, city and county commissions and school boards should discuss public business in private.

Sen. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, said it was "asinine" to expect county commissioners and school board members not to talk about issues on their agenda in private.

"The people really don't care what we've said," Frey said. "What the people care about is how we vote. That's why we record our votes up here. They don't want to know everything we say, thank God."

Frey said the Legislature should pass the bill as it was written, despite complaints from journalists and others, including the League of Women Voters of Kansas, who said the measure would allow, if not encourage, public officials to circumvent the open meetings law by discussing public matters at social functions or while traveling together.

"I don't like to get in arguments with people who buy ink in 50-gallon drums because you can't win," Frey said. "But up here sometimes you've got to do what's right and this ain't right."

Sen. James Francisco, D-Mulvane, also thought the bill was fine and objected to the Senate being intimidated by journalists.

He went on to accuse Republicans in the Legislature of violating the Open Meetings Act each time those lawmakers in leadership positions, such as committee chairmen, meet to discuss strategy and which bills to debate.

Senate to vote on KSDB fee

By MICHAEL MORRIS
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate tonight will vote on whether KSDB-FM will receive a separate student fee line item.

If approved, the fee would be 85 cents for full-time students, and 50 cents for part-time students.

Mike Riley, senior in political science and co-sponsor of the bill, said the fee would create needed funds for the radio station because KSDB-FM is not allowed to sell advertising and must rely on donations and student monies in order to operate.

"KSDB needs these funds in order to remain a quality University radio station," Riley said.

Shelly Wakeman, junior in political science and co-sponsor of the bill, said the radio station has tried many fund-raising methods, and the line item is the station's only way to be properly funded.

"Student Senate has been great in their past allocations, however, there is only so much to go around in the activity fee," Wakeman said. "By creating a fee line item, KSDB-FM will get its needed funds that the student activity fee couldn't give," Wakeman said.

In addition, Senate will also vote on a resolution of opposition to security surveillance by the University.

If passed, the resolution would request the University to adopt a written policy concerning the surveillance of activities by students, employees and guests.

The resolution will also request that any existing records held by the Department of Public Safety be destroyed, unless these materials are needed in criminal cases.

In other action, Senate will hear a bill that would establish a representation enhancement ad hoc committee.

The bill states the ad hoc committee would examine the current representation of the student body and research any changes that could be beneficial.

The bill also states the committee will be composed of 12 members: three students from the residence halls, three greek-affiliated students, and six off-campus students.

Senate will also discuss a bill revising the bylaws and the rules and regulations of the Lafene Student Health advisory committee.

One of the revisions would change the committee size from nine members to 10.

The bill would also revise the number of faculty members on the committee from one to two.

Senate will vote on the revisions bill and the representation enhancement ad hoc committee bill during its next meeting.

Four New Jersey teens commit group suicide

By The Associated Press

BERGENFIELD, N.J. — Four teen-agers locked themselves in a car and committed suicide by apparent carbon monoxide poisoning Wednesday, after writing a note on a brown paper bag asking to be buried together, authorities said.

Mayor Charles O'Dowd urged other youngsters who might be thinking about suicide to seek help, while the mother of one of the victims said young people in the community had formed a death pact and were "dying one after another."

The bodies of the two females and two males, ages 17 to 19, were found in a locked car in an apartment complex garage about 6:30 a.m. after a passer-by heard the car's motor running and called police, said Bergen County Prosecutor Larry McClure.

The four — Thomas Rizzo, 19, Thomas Olton, 19, and sisters Lisa and Cheryl Burress, ages 17 and 18 — were pronounced dead at the scene, he said.

The suicides followed the deaths last year of four youths in this middle-class community of 25,500 located about six miles west of New York City. McClure said the four who killed themselves Wednesday may have known the other youths, whose deaths McClure described as "incidents that may have been suicides and...were related to drug and-or alcohol consumption."

Rizzo's mother, who refused to give her first name, said one of last year's deaths involved her son's best friend, Joe Major, who fell from a cliff overlooking the Hudson River and that Rizzo saw it happen. Rizzo's mother described the death as a suicide.

"They have a pact going on here in Bergenfield and they are dying one after another," she said.

"We're very concerned that there is a possibility of a contagion effect," said James Cooney, director of the Bergen Regional Counseling Center. "We're concerned that other students who are upset and concerned about these events know who to talk to."

A friend of the youths, 17-year-old Linda Figueroa, said the four appeared to be preoccupied with suicide.

Contras

May.

Previously given partial immunity were North's secretary, Fawn Hall; Robert Dutton, a retired Air Force colonel; and Edward De Garay, head of a firm that hired cargo handler Eugene Hasenfus, whose plane carrying weapons intended for the Contras was shot down over Nicaragua last October.

Wednesday's maneuvering occurred while the Democratic-controlled House was voting, 230-to-196, to freeze $40 million in Contra aid for six months until millions of dollars in allegedly missing money is accounted for.

If the Senate passes the legislation, too, a presidential veto is certain.

At the White House, meanwhile, Reagan pretended to have laryngitis when asked his feelings about the aid vote and about a poll showing that many Americans are skeptical about his explanation of the Iran-Contra affair.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters later that Reagan had "a remarkable recovery of his voice right after you'd left."

A new ABC-Washington Post poll, conducted through Monday, said 53 percent of Americans think Reagan is not telling the truth about the affair.

Aid

As the debate began, Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., leader of the House Democratic task force on Contra aid, said a moratorium was essential because, of the money previously provided the Contras, "tens of millions and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars cannot be accounted for."

But Contra aid supporters said the moratorium proposal was aimed at embarrassing Reagan and giving the Soviet Union a victory on the mainland of the Western Hemisphere.

"I do not want to be recorded as contributing to handing Central America over to the Soviets," said Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Many Republicans acknowlege that the disclosures of the Iran-Contra affair have soured the atmosphere in Congress and eroded support for Contra aid.

Governor's signature paves way for lottery

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden signed a bill Wednesday that establishes a state-owned lottery, clearing the way for it to go on the Kansas statute books next Thursday when it appears in the official state legal publication.

"I personally supported the lottery and last year voted to submit it to the voters," said Hayden, who was speaker of the House in 1986. "I am proud of the way the Legislature has come to grips with this complex issue to present me a bill."

Hayden signed the measure as legislative leaders looked on. Afterward, Hayden said he expects the first $1 instant-win tickets will go on sale in September or October but the gambling games probably would not generate as much revenue during the first year of operation as had been anticipated earlier.

At best, Hayden said the state could expect to receive only about 40 percent of the $35 million Department of Revenue officials had said the lottery would generate during its first year of operation.

The reduced revenues would be the result of having to go three or four months of the next state operating year before the lottery would begin operations, the Republican governor said. Revenue officials say September is as early as the lottery could be started.

"I appreciate the cooperation," Hayden told Senate President Robert V. Talkington and House Speaker Jim Braden after he signed the bill. "We finally got 'er done."

The governor presented the pens he used to sign the bill to the chairmen of the committees that reviewed the lottery legislation, Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, and Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth.

"This implementation bill is designed to give Kansas much needed resources to address the problems of prison overcrowding, property tax relief, offsetting the cost of reappraisal and financing economic development initiatives," Hayden said.

The lottery measure was the first of three bills under consideration in the Legislature this year to implement constitutional amendments voters approved in the November general election.

A bill that would legalize public liquor by the drink has cleared the Senate and now awaits action on the floor of the House. A proposal that would legalize trackside gambling on horse and dog races has passed the House but is stalled in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

Hayden said he hopes to announce appointments by next month of the five members of the newly created Kansas Lottery Commission. The governor said by making the appointments quickly, the Senate may have time to confirm the the lottery board members this year.

The bill establishes a new state agency called "Kansas Lottery," which would create about 120 new state jobs. Officials estimate between 1,600 and 2,000 retail outlets will handle ticket sales and more sophisticated computerized games could begin as early as nine months after the lottery start up.

Soviets make 2nd nuclear weapons test

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union detonated an underground nuclear explosion Thursday, the second test in the two weeks since the Kremlin ended a 19-month halt in nuclear weapons testing.

At the same time, a Kremlin spokesman rejected as "speculations and outright lies" American charges of Soviet cheating on arms accords.

But the spokesman, Boris D. Pyadyshev, expressed optimism that the superpowers could soon agree to rid Europe of their medium-range missiles. He said Soviet envoys to the Geneva arms talks had been told "to work for agreement in the shortest time possible."

The underground nuclear explosion in Soviet Kazakhstan was the second since Feb. 26 when the Kremlin ended the test moratorium that had been a centerpiece of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's foreign policy.

Soviet officials urged the United States to halt testing and have asserted that the American refusal to make the test freeze mutual forced the Kremlin to resume testing.

The unilateral Soviet moratorium was announced Aug. 6, 1985, the 40th anniversary of the U.S. atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan. Before the February resumption, the last Soviet blast had been recorded on July 25, 1985.

The Tass news agency said that at 5 a.m. Moscow time at the Semipalatinsk test range, a nuclear device was detonated with a yield of "up to 20 kilotons," the force of the U.S. atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

Tass said the blast at the site 1,700 miles southeast of Moscow had been conducted "with a view to upgrading military technology," but the news agency provided no further details.

"The Soviet Union had to interrupt its moratorium," Pyadyshev told a news briefing at the Soviet Foreign Ministry following the test.

Pyadyshev declined to elaborate on the purposes of the explosion, referring reporters to the Tass announcement.

He used the briefing to attack a U.S. report on the Soviet Union's observance of arms accords submitted by President Reagan to Congress on Tuesday.

"It is full of speculations and outright lies about the Soviet Union's actions," Pyadyshev said. "It might have been taken from a comic strip."

Senate creates line item for KSDB

By MICHAEL MORRIS
Collegian Reporter

After much debate Thursday night, Student Senate approved creation of a special fee for KSDB-FM.

The fee will be 85 cents for full-time students and 50 cents for part-time students, beginning with the 1987 fall semester.

Shelly Wakeman, junior in pre-law and co-sponsor of the bill, said the fee was created because money allocated from the student activity fee was not enough to cover the radio station's budget.

"Student Senate made a decision tonight that showed a lot of foresight allowing for the KSDB-FM fee," said Mike Riley, senior in political science and co-sponsor the bill.

During the debate, an amendment to the bill was introduced to delete the current KSDB-FM allocation from the student activity fee before the special fee was created. However, the amendment failed.

Doug Folk, junior in electrical engineering, said the amendment was necessary because creating a fee for KSDB-FM and leaving the radio station as part of the activity fee Senate in effect is raising the activity fee.

Jeff Wing, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, said by approving the KSDB-FM line item without the amendment, Senate raised the activity fee 40 cents.

However, Doug Leming, senior in pre-professional business administration, said the bill without the amendment allows Senate to give KSDB-FM what they need, while helping other groups with their budgets.

Senate also approved a resolution opposing security surveillance by the University in activities by students, employees and guests.

The resolution also requested that any existing records held by the Department of Public Safety be destroyed, unless they are needed in criminal cases.

In other action, Senate questioned Eirene Tatham, senior in construction science, on a bill which would create an ad hoc committee to examine the current student body representation.

Tatham said the committee is necessary because there is student concern about how they are being represented in Student Governing Association.

Provost nominee stresses faculty retention, student quality

Former K-Stater returns to seek administrative position

By BECKY HOWARD
Staff Writer

A former K-State faculty member and candidate for University provost stressed improving faculty retention and the quality of the student curriculum Thursday in an open forum in the Union.

J.L. Ozbun, dean of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics at Washington State University, said he was delighted to be back on campus and expressed his interest in the provost position. Ozbun was associate dean of agriculture and assistant director of research at K-State from 1981-82.

Recruitment and retention of faculty is something the University needs to work harder on, Ozbun said.

"We must recruit excellent faculty and retain the excellent faculty already here. There must be a commitment from that faculty to the state of Kansas, and commitment from the state to the faculty," he said.

One important way to achieve this is to let the state — the Legislature and the people — know what's going on at the University, Ozbun explained.

"The state is concerned with their resources, but we will never solve the problem of getting funding for faculty, research and programs if we don't learn to communicate," he said. "We can do this by making a tour of the state annually with new faculty to let the state know what kind of people we have here and promote an interaction between the citizens and the University. We need to let them know what's going on here."

Decisions involving promotion and tenure are also essential in faculty retention, and the provost needs to provide strong leadership to help in these areas, he said.

Ozbun also expressed his concern about student quality at the University.

"K-State has an excellent student body with being an open-door institution. But I'm more concerned about the product we're turning out than the product that is coming in."

Student quality is being affected by the overemphasis on specialization in academic programs, he said.

"We need to develop a core curriculum which emphasizes a total perspective," he said. "Faculty need to develop an international or world perspective and pass it on to the students.

"This is important because today's society is changing so rapidly, graduates need to be ready for the process of lifelong learning."

Ozbun described his administrative style as one which is straightforward, open and encourages decentralization.

"I think decisions should be made at all levels of a university, not just with the president and the provost."

"My wife and I enjoyed the community while we were here. The faculty at K-State is excellent and very committed," he said. "The provost position would give me an opportunity to work with these faculty even more than when I was here before."

Ozbun said he was also interested in the position because he felt it was time for him to move on to new opportunities and the provost position would be the logical next step.

"I've been looking at the position here at the University, and I can see a lot of new happenings here — the major one being a new president," he said.

"(President) Jon Wefald has new visions placing heavy emphasis on excellence for this institution. I see the provost as providing the linkage between the president's visions, which are on a broad scale, and the faculty, who will carry out the visions."

Earthquakes may have killed 2,000

QUITO, Ecuador — As many as 2,000 people may have been killed in northern Ecuador in a wave of earthquakes that caused flooding and deadly mud slides last week, a high provincial official said Thursday.

Prefect Jorge Gonzalez, chief administrator of Napo Province, said he based his estimate on aerial inspection of the area. He reported several villages completely wiped out when torrents of mud and water crashed through streets, splintering homes and entombing people in mud as high as rooftops.

The International Red Cross has said 300 people were killed and 4,000 are missing. But Gonzalez maintained at a Thursday news conference that about 5,000 people were unaccounted for.

The national government has not released an official death toll. It says 75,000 people have been driven from their homes.

The 10 earthquakes rumbled along the nation's 2-mile-high Andean spine a week ago, affecting an area from the Colombian border to Riobamba, 95 miles south of Quito. The hardest-hit area was a 640-square-mile zone surrounding the volcano El Reventador, 40 miles northeast of Quito. The region is home to about 100,000 people, Gonzalez told reporters.

S. Africans protest mass jailings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Blacks and whites joined in rallies and lighted candles Thursday for the thousands of people jailed without charge under South Africa's 9-month-old state of emergency.

The Rev. Beyers Naude, an Afrikaner who broke with the mainstream of the dominant white ethnic group over apartheid, told the largest gathering on National Detainees Day:

"We call for our country to be free of dictatorship and tyranny. As long as one child remains in prison and detained, our country remains in shackles."

"Don't remain silent any longer!" he appealed to other Afrikaners. "Stand up and be counted!"

People in the audience of about 800, which included many prominent anti-apartheid activists, raised cheers and fists in response. A hall at Johannesburg's Central Methodist Church was packed to hear Naude, who is general secretary of the South African Council of Churches.

After the rally, about 60 blacks from the audience jogged along a downtown sidewalk singing freedom songs. They were turned back by tear gas and followed through side streets during an operation that cannot be fully described because of restrictions on reporting security-force actions.

Soviets report prostitute 'dynasty'

MOSCOW — Soviet police have a list of 3,500 Moscow prostitutes aged 14 to 70, including three-generation prostitution "dynasties," but officials are virtually powerless to stop the sale of sex, a newspaper said Thursday.

The article in Sovietskaya Rossiya is part of a recent campaign in the Soviet press for laws against prostitution, which officials once maintained was a "capitalist vice."

The report, which filled a half-page of the newspaper, was one of the longest and most detailed on prostitution to appear in the Soviet press. Authorities and previous reports in the official media have concentrated on criticizing prostitutes who earn hard currency from foreigners.

"Prostitution must be criminally punishable," the newspaper said. "The moral degradation is great. In our country this ugly phenomenon must not stay beyond the law."

Scientists discover 'largest' galaxy

WASHINGTON — Astronomers peering past clouds of gas and the glare of starlight say they have discovered the largest known galaxy, a giant spiral of stars 13 times as big as the Milky Way.

The galaxy, located 300 million light-years from Earth in the direction of the constellation Andromeda, is an oddly shaped mass of stars and gases which puts out tremendous amounts of energy, says a report to be published Friday in the journal Science.

Researchers say the galaxy, called Markarian 348, is 1.3 million light-years in diameter. The Milky Way, in which the Earth's solar system is located, is about 100,000 light-years in diameter.

A light-year, a unit of measurement, is the distance light travels in a vacuum at 186,000 miles per second in a year's time, about 5.9 trillion miles.

Dr. Susan M. Simkin, professor of astronomy at Michigan State University, made the discovery with Dr. Hong-Jun Su of Nanjing, China, formerly a visiting scientist at Michigan State, and Drs. Jacqueline van Gorkom and John Hibbard of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Socorro, N.M.

Senate endorses new peace plan

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted 97-1 on Thursday to commend a new Central American peace plan, then resumed its long and bitterly divisive debate on arming Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

One Contra aid opponent, however, said that in the preliminary stages of the debate at least, he and his allies are really engaged in "shadow boxing," their legislative weapons armed only with "rubber bullets."

The real target, said Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., is not aid already in the pipeline but any future aid requests by President Reagan.

One day after the House voted 230-196 to freeze $40 million in aid to the Contras for six months pending an accounting of how previous aid was spent, Senate Democratic leaders said Congress likely would balk at future requests.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said Reagan would have a hard time winning approval of the additional $105 million in Contra aid he has requested for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Byrd and other leaders in the fight to end U.S. aid to the Contras said they will not be able to stop the release of the $40 million — the last installment of a $100 million aid package approved last year — because they cannot muster the two thirds majority needed to override a presidential veto.

Judge rules against North lawsuits

WASHINGTON — A federal judge, declaring Thursday that the nation needs "expeditious and complete disclosure" of the Iran-Contra affair, dismissed lawsuits by Lt. Col. Oliver North that sought to stop an independent counsel's investigation of his central role.

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker, said North was premature in seeking a ruling that the office of independent counsel was unconstitutional.

"Courts have almost never found that an ongoing criminal investigation imposes a sufficient hardship to the person investigated to warrant judicial review prior to his or her indictment," Parker said in his order.

"The plaintiff has not suffered an injury of sufficient keenness to warrant the court's intercession," Parker said. "For that reason, the court finds that plaintiff's challenge to the constitutionality of the independent counsel machinery is not ripe for adjudication and that his complaints should be dismissed."

'The good fight' goes on, activist says

By JUDY GOLDBERG
Staff Writer

Though most were untrained, 3,200 American volunteers fought against fascism in the Spanish Civil War and continue to fight for world freedom today, said Milton Wolff, chairman of the Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade Thursday afternoon.

"We've been active for 50 years," he said. "We've been in the good fight all that time."

An audience of about 100 filled the Union Big Eight Room to hear the freedom-fighting activist tell about his experiences in the Spanish Civil War and continuing anti-fascist support.

The Abraham Lincoln Brigade formed in an effort to help free Spain from a fascist take over during the Spanish Civil War, Wolff said.

The civil war began in 1936 when the Spanish army revolted against the government. The Spanish people fought back and were close to a victory after six weeks, but lost because of intervention by fascists, he said.

Spanish Gen. Francisco Franco received aid from Italian fascist dictator Benito Mussolini and German leader Adolf Hitler.

"On the basis of the big lie that it was Manifest Destiny for Hitler and Mussolini to save the world from communism, they threw their lot in with Franco," he said.

However, only 14 of 256 government officials were communists, he said. The government was also composed of republicans, socialists and anarchists.

While Franco received aid from the fascists, a non-intervention policy adopted by Western nations left the Spanish Republic in the cold, he said.

"Spain was locked off," he said. "The democratic legitimate government (was) abandoned by France, England and the United States," he said.

The Spanish Republic relied heavily on help from international brigades, Wolff said.

"People came from 54 countries," he said "About 40,000 people eventually came to join the Spanish people in this war against fascism." The Spanish Republic also received some aid from the Soviet Union, Mexico and Czechoslovakia, he said.

Barred from entrance to Spain through France because of the non-intervention policy, members of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade snuck into Spain by climbing over Pyrennes mountains, he said.

Though they were determined, the international brigade had outdated weapons, and they were no match for the facsist armies, Wolff said. In a "last desperate move," the leader of the Spanish Republic went to the League of Nations in 1938 to tell members he was unilaterally removing all foreign armies, and he requested the fascists to follow suit.

Hitler and Mussolini did not pull out of Spain, and by March of 1939 the fascists had taken over.

Half of the members of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade died in Spain, but less than a year later survivors were eager to fight in World War II.

"For us, of course, that was not the end of the fight," Wolff said. "We had made a commitment (against fascism)."

Wolff said many members were not stationed at the front in World War II because they were suspected to be disloyal to the American government for their involvement in the Spanish Civil War.

The government made life difficult for many surviving members but they never stopped fighting for what they believed in, he said.

"We kept up the fight and we've been doing it for 50 years and most recently we've been doing it in Central America on a humanitarian level," he said.

New proposals may add parking spaces

By RICHARD BROADFOOT
Collegian Reporter

While the parking problem at K-State is not new, two proposals for additional parking spaces are being considered that might add 1,200 parking spaces in the next two years.

"The first official parking complaint registered at K-State was in a letter dated Sept. 3, 1924," said Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning. "They haven't stopped coming."

An ad hoc parking committee chaired by Garvin has tentatively produced 13 recommendations ranging from additional parking to parking fee increases that would alleviate the shortage of parking spaces.

Three of the 13 recommendations would provide for additional on-campus parking.

The first plan would add 800 new spaces to the campus parking existing facilities in three areas: the parking lot on the southeast corner of campus; the parking lot north of Justin Hall; and the parking lot north of Weber Hall.

The second plan would re-line and re-design existing parking areas throughout campus, adding another 400 spaces.

The third plan would set aside funds from parking fees that may eventually be used for the construction of an on-campus parking garage.

The committee has reviewed three separate plans to allocate the present and proposed parking spaces. The first is for a completely integrated parking system that would run on a first-come, first-served basis for all student, faculty and staff parking spots.

The second proposal is a zoned integration plan that would charge different fees for different parking areas. Higher fees would be charged for the more desirable and convenient parking spaces on campus.

The third proposal is segregated parking, which would assign certain parking areas to particular groups — similar to the student, faculty/staff and visitor parking system currently in use.

The present parking facilities provide spaces for 7,928 vehicles. Studies conducted by the committee indicate an additional 1,000 spaces are needed to adequately serve the campus community.

Garvin said, however, he is skeptical that the committee's plans to add 1,200 spaces will stop the complaints.

"I think the only way we could satisfy everyone would be to provide a free, reserved space for everyone who asked for it, and put the space immediatly adjacent to their hall," Garvin said. "But that would necessitate asphalting the entire campus."

Researchers ignoring truth in meat industry

Results of a recent study allegedly linking the use of farm antibiotics to the spread of drug-resistant bacteria have been misinterpreted by both the media and the researchers themselves.

The research traced the source of cases of salmonella, a type of food poisoning, to worn-out dairy cows that had been slaughtered for hamburger. Finding the use of human antibiotics in these animals, Dr. John Spika of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, concluded that the study "documents that farms are a major source of antimicrobial-resistant salmonella infections in humans.

"One can say that antimicrobial use on farms has a direct impact on human health."

This is a preposterous conclusion.

Farm industry spokesmen noted the study did not address the issue of the common practice of low levels of antibiotics on the farm.

As Steve Kimbel of the Animal Health Institute pointed out, "This study involves the unapproved therapeutic use of antibiotics never approved for use in food animals in the United States."

Thus, research from this study has no relevance whatever to the standard use of antibiotics in animal feed. In fact, it fails to show that salmonella resistant to these drugs are of any more concern that non-resistant ones, Kimbel said.

As Dr. Richard H. Gustafsen of American Cyanimid said, the research "says nothing about the low-level use of antibiotics in animal feeds."

The conclusions of the study's researchers are faulty at best, unethical at worst. They trampled on the careful use of science to make inflammatory statements that might capture the public eye.

Their behavior spreads misconceptions about the use of antibiotics on the farm and ranch, and about the meat industry in general.

Currently, low doses of these drugs are added to animal feed to keep the animals healthy and prevent disease from reaching the dinner table.

Contrary to popular belief, antibiotics are not used to increase growth; they are not blended with feed in large amounts.

Also, contradictory to what these doctors seem to believe, most hamburger does not come from 10-year-old dairy cows.

Statements made by these and other researchers give the impression that all beef is declining in quality. This is simply not true. The quality of American beef is higher than ever and getting better.

Before medical researchers make such bold statements, and before the public believes them, they should first take a look at reality in the American red-meat industry.

Judge's book banning may redefine religion

A ruling by a federal judge in Alabama last week could have a drastic effect on our education system and society as a whole. U.S. District Judge W. Brevard Hand banned 44 textbooks from Alabama public schools, holding that they unconstitutionally promoted "the religion of secular humanism."

In his 172-page decision, Hand said, "Secular humanism is a religious belief system, entitled to the protections of, and subject to the prohibitions of the U.S. Constitution."

He also said, "Secular humanism is not a mere scientific methodology that may be promoted and advanced in the public schools."

The plaintiffs in the case, a group backed by television evangelist Pat Robertson, called the National Legal Foundation, argued that secular humanism should fall under the same restrictions as organized religions. The defendants, the Alabama State Board of Education, contended that the plaintiffs were using secular humanism as a catchall term for any ideas contrary to their fundamentalist religious beliefs.

The implications of this decision, if upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, are truly mind boggling. Every piece of scientific information and anything else not covered by organized religion could be considered secular humanism and prohibited from being taught in public schools. This would literally be the end of public education as we know it.

This interpretation of the extent of religion is absolutely ridiculous. According to this decision, no person or idea could be non-religious. Even though the "religion" of secular humanism has no book of worship or church to worship in, everyone is now a member of some religion.

But let's carry this a bit further. If secular humanism is a religion, then many things the plaintiffs oppose would now be protected by religious freedom. Pornography and drugs could be considered instruments of religious worship, thereby making them free from regulation, not to mention tax-free. Could you imagine Hustler publisher Larry Flynt holding a telethon to raise money to keep his "church" going? How about programs selling cocaine to help those poor Bolivian cocoa farmers? These are things the plaintiffs obviously didn't think about.

Hand has defined religion so broadly as to render the term meaningless. If everything is religious, then why should we even bother to use the term? Religion only has meaning if it serves to distinguish itself from everything else.

Dealing with cruelty is difficult

JEAN TELLER
Collegian Columnist

Last week, a 12-year-old boy walked into his Missouri seventh-grade class, pulled out a .45-caliber automatic and fired it six times. Three bullets went wild, two struck and killed a friend and the sixth entered his own skull, killing him instantly.

Why would an honor student take a gun from his father's collection, open fire, accidently kill a friend, then kill himself?

No one will ever know what the boy's reasons were. No one will ever know who he really intended to hurt or if the gun was merely to frighten his tormentors. No one will ever know if suicide was his ultimate intention. He was pushed over the brink by the teasing of his peers — because of his weight.

And my soul cries because I remember.

I remember the heartache and the gut-wrenching pain caused by the teasing of my peers because of my weight and the thickness of the lenses in my glasses. I remember the turning inward, the tears, the emotional trauma caused by the insensitive, cruel words shoved my way by acquaintances and strangers and even friends and family.

It's easy to say we shouldn't worry about what other people think. We shouldn't, but we do.

It's also easy to say we'll grow out of the problem, one day the weight problem will no longer be there or one day we will no longer care what those around us think. It's easy to say but it isn't true. The weight problem may never go away and we may always pay too much attention to what others think and say about it.

I know, because my weight problem is still here and I still worry about those around me thinking ill of me because of it.

My weight has always been a problem. I have never been even close to what you could call thin, skinny or petite. I'm slightly taller than the average American woman and I carry my weight well despite the extra 30-odd pounds I lug around constantly. I was at one time 20 pounds lighter than I am now but I just couldn't keep it from returning to haunt me like a bad dream.

There are people who will say it's easy to lose 20 pounds, there is no excuse for being overweight. They have no idea what they are talking about. It's hard work losing weight. It's not easy and it's not fun.

I would have fit into the society of 30 or 40 years ago. My figure would have at least been considered average. Now it's not even close to what society considers the norm.

We are so wrapped up in the thin and fitness craze we fail to remember the other factors involved in being overweight. There may be a physical problem, such as a thyroid condition. There are psychological problems of varying degrees which contribute to the problem and hinder the solution.

It's hard for me to lose weight for a variety of reasons. I love food. I like to eat. I'm a chocoholic. I also eat when I'm depressed, sad, happy, bored, in social situations, or combinations thereof.

So far I haven't been able to curb my appetite or marshall my emotions enough to lose those 20 pounds again. And the circumstances of how I lost the weight in the first place no longer exist, either in my mind or in reality.

I don't like the fact I'm overweight. In fact, I dislike it very much. A day doesn't go by, an hour doesn't pass without my thinking about it. The problem is constantly there; I am continually thinking and worrying about it.

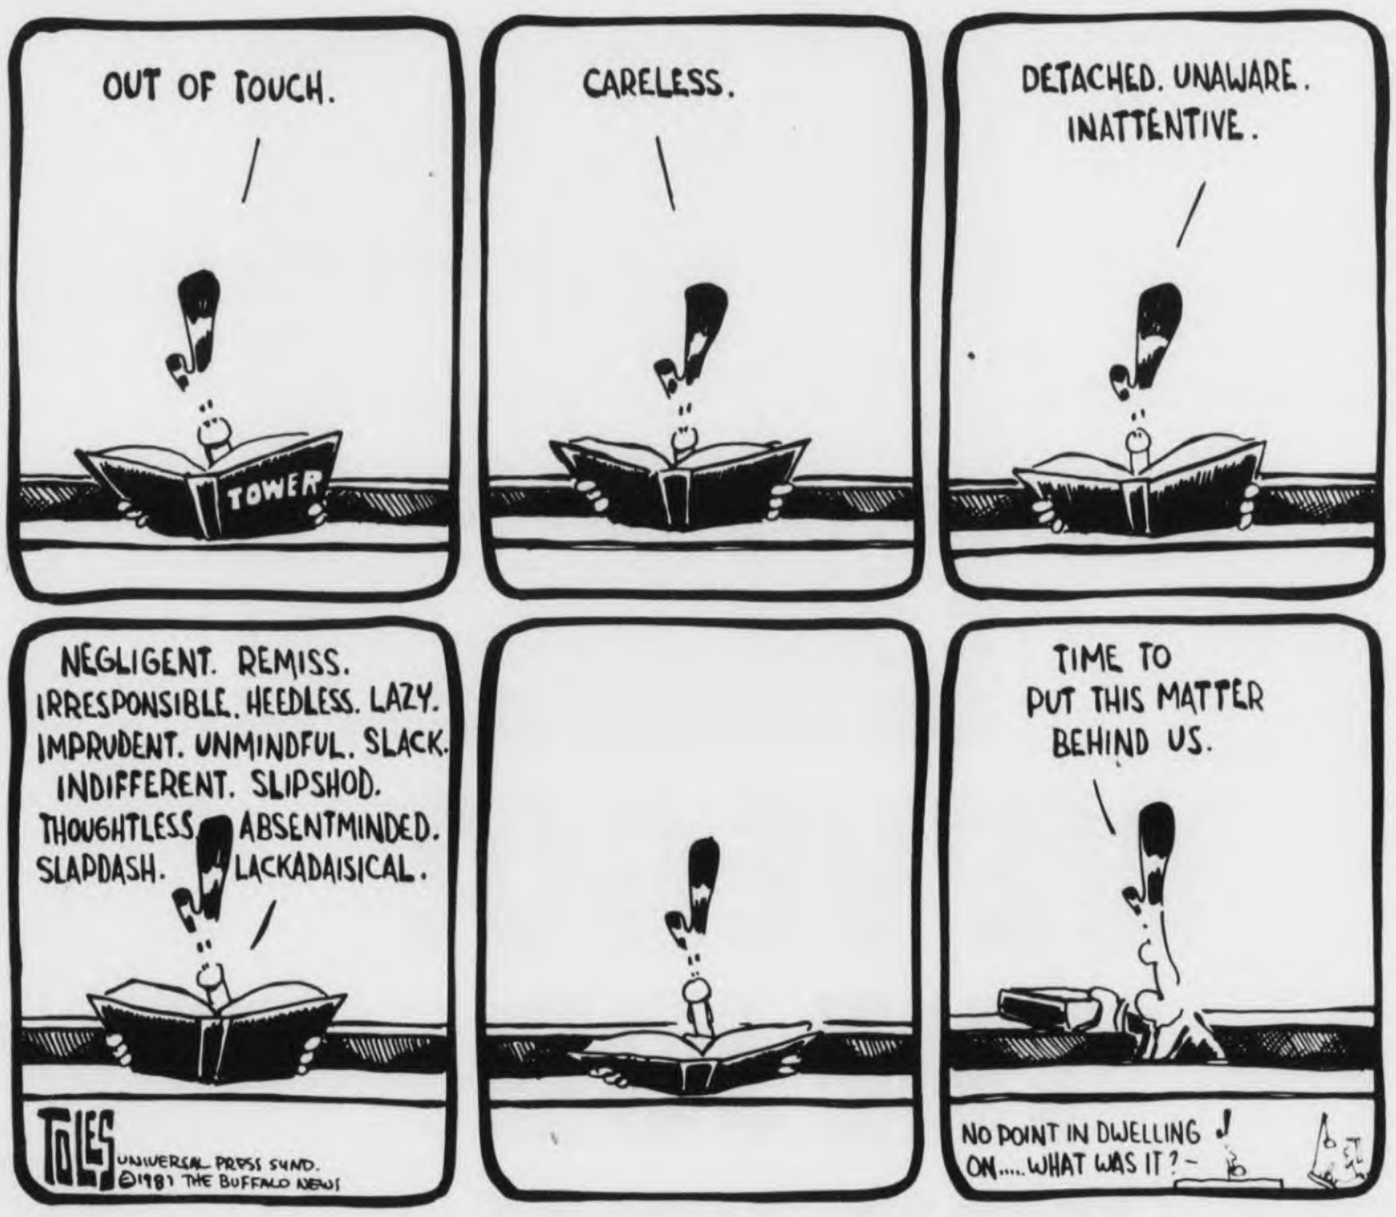
Those of us with weight problems know it. We know there's a problem, we know what the solution is. But knowing and doing are two completely different things.

Our self-image is that of a person who is overweight. Not only do we perceive ourselves as being overweight but we perceive others as viewing us that way also. Our self-perceptions are so overpowering we don't realize others may not see us the way we think they do.

I know I'm overweight. I know others think of me as being overweight. But how would I think of myself and how would others think of me if I were thinner? If I were those 30 pounds lighter? What would my self-image be then?

It would still be the self-image of the fat little girl being teased by her peers. It would still be a self-image perceiving the world as seeing me as overweight. The self-image would not change even though the package might.

I wouldn't know what to do if I were thinner. I wouldn't be able to hide. I wouldn't be able to blame problems on my weight and I wouldn't be able to cope with the new problems of being thin. I wouldn't know how to handle the way other people would look at me, if I didn't perceive them as seeing the overweight person I see.



That's why I can't keep the weight off if I actually do lose it. My self-image is not one of a thin person. It's the self-image of the overweight person I know I am.

So I punish myself enough for my weight problem. I'm sure the 12-year-old boy in Missouri did also — even before his drastic actions last week. Those of us who perceive ourselves as being fat don't need to be reminded of the fact by anyone else.

So don't judge us on appearances alone. We need to remember to put ourselves in someone else's place before making any kind of judgments. What you see is not necessarily what you get.

We are all different in many respects and we need to learn to see the world and others through different eyes. We need to learn to empathize with others, learn to walk in another's footsteps, learn to see through another's eyes.

What would you do in another's place? How would you react if someone had said the same comments you make but directed at you? How would you react to the pain and anguish felt by a 12-year-old boy?

Don't ask me to believe Reagan

ANDRE KELLEY
Collegian Reviewer

I'd like to respond to Tim Inman's column on his proposed student support of the SDI program in the March 6 Collegian.

After reading Inman's article and his arguments supporting it, I must say I have now heard it all.

Since the beginning of his administration, Ronald Reagan has made a lot of bold moves. He's cheated blacks, women, students, farmers and even the elderly.

But convincing Christians such as yourself on the necessity of arms build-up has to be his best move yet.

After the Iran-Contra affair, I'm not about to listen to any of Reagan's weapons rhetoric. Inman's column stated that a Star Wars program would cost around $50 billion. From what I've read, a proper, feasible system would run into the trillions. Where did you get your figures from, a K-Mart sale? Tell me, are you one of those people who buys "real" diamond rings for $19.95?

Whether you call it "defensive or offensive," and whether you bring in "Nehemiah or Jeremiah," like Reagan, you are merely side-stepping the real issue. The only way to diffuse the nuclear threat is to get rid of the missiles themselves, not by going broke building a weapon that'll protect us from them.

I'm not a spiritual person, but how you can bring religion into this is way beyond me. My connection to God may not be as good as Oral Roberts' (when I'm called home, I take my laundry) but I'm sure he has nothing to do with the arms race. You can pray all you want, but I prefer to see those in power (the ones who got us into this mess) get us out of it.

It's simple insanity stockpiling weapons we can neither use nor afford.

Since Reagan would have us believe that we truly need them, I have the perfect solution. Why don't we just dismantle all the missiles in existence except one? One's all you need anyway. And since no state wants a nuclear device in its backyard, just put it in Jersey — no one'll care.

And there you have it. One missile, in plain sight, aimed at wherever. As a tourist attraction, and with all the money saved, we could even put up a yogurt stand and hire Robin Leach to run it. Besides, he needs a real job anyway. Hey, this could be the start of something big.

And since Reagan is going to need big bucks for this program Inman so strongly supports, just where do you think this kind of money is coming from? We, the American people.

Besides, if he believes that strongly about it, he should call in a couple of favors and hit up the Marcos' for the cash. I'm sure between Nancy's Tupperware and Imelda's closet, he could have a hell of a garage sale.

Let's face it, we need SDI like Nell Carter needs another doughnut.

Tim, if you can't take me seriously, imagine how I feel about your trying to convince the student body of the merits of SDI. Besides, the way this administration is going, I'm thinking of punting my student loan and becoming a Contra rebel. At least the money they get is interest free and they don't even have to pay it back.

'Cats scrap with Bulldogs, emerge with win

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

K-State men's basketball coach Lon Kruger was on the nose with his prediction about the Wildcats first-round, West regional game against Georgia in the NCAA postseason tournament.

Before the game against the Bulldogs, Kruger said the contest "will probably go down to the wire."

He couldn't have been more accurate.

It took one overtime period in the University of Utah's Special Events Center for the Wildcats to get by the 'Dawgs, 82-79.

"I thought it was a really tough, hard-fought ballgame from start to finsh," Kruger said. "We were a little (apprehensive) at the start. When that died down, we began to shoot better."

Kruger was on the money with that analysis as well. K-State, 20-10, fell behind early in the game, 14-5, due to poor shooting and turnovers. The 'Cats turned the ball over nine times in the first 12 minutes of the game.

Despite K-State's poor first-half shooting (42.9 percent), it held a two-point halftime lead, 31-29.

"I felt we were exchanging baskets bucket after bucket," was Wildcat Mitch Richmond's way of summing up the rest of the game. The lead changed hands countless times, as neither team was able to pull away from the other.

"A big key was when Mitch took (Willie) Anderson defensively," Kruger said. "Mitch did a good job and made him play harder in the last 10 minutes of the game."

Anderson, Georgia's All-Southeastern Conference guard, who averages 15.2 points per game, scored a game-high 35 points. But he scored just two points in the five-minute overtime period.

"I take great pride in my defense, so I like the challenge," Richmond said, who didn't have a bad day himself. Richmond led the 'Cats with a career-high 34 points and 11 rebounds, which tied his season high.

With 1:30 left in regulation play, Richmond connected on a three-point shot, tying the score at 70-70. Anderson put the 'Dawgs back up by two, 72-70, at the 1:00 mark. The 'Cats worked the ball to Norris Coleman on their next possession, who put in a layup with :27 left, knotting the score at 72-72.

Georgia called timeout at the :20 mark, and again at the :09 mark. The 'Dawgs got the ball inbounds to freshman guard Mark Harron, who was picked up by Lance Simmons. Harron caught the ball and turned into Simmons, who fell to the floor. Harron was whistled for a charging foul, and the 'Cats got the ball back with :08 left.

Charles Bledsoe threw the inbounds pass to Coleman, who tried to drive into the lane. Coleman had the ball knocked loose, and it was picked up by Georgia. Harron's last-second shot attempt from K-State's end of the floor was blocked by Coleman, sending the game into overtime.

Georgia scored first in overtime when Anderson scored, putting the 'Dawgs ahead 74-72. Richmond answered back 16 seconds later with 3:35 left in the game, tying the score at 74-74.

K-State went ahead, 76-74, when Bledsoe rebounded a missed 12-foot shot by Richmond and put it back up for two points. Georgia's Chad Kessler scored for the 'Dawgs, knotting the score for the last time, 76-76.

On the 'Cats next possession, Bledsoe and Coleman connected on an alley-oop pass, giving K-State a 78-76 edge and the lead for good.

Harron sank the second free throw from a two-shot foul, pulling Georgia within one point, 78-77, with :40 left in the game.

The 'Dawgs were forced to foul K-State on the next series. Will Scott went to the line and calmly canned two charity tosses, putting the 'Cats ahead 80-77.

Georgia worked the ball to Anderson with :12 left. His three-point shot from the left side of the lane bounced off the rim, and Richmond grabbed the rebound. He was fouled at the :09 mark. Richmond connected on both of his free throws, giving the 'Cats a five-point lead, 82-77.

Alec Kessler scored Georgia's last points with :02 left in the game, but they weren't enough, as K-State walked away with the victory and into the second round of tournament play, 82-79.

The win marks the first time since the 1981-82 season that the 'Cats have collected 20 wins.

Top collegiate track athletes to meet

Track coach sends eight to nationals

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

It takes a lot of discipline and determination to become a champion. Just ask Ron Stahl.

Stahl, a senior long-distance runner for the K-State men's track team, has gone through many trials and tribulations to attain his level of excellence.

But to be quite honest, Stahl didn't know if he would be on the team this season.

"Coach (John Capriotti) and I had a little disagreement during cross country, so tempers flew a little bit and I was kind of fed up with running because I couldn't foresee myself going any further. I knew I was getting in shape, but I was just not doing very well competitively. I felt I wasn't getting any better; like I just came to a plateau," Stahl said.

Stahl said with his tough academic major, which is electrical engineering, he felt school should take proirity and it was pointless to keep running at his stagnant progress rate.

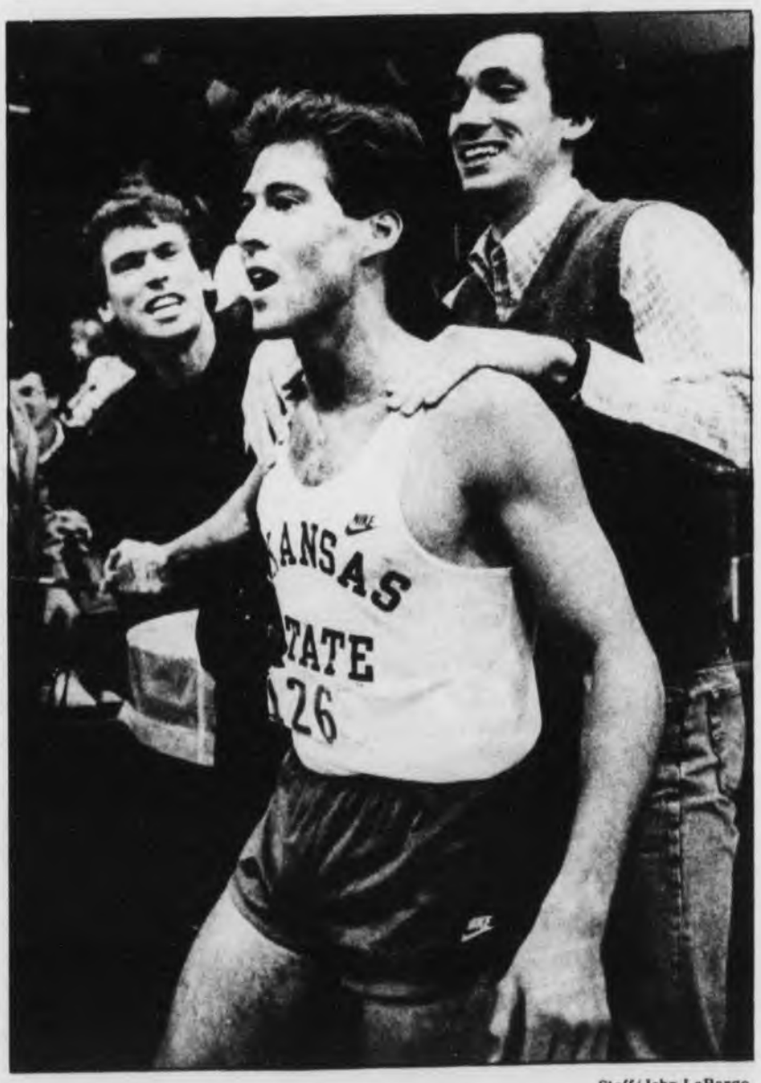
"I felt like I was just kind of wasting my time running. With school and everything, a lot of tensions ocurred and things got out of hand," Stahl said.

Stahl quit the team during cross country season just before the Big Eight Conference meet in November, but has given track another shot.

As is evident from his record this season, he is probably glad he did.

Stahl, at the Big Eight indoor track meet, took first place honors in the two-mile and three-mile runs. He was also named the meet's Most Valuable Performer.

He won't be competing at the NCAA championship in either of those events, though. He'll be running the mile, which he qualified for by running a time of 4:03.25 which also set a meet record at the KSU open.



"Here's a guy who's completely changed as far as his attitude and what he should be doing. He's running with a lot of confidence now. He's just doing a great job. I've never seen such a turnaround," Capriotti said.

Stahl, who will head to Oklahoma City this weekend to compete in the NCAA indoor championships, said he'd like to raise his level of competition higher than before.

"First, I'd like to make it to the finals. I'd also try to finish in the top six and make All-American," Stahl said.

So as chance would have it, Stahl is reaping the rewards of surviving a rough time. He said it came to quite a surprise to him.

"All of a sudden, things just started falling into place," Stahl said.

Ron Stahl, who quit the cross country team before the Big Eight Cross Country Meet in the fall, has returned to reap the rewards of surviving a rough time by improving competitively.

Track star overcomes difficulties

By The Collegian Staff

The top collegiate track athletes will meet in Oklahoma City, Okla., this weekend for the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships, and eight Wildcat tracksters will be among the prestigious field.

Six members of the K-State women's team and two members of the men's team will compete. K-State Coach John Capriotti said his teams have opportunities for strong individual and team performances.

"We're taking the most people we've ever taken to the NCAA indoor meet. We're taking eight different people in nine events so I'm happy," Capriotti said.

Members of the men's team competing are senior Ron Stahl in the mile run, and defending NCAA indoor long jump champion Kenny Harrison.

"In my opinion, Kenny Harrison is one of the top track and field athletes in the nation. I think he's going there with a chance to win the long jump and the triple jump," Capriotti said.

He said the men's team, with only two performers, may place in the top five in the nation.

Members of the women's team include triple jumper Felicia Carpenter, sprinter Anita Isom, hurdler Kim Kilpatrick, distance runners Anne Stadler and Chris Vanatta and shot-putter Pinkie Suggs.

Capriotti said he expects Suggs to be a standout for the team and that he expects the women to finish in the top 10 or 15 teams.

"Pinkie is going to have her work cut out for her as far as winning, but she should be in the top four or five. I think she's ready to pop a good one and she may challenge for the win, but she's going to have to throw another foot further to win," Capriotti said.

K-State has chance to run with Rebels

By JENNY CHAULK
Sports Writer

K-State has the opportunity to do something not many basketball teams in America get the chance to do: beat the No. 1 team in the nation.

K-State, 20-10, will line up against the Runnin' Rebels from the University of Nevada-Las Vegas Saturday in a second-round West regional game in the NCAA's postseason tournament.

Tipoff is set for 1:25 p.m. (CST), and will be nationally televised by CBS sports.

UNLV, 34-1 overall, advanced to the second round by trouncing Idaho State Thursday, 95-70. They are the West's No. 1 seed, finishing the regular season ranked first by both The Associated Press and United Press International.

UNLV's only loss of the season was by one point to the University of Oklahoma in Norman.

"It's certainly not impossible to beat a good Las Vegas team," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said. "But it will take a real good effort and fight for 40 minutes. They have a lot of weapons."

The Runnin' Rebels boast a bevy of veteran talent in three senior and two junior starters.

Leading UNLV's starting five is Armon Gilliam, a 6-9 senior forward averaging 22.6 points per game and 9.1 rebounds per game. Gilliam has been a Pacific Coast Athletic Conference all-league player the past two seasons. This season he was PCAA player of the year.

Gilliam transferred to UNLV from Independence Junior College in 1985.

"Armon is our real war horse," Runnin' Rebel Coach Jerry Tarkanian said.

UNLV's senior guards Freddie Banks and Mark Wade made the PCAA all-league team this season. Banks averages 19.2 points per game and Wade averages 5.1 points and 10.5 assists per game.

Rounding out UNLV's starting lineup are junior forward Gerald Paddio, averaging 13.5 points per game, and junior center Jarvis Basnight, averaging 9.2 points per game.

Spring break road trip challenges tennis team

By CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

They may be away from K-State, but it won't quite be spring break for the members of the women's tennis team. Sunday the squad starts a six-game road trip in as many days.

"Spring trip is a chance for them to play some tennis," said Coach Steve Bietau. We've had a pretty long layoff since our last match (on Feb. 22) and they're ready to play some people again. I think they're really looking forward to it."

K-State heads back into competition Sunday against Tulsa. They then travel across town for a match-up with Oral Roberts on Monday. During the fall season K-State defeated Tulsa 6-3 and Oral Roberts 7-2.

"We played both Tulsa and Oral Roberts in the fall and beat them," Bietau said. "They're matches that we still have to play well to win though."

On Tuesday the Wildcats face Cook County Junior College in Gainsville, Texas. Cook County has one of the best juco teams in the nation, Bietau said. "They are stronger than a lot of Division I teams, so it should be a good match."

The toughest opponent K-State will face during the trip is Texas Christian University on Wednesday.

"TCU has one of the best teams in the country and it will be a great opportunity to play them," Bietau said.

Harried road trip to test Wildcats' commitment

By TOM MORRIS
Sports Editor

A good way to test a team's commitment is to see how the players perform during a vacation period such as spring break.

K-State's baseball team will have its dedication severely tested during a nine-game, nine-day road trip starting Saturday.

While the majority of the University population is having fun in the sun, the Wildcats will play against Texas, New Orleans, Nicholls State and Tulane. All four teams are receiving votes in national polls.

"Every team is a Top-20 caliber team. So we've got nine games in nine days against the best that there is in the nation," 'Cat Coach Mike Clark said.

Clark said he has some definite goals in mind for his 6-2 Wildcats during the road swing to Texas and Louisiana.

"One, we hope it develops consistency. Two, it's an evaluation process for us. Three, we want to make this something positive for us. Kind of the saying for this whole trip is 'to be great, you have to beat great people,'" Clark said.

"If we want to be a Top-20 type ballclub we have to beat some or all of these (teams) and...we have to find out what we have to do to become a Top-20 ballclub and make those corrections. Now's the time to do it," he added.

Clark said he wasn't surprised by K-State's 6-2 start this spring.

"I don't want to use the word 'surprised' because we really don't know how good we are. We have limitations; there are certain things we can't do," Clark said. "But as long as we keep working on our limitations, over the course of the season we're hoping to turn them into things we can do."

Pitching, or the lack of, is the biggest limitation K-State must face on this road trip.

"We have a nine-man (pitching) staff and Texas has 27. If we get into a situation where we have to use three pitchers the first day, three the second day and three the third day, I don't know what we're going to do," Clark said.

"I guess we'll take volunteers or see how much eligibilty some of our assistant coaches have left."

The Wildcats open the road swing Saturday and Sunday against Texas at Austin. K-State is 0-8 against the Longhorns.

"They're one of the class programs in the nation," Clark said. "When you build a program, you kind of like to pattern yourself after somebody like the University of Texas — one of the most successful teams in the nation."

Texas has a traditionally strong pitching staff. Some of the Longhorns' most notable alumni include Boston Red Sox hurlers Roger Clemens and Calvin Schiraldi.

"This year I'm not sure their pitching depth is as good as it has been," Clark said. "Then again, you're comparing it to Clemens and there's not many college staffs who are going to compare to that.

Another problem facing K-State is the 21-5 Longhorns have more than 20 games under their belts while the 'Cats are facing just their ninth outing of the season.

"It's another handicap for us. They're in mid-season form and we're still trying to answer some questions. "Of course we're going to try and win it, but we also want to know more about our ballclub after these games are over with. What we need to work on..and what we're doing a pretty good job at," Clark said.

After the games against Texas, the 'Cats will challenge New Orleans on Tuesday, on Wednesday they play Nichols State at Thibodaux, La., and Thursday they return to New Orleans for another game.

K-State concludes the road-trip March 19 and 21 with two games against Tulane, also in New Orleans.

Tarkanian is in his 13th season at UNLV. He has led the Runnin' Rebels to five consecutive NCAA appearances, and is the NCAA's winningest active coach.

In 19 seasons coaching on the major college level "Tark the Shark" is 475-102.

Before K-State left for the NCAAs, Kruger said the 'Cats would welcome the chance to play UNLV.

"It would be going from night to day as far as playing style is concerned," said Kruger, referring to the slowed down, half-court style of ball played by K-State's first-round opponent, Georgia.

"UNLV goes crazy," Kruger said.

Tennis

K-State squad will stop to play Baylor on Thursday and Oklahoma City on Friday.

The weather hasn't been the only good thing to happen to the team recently. Lena Svensson is ready to return to competition and may play several matches over break.

Svensson, the No. 1 singles player last fall, has been recuperating from arthroscopic surgery on her knee.

There has been one other change in the team line-up. Annika Emtell has replaced Sigrid Ivarsson as the No. 1 singles player. Ivarsson now holds the No. 2 spot and Valerie Rive' has the No. 3 position.

UNLV lambastes Idaho State; Xavier shocks MU

By The Associated Press

Top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas won big, as expected. Navy's David Robinson played big, as expected. Xavier, Ohio, and Austin Peay also won, both certainly unexpected.

While UNLV opened its bid for an NCAA basketball title with a 95-70 thrashing of Idaho State in a first-round game of the West Regional, lightly regarded Xavier stunned 14th-ranked Missouri 70-69 and Austin Peay shocked third-seeded Illinois 68-67 in the Southeast Regional.

And, in the top individual performance of the day, Navy's talented 7-footer saved his finest performance for his final college game. Although Michigan beat Navy 97-82 in an East Regional game, Robinson went over, around and through the Wolverines for a career-high 50 points.

Freddie Banks got all seven of his baskets from 3-point range and finished with 23 points as UNLV, 34-1, strolled past the bottom seed in the West Regional. Gary Graham added 18 points for UNLV, which led 46-27 at the half and by 29 points in the second half.

"At times we played real well and at times we played kind of sloppy," UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "Our kids had a hard time adjusting to the altitude (at Salt Lake City) because our game is so based on quickness."

Xavier's Byron Larkin, admitting he was embarrassed by Xavier's loss to Alabama in the 1986 NCAA Tournament, scored 29 points on Thursday, including 19 in the second half.

Larkin's 3-point shot gave Xavier, 19-12, the lead for good at 48-45 and his two free throws with 31 seconds to play provided the winning margin as the Musketeers eliminated the Big Eight Conference champion Tigers, 24-10. Lynn Hardy, who led Missouri with 21 points, hit a 3-point shot with 13 seconds left, but Larkin dribbled away the final seconds as Missouri was unable to commit a foul to stop the clock.

Alabama was at it again Thursday, giving North Carolina A&T an 88-71 shellacking in the Southeast Regional, and New Orelans stopped Brigham Young 83-79.

In the East Regional, Texas Christian eliminated Marshall 76-60 and Notre Dame stormed away in the late going for an 84-71 victory over Middle Tennessee.

No. 17 Duke, in jeopardy of joining Missouri as a Midwest Regional upset victim, rode Kevin Strickland's 20 points to a 58-51 defeat of Texas A&M.

In the other early-evening game, Auburn shaded San Diego 62-61 in the Midwest Regional.

Entertainer to perform at K-State

By The Collegian Staff

Larry Travis, director of Intercollegiate Athletics, announced Thursday that recording and movie star Willie Nelson will perform in concert following the K-State-Austin Peay State football game Sept. 5.

The concert will be 30 minutes after the game at the KSU Stadium. The game, tentatively set to start at 6:30 p.m., is the season and home opener for the Wildcats.

"We feel that by combining a concert, featuring a well known performer such as Willie Nelson, along with a Kansas State football game, we will be able to offer people a 'total' entertainment package. This is just one of an ongoing number of promotional projects which we are implementing to supplement our athletic program," Travis said in a press release.

Nelson is known for such songs as "Whiskey River" and "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to be Cowboys," a duet with Waylon Jennings.

Reserved tickets for the game will cost $15 and will provide admission to the concert. For season-ticket holders, the $79 cost of their six-game season ticket will include admission to the concert.

Tutors, students benefit from program

By BOB OLSON
Contributing Writer

It's not uncommon for tutors involved in the Conversational English Tutoring program to learn as much as they teach.

The tutoring program, begun in 1979 by Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, provides international students with tutoring services.

"I learn more from her than the other way around," said Ann Foster, accountant for Student Publications Inc., who tutors a young woman from Taiwan. "You don't always measure benefits in dollars and cents. There's no way to put a price tag on what I'm learning and enjoying.

"She's a mother. So am I," Foster said. "We are constantly making comparisons on things having to do with marriage and child-rearing — everything from spanking children to child abuse. She writes things down in a notebook so she won't forget to ask me about them.

"My student is originally from mainland China. They have 4,000 years of written history, and she can talk about each dynasty in order, from memory," Foster said. "I think that's fantastic. And to think our children complain about having to learn 200 years of our history."

The program began with a few tutors and has grown to as many as 100, said Karen Kroll, program coordinator and graduate student assistant in education for foreign languages.

Most of the tutors have no formal training. Tutors do not have to be certified teachers, but it is a plus if they are, Kroll said.

To prepare the tutors and the international students, Kroll sponsors two orientation sessions. At one session, international students learn about the program, and at the other tutors learn about the life of an international student.

After the orientations a get-acquainted meeting is scheduled to pair the tutors with an international student. Some may tutor more than one student, and they may elect to meet as a group.

"The program is extremely flexible," she said. "Each group can meet any place they want and as often as they want. The participants can attend a movie, a basketball game, a concert — anything goes."

'The program has potential for friendships that would not otherwise be possible. It has increased my awareness of the world.'

—Donna Davis

Reasons for participating in the program vary. Some international students want to improve their English, while others want to learn how to better cope with American society, Kroll said.

Minren Xu, graduate student in chemistry from China, said he needs the program for various reasons.

"I need time to learn English and the American society," Xu said. "English class is not enough. I need this program to help me to understand (what I am hearing)."

Xu said he likes his tutor, Janelle Larson, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, as a friend and teacher.

"I was very moved by her interest in helping me," he said. "She spends a lot of time preparing for our meetings."

Larson said she and Xu meet twice a week for 1 to 1½ hours per session.

"At one meeting we'll practice pronunciation and the other we'll discuss anything we want," Larson said. "I pronounce difficult words on tape for him so he can practice."

Mona Hung, graduate student in computer science from Taiwan, said the program is very helpful. She has been involved in the tutoring program since she came to the University more than two years ago, and Davis is her tutor.

"The program gives me a good chance to learn the American culture. (Davis) is my family's friend," Hung said.

"Mona Hung was one of my charter students," Davis said. "She was here because her husband was an international student."

Davis said Hung was not confident of her ability to speak English, so she registered for the tutoring program. Hung said the help she received from the program is the reason she is a student currently, Davis said.

Connie Wang, freshman in computer science from Taiwan, said she believes the program is "pretty neat."

"Connie Wang was also here because her husband was a student at K-State. The four of them and I are really very close friends now," Davis said. "The friendships that develop from the tutoring program are tremendous and often long-lasting."

The program was suspended a couple of years ago because of budget cuts and reduction of staff, she said. As many as 100 volunteer tutors were involved at one point. With no funding, no formal program could exist.

Some American participants tutored as a requirement for an anthropology class. Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology, required her students to do some language tutoring as part of the practical experience she felt they needed, Davis said.

"When our program was cut, we continued a limited version for the benefit of those students," she said. "During the time we were not officially in business, I got someone to volunteer to run it. Of course, we could not serve nearly as many international students."

"I teach that class only during the spring semester, and it's usually 18 or 20 students, but at this time it's up to 25 students," Ottenheimer said.

Last fall, William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, indicated there was some money he could allocate for programs. Davis submitted a proposal, it was accepted, and the English Tutoring Program was back in business. The program now needs more American tutors, she said.

"The program has potential for friendships that would not otherwise be possible. It has increased my awareness of the world," Davis said. "This is not just a teaching situation. It doesn't have to be (just) a grammar lesson."

Conference applauds greek councils' party

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's greek councils were recognized for their planning and support of last fall's back-to-school party — Kickoff '86 — at the Mid-American Interfraternity/Panhellenic Conference banquet March 7 in St. Louis.

Keynote speaker Sue Supple, national president for Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, recognized the two greek councils for the event, an all-University, non-alcoholic gathering opening the new school year. It is sponsored by Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services and other campus organizations and living groups.

This year's kickoff featured a formal introduction of the new head football coach Stan Parrish and University President Jon Wefald to the student body. "Good Morning America" also filmed a segment of the event for its program.

About 2,000 undergraduate students representing 75 schools from across the 15-state midwestern region attended the St. Louis conference, said Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser. Fourteen students represented K-State.

The conference allows greeks to exchange information and get new ideas from other campuses.

"There were sessions on all phases of the greek system," Robel said. "We also gave a lot of our own input on what we do here at Kansas State."

Lisa Tarvestad, junior in industrial engineering, was selected to be state coordinator for the Panhellenic Council, and Brian Ritenour, junior in marketing, was selected as state coordinator for the Interfraternity Council.

Judge orders halt to bogus plane ticket sales

By JUDY LUNDSTROM

SAN DIEGO — A scheme involving the questionable selling of frequent-flyer airline certificates has been brought to a halt.

A U.S. District Court judge on Monday ordered Eric S. Fuller, owner of a San Diego airline ticket brokerage firm, to pay more than $132,000 in damages to Trans World Airlines and a fine of $5,000 to the United States before noon Thursday.

The decree was a result of Fuller's violating an Oct. 15, 1986, injunction against his coupon brokerage company, which prohibited Fuller and his associates from "issuing, selling, or causing to be issued or sold tickets for travel on TWA."

At a previous hearing Fuller, owner of The Coupon Bank [illegible] was found in contempt of court Feb. 12 by Judge Howard B. Turrentine after it was determined Fuller's company had sold tickets for travel on TWA.

At the trial, it was revealed Coupon Bank was buying frequent-flyer certificates from individuals or travel agencies, then reselling the certificates as valid airline tickets to unsuspecting travelers.

Travelers who purchased the invalid tickets found it to be a problem when they were detained in countries overseas and not allowed to return to the United States with the invalid tickets.

QUESTIONS REMAIN

Still unresolved is whether the selling of frequent-flyer coupons is illegal. Although legal experts line up on both sides of the question, the U.S. attorney general and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are examining the Coupon Bank case, said James M. Derr, a Los Angeles attorney for TWA.

"Frequent-flyer tickets are promotional gifts," said a legal assistant for TWA in New York. "...we don't expect payment for them, but we mean for them to be used by the person they are issued to or their immediate families."

TWA lost millions of dollars in 1986 because Fuller purchased frequent-flyer rewards and sold them to customers who would have otherwise purchased a full-fare ticket, Derr said. The airline ended up flying the passengers for free while Fuller collected a discounted fare.

Testimony at the Feb. 9 hearing revealed Fuller had advertised for potential travelers, established contacts with the travelers, reserved the seat on the airline and set and collected the amount for the ticket.

Fuller's scheme included buying out travel agencies then using the newly acquired agents' stock to issue airline tickets. By maintaining a non-ownership relationship with each of the travel agencies, Fuller contended he was not in violation of the injunction because his companies were not actually issuing the tickets, but paying someone else to.

Judge Turrentine did not agree.

"Like Dorothy's encounter with the Great Oz, the court need only peer behind the thin veil of the defendant's referral mechanism to discern whose voice and hands controlled the transactions and who stood to profit by its machinations," he said.

Turrentine said he thought he was being "very reasonable" with his sentence. If, by noon Friday, Fuller has failed to comply with the order handed down Monday establishing the fines, Turrentine said Fuller will be sent to jail.

"With a violation as blatant as this, something has to be done," he said.

Damages TWA requested were a total of the dollar amount of tickets sold by Fuller's companies after the injunction was issued, plus the attorney's fees.

"I'm very pleased," Derr said. "I think justice was served today."

GROWING MARKET

TWA began issuing frequent-flyer awards in May 1981, Derr said. At that time, no policies were formulated concerning the transfer or sale of the awards. But when the airlines saw a growing market involving this procedure they added an amendment to the regulations, restricting the sale of such cer-

"Top Gun"

With ample shots of Tom Cruise's grin and a chart-busting soundtrack, this was the biggest moneymaker of 1986.

It's a coming-of-age film set in a naval fighter pilot training outfit called "Top Gun." Cruise ("Risky Business") plays a hot-dogging, hardheaded, trainee determined to prove himself to his classmates and his senior officers.

Kelly McGillis ("Witness") plays his girlfriend/instructor and the turbulence of their relationship, plus his coming to grips with his father's death, make for the conflict.

Neither the story nor the characters are deep, but the strengths of this film lie in its exciting photography, its wisecracking, beefcake cast and a hard-rocking, sometimes mellow soundtrack which includes Kenny Loggins' "Danger Zone," Berlin's "Take My Breath Away" and Miami Sound Machine's "Falling In Love."

"52 Pick-Up"

This John Frankenheimer-directed thriller, based on a novel by Elmore Leonard, takes us behind the facade of middle-class America and into the sleazy underbelly of Los Angeles.

Roy Scheider stars as a police detective whose wife (played by Ann-Margret) is kidnapped for ransom by pornographers.

It's a powerful film, but also exceedingly unpleasant. Recommended only for those people with a taste for movies (or novels) about the lurid side of life.

"My Beautiful Laundrette"

This quiet film, set in London's Pakistani community, was placed on several of last year's top 10 lists. It's an often perceptive (and sometimes slow) story about a teenage Pakistani who runs a launderette with the help of his working-class white friend, a punk rocker whose friends resent his taking a job in the neighborhood. Together they turn the run-down launderette into a "Ritz among launderettes."

That might not sound like much of a plot, but the characters are so richly drawn that the movie comes to life.

Judge orders halt to bogus plane ticket sales

SAN DIEGO — A scheme involving the questionable selling of frequent-flyer airline certificates has been brought to a halt.

A U.S. District Court judge on Monday ordered Eric S. Fuller, owner of a San Diego airline ticket brokerage firm, to pay more than $132,000 in damages to Trans World Airlines and a fine of $5,000 to the United States before noon Thursday.

The decree was a result of Fuller's violating an Oct. 15, 1986, injunction against his coupon brokerage company, which prohibited Fuller and his associates from "issuing, selling, or causing to be issued or sold tickets for travel on TWA."

At a previous hearing Fuller, owner of The Coupon Bank, La Jolla, Calif., was found in contempt of court Feb. 12 by Judge Howard B. Turrentine after it was determined Fuller's company had sold tickets for travel on TWA.

At the trial, it was revealed Coupon Bank was buying frequent-flyer certificates from individuals or travel agencies, then reselling the certificates as valid airline tickets to unsuspecting travelers.

Travelers who purchased the invalid tickets found it to be a problem when they were detained in countries overseas and not allowed to return to the United States with the invalid tickets.

QUESTIONS REMAIN

Still unresolved is whether the selling of frequent-flyer coupons is illegal. Although legal experts line up on both sides of the question, the U.S. attorney general and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are examining the Coupon Bank case, said James M. Derr, a Los Angeles attorney for TWA.

"Frequent-flyer tickets are promotional gifts," said a legal assistant for TWA in New York. "...we don't expect payment for them, but we mean for them to be used by the person they are issued to or their immediate families."

TWA lost millions of dollars in 1986 because Fuller purchased frequent-flyer rewards and sold them to customers who would have otherwise purchased a full-fare ticket, Derr said. The airline ended up flying the passengers for free while Fuller collected a discounted fare.

Testimony at the Feb. 9 hearing revealed Fuller had advertised for potential travelers, established contacts with the travelers, reserved the seat on the airline and set and collected the amount for the ticket.

Fuller's scheme included buying out travel agencies then using the newly acquired agents' stock to issue airline tickets. By maintaining a non-ownership relationship with each of the travel agencies, Fuller contended he was not in violation of the injunction because his companies were not actually issuing the tickets, but paying someone else to.

Judge Turrentine did not agree.

"Like Dorothy's encounter with the Great Oz, the court need only peer behind the thin veil of the defendant's referral mechanism to discern whose voice and hands controlled the transactions and who stood to profit by its machinations," he said.

Turrentine said he thought he was being "very reasonable" with his sentence. If, by noon Friday, Fuller has failed to comply with the order handed down Monday establishing the fines, Turrentine said Fuller will be sent to jail.

"With a violation as blatant as this, something has to be done," he said.

Damages TWA requested were a total of the dollar amount of tickets sold by Fuller's companies after the injunction was issued, plus the attorney's fees.

"I'm very pleased," Derr said. "I think justice was served today."

GROWING MARKET

TWA began issuing frequent-flyer awards in May 1981, Derr said. At that time, no policies were formulated concerning the transfer or sale of the awards. But when the airlines saw a growing market involving this procedure they added an amendment to the regulations, restricting the sale of such cer-

Symphonic Sounds

With talented hands and breath, the sound of saxophones is added to the music of the K-State Symphonic Wind Ensemble.

The music charges through the room as the musicians tap their feet to the conductor's rhythm. Perched on the edge of their seats, the players concentrate to make sure each note is right.

When a sweep of the baton signals the end, the musicians sigh and fall back into their chairs ready for a rest.

Conductor Stanley Finck, assistant professor of music, gives directions in musical language: "running eight notes, boom da dum ba, starting at the allegro, coming through like a wet Kleenex." And then the infamous, "again."

For the Symphonic Wind Ensemble, the intense practice results in a sound that is not like most band music, said Finck, who also directs the K-State marching and pep bands.

"I enjoy the different aspect of the music," said Paul Fibelkorn, sophomore in music education. "It's kind of a non-classical type of music — it's more 'bandish.'"

Finck said when he selects music for the band, he trys to appeal to a wide variety of audiences by choosing a wide variety of music.

"I try to pick music that the crowd wants to tap their feet to," he said. "Music that someone in the audience can say, 'Yeah, I know that.'

"I'm not concerned that every person likes every tune," he said. "I never plan for that to happen."

Finck has conducted the wind ensemble for the past three spring semesters. The fall band is directed by Al Cochran, instructor of music.

This year's selections for spring concerts include music from the Broadway play "Westside Story," written by Leonard Bernstein.

Also, the band is playing "Symphonic Movement" by Vaclav Nelhybel. Finck said the audience "may be hot or cold" on the piece.

"There's a lot of push and drive in the piece," he said.

'I try to pick music that the crowd wants to tap their feet to...Music that someone in the audience can say, 'Yeah, I know that." — Stanley Finck

"Symphonic Movement" uses the percussion to affect the sound of the music, Finck said.

The band will also play a new work called "Gallimaufry" by Guy Woolfenden, who often writes music for Shakespearean plays.

"It's a new work that's out, and I feel as a university band we should serve as a source for new music for area directors," he said. "So if they hear it they can say 'I really like this. I think I'll see what else (the composer) did.'"

The music not only appeals to most audiences, but also to the musicians.

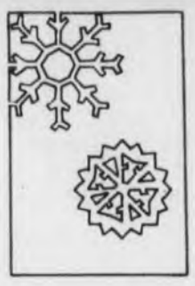
"It's 20th-century music," said Kim Walker, senior in music education. Walker, who plays the piccolo and flute, has been in the band for eight semesters.

"You can't get this kind of music in orchestra or any other conventional band," she said.

The ensemble is made up of about 40 musicians. Usually, wind ensembles have less, but Finck added more woodwind instruments such as clarinets and flutes to balance out the louder trombones and trumpets, he said.

"Usually, it is one instrument to a part, but we kind of stretch the definition of symphonic wind ensemble by doubling the numbers of clarinets and flutes from what there is usually," Finck said.

Enrollment in the class is open to all majors, but students must audition to be members. Finck said most semesters he does not turn many students down.



About half of the band is music majors. Others are students in other fields of study.

"I'm honored to be in it," said Anne

Chris Gooding, sophomore in bakery science and management, is reflected in the Rain trombone of David White, sophomore in music education, during a rehearsal this come week. The two trombone players, along with the rest of the ensemble, gave a performance Thursday night in McCain Auditorium.

Ir Krauss, freshman in agriculture education. This is her only music class.

Ed Geeding, senior in natural esource management, was majoring n music at The Wichita State Univerity before coming to K-State. Geeding is a percussionist who audioned for the band because of the hallenging contemporary music.

"I gave up music in 1980," he said. I was really burned out. But now, (the nsemble) satisfies my need to play music."

Music majors have several reasons or being in the symphonic band.

One is that they must enroll in a inimum of one ensemble each emester. They can pick from the wind nsemble, orchestra and concert and, Finck said.

Some choose the wind ensemble ecause it provides different types of music, others because they like workng under Finck, and others because hey like the atmosphere of the band.

"A lot of the people came from marching band in the fall," said Leona Unruh, freshman in music education. "It's like a hobby or an extracurricular class. They come here to play. It's kind of a release."

Unruh, who plays the trombone, said she likes the diversity of the band under the direction of Finck.

"It's challenging music. You get to play different music styles, from different eras and different composers," she said.

The band schedules two concerts a semester and also plays at University graduation, if weather permits the ceremony to be outside, Finck said.

This year the band will play a three-day tour of western Kansas March 25-27. The tour is sponsored by the J.D. Hanson Foundation, which provides money to bands to tour western Kansas, Finck said.

The band will perform only in high schools on the tour, except for a concert in Logan, Hanson's hometown.

The final semester concert will be a "Sousa Spectacular" in April.

Stanley Finck directs a rehearsal Thursday afternoon in preparation for their concert that night.

"Looking For a New Love" by Jody Watley.

Former Shalamar member, Jody Watley, is back and she's gunning for the pop charts.

During her work on the Band-Aid recording "Do They Know Its Christmas?," she hooked up with George Michael. The result was a duet on her first solo LP produced by two heavyweights Patrick Leonard (Madonna) and Nile Rodgers (Power Station).

Her first single "Looking for a New Love," is a hard-hitting "What Have You Done For Me Lately" Part II complete with husky voiced ad-libs and a you-done-me-wrong attitude.

Produced by former Prince protege Andre Cymone, it's got a simplified beat and a barrage of synthesizers to back it up.

A former Soul Train dancer, Watley does all her own moves and surprisingly, all by her lonesome. During the run of the three minutes she makes more costume changes than Diana Ross ever thought about. The song is a sure bet for chart action and it also shows Watley at her sassy, sexy best.

"Rapture" by Anita Baker

It's been a very big year for Baker. Following her Grammy win and the recent platinum certification of her album, she's back with her follow-up to "Sweet Love."

It's the title track and it couldn't have been easy picking a single from so many gems. The video was filmed entirely in black and white and in front of a very energetic audience.

True to her style of no excess, the clip was done very simply. An enthralled crowd, a theater stage, her back-up vocalists and band. No lasers, fog machines or fancy light shows, just Baker, a white dress and her fluid style.

A "balladeer" she calls herself, and here's hoping we hear more.

Judge orders halt to bogus plane ticket sales

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

SAN DIEGO — A scheme involving the questionable selling of frequent-flyer airline certificates has been brought to a halt.

A U.S. District Court judge on Monday ordered Eric S. Fuller, owner of a San Diego airline ticket brokerage firm, to pay more than $132,000 in damages to Trans World Airlines and a fine of $5,000 to the United States before noon Thursday.

The decree was a result of Fuller's violating an Oct. 15, 1986, injunction against his coupon brokerage company, which prohibited Fuller and his associates from "issuing, selling, or causing to be issued or sold tickets for travel on TWA."

At a previous hearing Fuller, owner of The Coupon Bank, La Jolla, Calif., was found in contempt of court Feb. 12 by Judge Howard B. Turrentine after it was determined Fuller's company had sold tickets for travel on TWA.

At the trial, it was revealed Coupon Bank was buying frequent-flyer certificates from individuals or travel agencies, then reselling the certificates as valid airline tickets to unsuspecting travelers.

Travelers who purchased the invalid tickets found it to be a problem when they were detained in countries overseas and not allowed to return to the United States with the invalid tickets.

QUESTIONS REMAIN

Still unresolved is whether the selling of frequent-flyer coupons is illegal. Although legal experts line up on both sides of the question, the U.S. attorney general and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are examining the Coupon Bank case, said James M. Derr, a Los Angeles attorney for TWA.

"Frequent-flyer tickets are promotional gifts," said a legal assistant for TWA in New York. "...we don't expect payment for them, but we mean for them to be used by the person they are issued to or their immediate families."

TWA lost millions of dollars in 1986 because Fuller purchased frequent-flyer rewards and sold them to customers who would have otherwise purchased a full-fare ticket, Derr said. The airline ended up flying the passengers for free while Fuller collected a discounted fare.

Testimony at the Feb. 9 hearing revealed Fuller had advertised for potential travelers, established contacts with the travelers, reserved the seat on the airline and set and collected the amount for the ticket.

Fuller's scheme included buying out travel agencies then using the newly acquired agents' stock to issue airline tickets. By maintaining a non-ownership relationship with each of the travel agencies, Fuller contended he was not in violation of the injunction because his companies were not actually issuing the tickets, but paying someone else to.

Judge Turrentine did not agree.

"Like Dorothy's encounter with the Great Oz, the court need only peer behind the thin veil of the defendant's referral mechanism to discern whose voice and hands controlled the transactions and who stood to profit by its machinations," he said.

Turrentine said he thought he was being "very reasonable" with his sentence. If, by noon Friday, Fuller has failed to comply with the order handed down Monday establishing the fines, Turrentine said Fuller will be sent to jail.

"With a violation as blatant as this, something has to be done," he said.

Damages TWA requested were a total of the dollar amount of tickets sold by Fuller's companies after the injunction was issued, plus the attorney's fees.

"I'm very pleased," Derr said. "I think justice was served today."

GROWING MARKET

TWA began issuing frequent-flyer awards in May 1981, Derr said. At that time, no policies were formulated concerning the transfer or sale of the awards. But when the airlines saw a growing market involving this procedure they added an amendment to the regulations, restricting the sale of such cerdone with a large crowd of dancers. The band is clad in blue and shows off not a lot of fancy footwork, but some nice, dynamic body moves instead.

Full of hard power, the song also features a short but sweet, screeching guitar solo. Their sound is tighter than earlier works and more rounded. They know exactly where they're going with their melodies. Ultimately, the energy in the video is carried off by lead singer Renee Diggs and she does it well even with the volume turned down.

Diggs proves easily that if allowed, she's the vocal powerhouse equivalent of Patti Labelle and Jennifer Holiday.

As one of the few bands today with a female lead, she takes the song and suggestive lyrics and injects a firey power that doesn't cool off until the end of the clip. Let's see Joan Jett or Chrissie Hynde pull that off.

As most fans know, this group has been around for a long time and finally they're getting some of the airplay they deserve.

ing the Coupon Bank case, said James M. Derr, a Los Angeles attorney for TWA.

"Frequent-flyer tickets are promotional gifts," said a legal assistant for TWA in New York. "...we don't expect payment for them, but we mean for them to be used by the person they are issued to or their immediate families."

TWA lost millions of dollars in 1986 because Fuller purchased frequent-flyer rewards and sold them to customers who would have otherwise purchased a full-fare ticket, Derr said. The airline ended up flying the passengers for free while Fuller collected a discounted fare.

Testimony at the Feb. 9 hearing revealed Fuller had advertised for potential travelers, established contacts with the travelers,

Fuller's scheme included buying out travel agencies then using the newly acquired agents' stock to issue airline tickets. By maintaining a non-ownership relationship with each of the travel agencies, Fuller contended he was not in violation of the injunction because his companies were not actually issuing the tickets, but paying someone else to.

Judge Turrentine did not agree.

"Like Dorothy's encounter with the Great Oz, the court need only peer behind the thin veil of the defendant's referral mechanism to discern whose voice and hands controlled the transactions and who stood to profit by its machinations," he said.

Turrentine said he thought he was being "very reasonable" with his sentence. If, by noon Friday, Fuller has failed to comply with the fines, Turrentine said Fuller will be sent to jail.

"With a violation as blatant as this, something has to be done," he said.

Damages TWA requested were a total of the dollar amount of tickets sold by Fuller's companies after the injunction was issued, plus the attorney's fees.

"I'm very pleased," Derr said. "I think justice was served today."

GROWING MARKET

TWA began issuing frequent-flyer awards in May 1981, Derr said. At that time, no policies were formulated concerning the transfer or sale of the awards. But when the airlines saw a growing market involving this procedure they added an amendment to the regulations, restricting the sale of such cer-

Judge orders halt to bogus plane ticket sales

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

SAN DIEGO — A scheme involving the questionable selling of frequent-flyer airline certificates has been brought to a halt.

A U.S. District Court judge on Monday ordered Eric S. Fuller, owner of a San Diego airline ticket brokerage firm, to pay more than $132,000 in damages to Trans World Airlines and a fine of $5,000 to the United States before noon Thursday.

The decree was a result of Fuller's violating an Oct. 15, 1986, injunction against his coupon brokerage company, which prohibited Fuller and his associates from "issuing, selling, or causing to be issued or sold tickets for travel on TWA."

At a previous hearing Fuller, owner of The Coupon Bank, La Jolla, Calif., was found in contempt of court Feb. 12 by Judge Howard B. Turrentine after it was determined Fuller's company had sold tickets for travel on TWA.

At the trial, it was revealed Coupon Bank was buying frequent-flyer certificates from individuals or travel agencies, then reselling the certificates as valid airline tickets to unsuspecting travelers.

Travelers who purchased the invalid tickets found it to be a problem when they were detained in countries overseas and not allowed to return to the United States with the invalid tickets.

QUESTIONS REMAIN

Still unresolved is whether the selling of frequent-flyer coupons is illegal. Although legal experts line up on both sides of the question, the U.S. attorney general and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are examining the Coupon Bank case, said James M. Derr, a Los Angeles attorney for TWA.

"Frequent-flyer tickets are promotional gifts," said a legal assistant for TWA in New York. "...we don't expect payment for them, but we mean for them to be used by the person they are issued to or their immediate families."

TWA lost millions of dollars in 1986 because Fuller purchased frequent-flyer rewards and sold them to customers who would have otherwise purchased a full-fare ticket, Derr said. The airline ended up flying the passengers for free while Fuller collected a discounted fare.

Testimony at the Feb. 9 hearing revealed Fuller had advertised for potential travelers, established contacts with the travelers, reserved the seat on the airline and set and collected the amount for the ticket.

Fuller's scheme included buying out travel agencies then using the newly acquired agents' stock to issue airline tickets. By maintaining a non-ownership relationship with each of the travel agencies, Fuller contended he was not in violation of the injunction because his companies were not actually issuing the tickets, but paying someone else to.

Judge Turrentine did not agree.

"Like Dorothy's encounter with the Great Oz, the court need only peer behind the thin veil of the defendant's referral mechanism to discern whose voice and hands controlled the transactions and who stood to profit by its machinations," he said.

Turrentine said he thought he was being "very reasonable" with his sentence. If, by noon Friday, Fuller has failed to comply with the order handed down Monday establishing the fines, Turrentine said Fuller will be sent to jail.

"With a violation as blatant as this, something has to be done," he said.

Damages TWA requested were a total of the dollar amount of tickets sold by Fuller's companies after the injunction was issued, plus the attorney's fees.

"I'm very pleased," Derr said. "I think justice was served today."

Rainy weather was a reminder for students walking to class Monday that spring is here, but forecasters say winter may make a snowy comeback today. Monday's rain was part of a storm delivering snow, hail, 70 mph winds and tornadoes to western Kansas.

Intense spring storm hits Kansas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A spring blizzard brought life to a standstill Monday in parts of western Kansas, knocking out power, closing schools and businesses and making travel virtually impossible.

Winds in excess of 70 mph blew heavy snow in a straight line and reduced visibility to zero. The strong winds blew down power lines already weighed down by heavy snow.

"We're in a blizzard. You can't see a block," Willma Baker, a Scott City weather watcher, said Monday.

The National Weather Service said the snowfall was difficult to measure because of the intense winds. By mid-afternoon the snow measured about 6 inches at Hill City and Hays in northwestern Kansas to 3 to 4 inches at Liberal and Dodge City in the southwest.

The National Weather Service issued a blizzard warning for southwest and west-central Kansas and said accumulations of up to 12 inches of snow were possible Monday night.

The Kansas National Guard called out a dozen members in four areas to perform blizzard-related activities:

—Five guardsmen were activated at Garden City to operate a tracked command post carrier to pick up children at five snowbound rural schools and take them to a shelter because authorities could not get them to their homes.

—Three guardsmen using a four-wheel-drive vehicle were picking up medical personnel at their homes in Norton and taking them to medical facilities.

—Two guardsmen with a four-wheel-drive pickup were transporting medical personnel to medical facilities in Dodge City.

—Two guardsmen at Hays were activated to take a portable electrical generator to Ellis for an emergency shelter in St. Mary's School in Ellis.

Classes at Fort Hays State University were closed at noon. Three Air Midwest flights at Garden City were canceled because of poor visibility. Power was restored in the north part of Garden City after a 90-minute outage Monday.

Many highways in the Garden City and Dodge City areas were closed because of poor visibility, and the National Guard Armory in Garden City was opened in case of stranded motorists.

A 60-foot radio tower at station KSCB in Liberal was blown over by winds gusting to more than 65 mph. The wind also blew over trees that hit power lines and caused outages in the southwest Kansas community, forcing the closing of the National Beef packing plant.

The most severe power outage problem appeared to be in the Norton-Phillipsburg area of northwestern Kansas, where power lines and poles were snapped by the combination of heavy snow and strong winds.

House committee gives fresh hope to FACTS

Funds uncertain

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee Monday endorsed a Senate-passed bill that would continue the state's major program to help financially distressed farmers in existence for at least three more years.

Unanimous voice approval of the bill followed testimony by spokesmen for farm groups. Each one urged the committee to keep the program going at the strongest possible funding level.

The Farm Assistance, Counseling and Training Referral Program, better known as the FACTS program, was started by the 1985 Legislature on a trial basis and will automatically end July 1 unless lawmakers act to extend its life.

The bill, which was sent to the House floor for debate by Monday's action of the Appropriations Committee, would keep the program going until July 1, 1990.

Funding of the FACTS program will come in a separate appropriations bill, which is likely to spark the biggest debate. Limited state ability to finance the program at its present level is causing concern that its effectiveness may be jeopardized.

In addition, a $55,000 federal grant which paid for the Rural Employment Assistance Program under FACTS was not renewed.

The program, which is operated through the state Department of Agriculture and the Extension Service at Kansas State University, provides eligible farmers with legal services, farm management advice, financial planning, employment services and support counseling.

To be eligible, they must be primarily engaged in farming, ranching or agriculture-related businesses and in jeopardy of being displaced from their occupation if they don't receive some help.

Other than changing the date the program will end, the bill makes only one change in the 2-year-old law creating the FACTS program. It would make it permissive rather than mandatory that the secretary of agriculture contract with private or corporate law firms for legal services for farmers.

Roger McCollister of Kansas Legal Services told the House Appropriations Committee the program "has done exactly what the Legislature intended it to do: It saves farmers."

For the $160,000 the Legislature spent on legal services in the current fiscal year, McCollister said, "The state has gotten great return on its money."

Ivan Wyatt, president of Kansas Farmers Union, said the program "is unique in that it has exceeded all expectations."

Frank Dorsey, chairman of the Interfaith Rural Life Committee, said people in western Kansas "say it is the only source of help and assistance to them."

Dorsey said the legal services provided by FACTS is especially critical, because in some smaller communities "the lenders have hired all the lawyers" and only the FACTS legal assistance is available to farmers.

Ron Schneider of the Kansas Rural Center told the committee adequate funding for legal services is a must.

"It is my opinion this Legislature cannot find another program as good as this one for the money being spent," he said.

Bill Fuller, representing the Kansas Farm Bureau, said the program "has maximized the availability of the state's resources for Kansas farmers and ranchers."

Captors demand trade of allegedly ill hostage

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslem kidnappers said Monday an American hostage is so ill he may die soon and offered to trade him for 100 Arab prisoners held in Israel.

In Tel Aviv, the chief aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Israel would not consider the kidnappers' demand. "Israel does not negotiate with terrorists," said Avi Pazner.

In other developments Monday, another terrorist group said it had canceled plans to kill a French captive. Iran's official radio said the group had kidnapped Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, but reported later that the group denied it.

A handwritten statement in Arabic delivered to the Beirut newspaper An-Nahar said Alann Steen, 47, of Boston "may die within 10 days" and demanded that the United States persuade Israel to make the exchange.

It was signed by Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, which holds Steen, two other Americans and an Indian. All were teachers at Beirut University College when they were abducted from the west Beirut campus in January.

In Washington, White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said: "We hold the captors responsible for the safety of the hostages and we will not pressure any third parties into giving in to terrorists' demands."

The Revolutionary Justice Organization released a videotape of French hostage Jean-Louis Normandin, 35. It said plans to kill him Tuesday had been canceled because of appeals from Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah and Greek Catholic Archbishop Hilarion Capudji.

Fadlallah is the most influential Shiite Moslem cleric with Lebanon's Iranian-backed militant factions. Capudji was born in Syria and has close ties to the Palestine Liberation Organization of Yassir Arafat.

In its statement, the group holding the four college teachers said: "We announce that American spy Alann Steen has fallen sick. His physical condition may deteriorate and he may die within 10 days as doctors who advised care for his condition have said.

His brother Bruce said in Stockton, Calif.: "I had no idea he was sick. As far as I know he was in good health.

"Last time I saw him he was fine. The original picture I saw of him in captivity looked like he was OK, but then I saw one just a week ago, and it did look like he had lost some weight."

The statement said the group would draw up the list of names of prisoners it wants freed along with a detailed plan for the swap.

Canadian avalanche kills 7 skiers

BLUE RIVER, British Columbia — An avalanche swept down a mountain Monday morning, killing seven members of a ski party that had been brought to the remote area by helicopter, authorities said.

The bodies were recovered Monday afternoon and were being taken to Clearwater, said Constable Terry Wilde of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

No identities were released pending positive identification and notification of relatives, he said.

A total of 12 people, including a guide, had been on a tour run by Mike Wiegle Helicopter Skiing, according to another RCMP spokesman in Clearwater, about 60 miles south of this tiny community.

The guide and four others managed to outrace the avalanche.

A Wiegle spokeswoman said she had no details of the accident.

Man with bomb killed by police

HUTCHINSON — A man who came to the Reno County Courthouse with what police said were explosives strapped to his body was shot and killed Monday as he walked away from the building after a 90-minute standoff.

J.D. Jennings, 32, of Nickerson, was scheduled for trial Monday morning on a charge of resisting arrest, authorities said. The courthouse was evacuated after Jennings told two detectives who confronted him at the door as he arrived for the trial that he had a bomb attached to his body.

Tim Chambers, the county prosecuting attorney, said that as Jennings attempted to leave about 11 a.m., a police officer stationed across the street on the roof of the Sears, Roebuck and Co. store shot and killed him.

"I think the matter was handled very professionally and I don't think it could have been done any other way," said Chambers. He said the decision to shoot Jennings was made jointly by himself, Sheriff Jim Fountain and Hutchinson Police Chief Jack Heidebrecht.

"This decision was made strictly in the interest of public safety," said Heidebrecht. "We could not let this person leave that area with those explosives on his body."

Attorney warns about legal raffles

TOPEKA — Lawmakers were warned Monday about legalizing raffles by non-profit organizations by a state attorney who said it would create problems similar to those experienced with illegal bingo activities.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee is considering a proposed constitutional amendment which would allow voters in the next general election to decide whether to legalize gambling on raffles and lotteries run by non-profit groups. No action was taken Monday.

The amendment has been sought by groups wanting to raise money for their social, religious and fraternal organizations.

"A lot of people thought it would be a simple thing to allow bingo," said Phil Wilkes, an attorney in the Department of Revenue's bingo enforcement unit.

"I think you'll find some of the same problems with these raffles. You'll end up needing an enforcement unit."

Wilkes said there has been a lot of problems with people trying to make a living off of bingo by setting up their own non-profit organizations.

Farmer insists beavers must stay

RICHMOND, Mass. — Despite a pile of legal briefs "a foot high and growing," a farmer insists a bunch of Philadelphia railroad lawyers aren't going to run three beaver families from his land, not by a dam site.

"The little fellows have kits in the lodges now and if I cut the dam and let the water out they will die," farmer John Foster said Monday.

"The Philadelphia lawyers are trying to bulldoze this little farmer, this little hillbilly. But anyone who knows me knows I'm not going to change my mind," he said.

"I said those little fellows are going to stay, and they are going to stay," said Foster, who made one concession Monday to the legal onslaught that began in October. He hired lawyer David Katz.

"Had to, when they took me to federal court," he said.

The beavers' dam created a 30-acre pond, and Conrail officials fear spring rains and a quick thaw of the winter's record snowfall could flood and damage the tracks.

The railroad lawyers asked a federal judge in Springfield last week to order Foster to let Conrail workers on his property.

Entertainer's son feared dead

MARCH AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Dean Paul Martin, the son of entertainer Dean Martin who carved out his own identity as an actor and rock star, was the pilot of a fighter jet believed to have crashed on a snowy mountain, officials said Monday.

Martin, 35, an Air National Guard captain, and weapons officer Capt. Ramon Ortiz were aboard the F4-C Phantom when it disappeared from radar near the top of 11,500-foot Mount San Gorgonio about 10 minutes after takeoff Saturday, said Air National Guard Maj. Steve Mensik.

Efforts by civilian and military planes to locate the missing plane in the San Bernardino National Forest, 70 miles east of Los Angeles, were unsuccessful through midday Monday.

"We are looking for a needle in a haystack," said Mensik, who said snowdrifts were 8 feet deep on the mountain, the highest in Southern California.

Asked if Martin and Ortiz, 30, could have bailed out when trouble developed on the bombing practice run that began at this base east of Los Angeles, Mensik replied, "We don't know if they punched out or not."

Haig intends to pursue presidency

NEW YORK — Alexander M. Haig Jr., declaring his intention to run for president, said Monday that he offered leadership to carry the United States into the 1990s with prosperity and in peace.

The former secretary of state and NATO commander said in remarks prepared for delivery to supporters that he would formally declare his candidacy Tuesday for the Republican presidential nomination.

The retired general, who once declared, "I am in control here in the White House," made leadership the theme of his speech to Committee for America, the political action committee he heads.

"A president leads when he understands that the presidency depends on three pillars of trust:

"Trust that he acts in the national interest.

"Trust that he speaks the truth as he knows it.

"Trust that he offers direction and hope to overcome the challenges of the day — that he has a vision."

In an apparent reference to the Iran-Contra controversy dogging President Reagan, Haig said, "A president leads when he understands that openly communicated policies, even if secretly arrived at, are the only policies that merit enduring support."

Community college measure stalls in Senate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A proposal to revamp state governance of higher education institutions by placing Kansas' 19 community colleges under the state Board of Regents needs further study before being implemented, lawmakers were told Monday.

The Senate Education Committee heard from a variety of groups who said a summer study panel should investigate the idea of removing community colleges from the umbrella of the state Board of Education and placing them in the same league with state-funded universities. No action was taken Monday.

"It would serve no useful purpose," said Bill Musick, president of the state Board of Education, which governs the 304 school districts and the community colleges. "We see no reason why this would improve the efficiency of the community colleges."

The bill was touted by supporters as a key step in revitalizing the focus of higher education in Kansas. It is designed to eliminate duplication of courses offered by post-secondary institutions and provide better coordination of the state's total program of post-high school education.

However, those affiliated with community colleges are strongly opposed to the idea and tried to buy time by urging an interim committee study the bill and make a recommendation to the 1988 Legislature.

Opponents see the bill as diminishing the local autonomy of the junior colleges and others fear it represents the first step toward admitting Washburn University of Topeka into the state regents system.

Jerry Gee, a faculty member at the Dodge City community college and a faculty representative, said his group opposed the idea and suggested more study of the proposal is needed.

"This is a quick fix measure for a more complicated problem," Gee said.

The Kansas Council on Vocational Education and the Kansas National Education Association both recommended lawmakers study the idea in more depth before passing such a bill.

James Irhig, president of the Cloud County Community College in Concordia, said the Kansas Association of Community Colleges wanted the Legislature to "defer action until an interim study looks at the bill."

"We do not intend to bury our heads in the sand on this issue or avoid it with another study," Irhig said. "But this is an important issue and some serious questions need to be answered."

Bryce Roderick, a trustee of the Garden City community college, said the state organization for trustees opposes the bill because it will result in "a gradual erosion of local control."

Under the bill, the nine-member Board of Regents would remain intact, but divide into two committees: one to study the budgets and policies of the six state-funded universities, the medical school veterinary medicine school and technical institute and the other to oversee the 19 community colleges and Washburn.

It also keeps direct control of the community colleges and Washburn vested in their own boards of trustees and board of regents. Supervision of the vocational-technical programs would remain in the hands of the Board of Education, pending a summer study by the Legislature.

House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, said the bill is needed to "coordinate higher education in this state." He said it does not jeopardize local control and power over the community colleges. And he rejected the idea the bill paves the way for Washburn to enter the state system.

Norman Jeter of Hays and Richard Reinhardt of Erie, both members of the Board of Regents, also testified in support of the bill.

"The Board of Regents supports the underlying concept of improved coordination of higher education in Kansas," Jeter said, noting the board did have some concerns with the bill.

"This bill goes a step further in dividing the board into two committees, which we feel could seriously distort the ultimate goal. Dividing the board into two committees could invite polarization and parochialism and work against the goal of coordination of higher education."

House to debate school district finance bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A House-Senate conference committee reached agreement Monday on three minor provisions in a school finance bill, then scheduled another meeting for late today after the House has debated how much money to spend on elementary and secondary education next year.

A heated floor fight was expected over how much new state money to put into general state aid to Kansas' 304 local school districts and how much to spend on transportation and special education costs.

That issue was to be decided when the House debated an appropriations bill that includes money for the school districts for the 1987-88 school year.

"Until we know how the money is going to be spent, I don't think the conference committee can finish its work," said Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, chairwoman of both the conference committee and the House Education Committee.

State aid to local school districts was cut by $17.27 million in January when the Legislature trimmed Fiscal Year 1987 spending by nearly $60 million at the request of Gov. Mike Hayden.

Reason for the cuts was a revenue shortfall that would have left the state treasury with a $13 million deficit on July 1 if the reductions had not been made.

Hayden recommended in January putting $22.27 million new money into state general aid to school districts, making up the $17.27 million cut and adding $5 million.

However, the House Appropriations Committee decided to put $7.67 million of Hayden's new money into full funding of transportation costs and 95 percent funding of special education costs. That reduced the amount of new general state aid money to $14.6 million — or $2.6 million less than the school districts were supposed to get this year.

The big issues faced by the school finance conference committee center on how to spend that $7.67 million — distributing it as general state aid or as additional special ed-transportation aid — and how to treat the big school districts.

Kansas bankers favor branch facilities

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas must have statewide branch banking by acquisition to allow the state and its communities to adequately compete in a complex world economy, spokesmen for the Kansas Bankers Association told a House committee Monday.

"We must realize that we no longer are operating in an economic vacuum here in the state of Kansas," Jim Maag, a lobbyist for the bankers' group told the House Commercial and Financial Institutions Committee.

Maag and two other KBA officials testified in support of a bill that would amend Kansas long-standing ban on branch banking.

The measure goes far beyond a limited branch banking bill the Legislature passed last year allowing failed or failing banks in small one-bank towns to be purchased and operated as branches when no bidders can be found to operate them independently.

Under this year's measure, the only real prohibition that would remain on branch banking would be that banks would have to purchase branches outside their hometowns instead of starting up branches from scratch. The Senate passed the bill March 2 on a vote of 29-8.

Hearings on the proposal were scheduled to continue later this week, when opponents including spokesmen for the Kansas Independent Bankers Association were expected to testify.

During Monday's hearing, KBA President Richard D. Nichols of McPherson began the organization's presentation by reading letters a number of Herndon residents had sent the State Banking Board, urging establishment of a branch bank in their town.

Herndon has been without a bank since Aug. 14, 1985, when the State Bank of Herndon failed. However, Rep. Fred Gatlin, R-Atwood, reminded Nichols that Herndon remains eligible for a branch under terms of the 1986 branch banking law.

"To say this bill is needed in this particular case is a great misstatement of the facts," Gatlin said.

However, Nichols and Maag said the letters were submitted merely to demonstrate the need for banking services in small communities across the state.

"Already, many Kansans and some entire communities, as you well know, have been left without banking services due to bank failures and a continuation of these problems, is an unfortunate reality," Nichols said.

Contra-linked firm gets federal bailout

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — State Department officials, citing White House concern, bypassed normal procedures in 1985 to bail out a financially strapped company that was aiding the Nicaraguan Contras, a department memo shows.

The company, International Business Communications Inc., had non-competitive State Department contracts to publicize the Contra cause in the United States.

During the same period, the company also was involved in funneling privately raised money to the Contras.

The State Department memo, obtained by The Associated Press, said an "emergency payment" of about $13,000 to International Business Communications was "of utmost importance, not just to the department, but to the White House and the NSC (National Security Council)."

IBC is a public relations firm that has "apparently been involved in the funneling of money to secret Swiss bank accounts" used in aiding the Contra rebels, according to Rep. Dante B. Fascell, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

The State Department memo reveals the Reagan administration's interest in IBC at a crucial time for the Contras.

This interest flowed from two parallel developments between January and April 1985. First, U.S. government aid to the Contras had run out and "elements of the NSC staff focused their efforts on strategies for repackaging the Contra program to increase support on Capitol Hill," according to the Tower commission.

At the same time, Lt. Col. Oliver North, the NSC staff member who was later fired, was involved with secret arms sales to Iran and aid to the rebels. He also was working on contingency plans to continue private assistance should the aid package fail.

A report last week by Fascell's Foreign Affairs Committee said IBC and one of its principals had six non-competitive contracts with the State Department between 1984 and 1986.

During some of that period, the firm also was retained by Washington fund-raiser Carl "Spitz" Channell to help conduct a pro-Contra public relations campaign and funnel privately raised money to the Contras. Channell associates have said that as much as $3 million in private aid was given to IBC for humanitarian aid to the Contras.

The State Department memo from Frank Gardner, then an official of the department's Office of Public Diplomacy for Latin America and the Caribbean, was addressed to an official in the comptroller's office.

"This is to request the usual timing of 25 to 30 days be set aside to make an emergency payment of $12,858 to IBC in response to its bill dated 4-11-85," said the memo.

"This action is of utmost importance, not just to the department, but to the White House, and the NSC so that IBC, which finds itself temporarily in dire financial straits, may have funds in days ahead to intensify its efforts...on behalf of the president's Easter peace proposal for Nicaragua."

Reagan's proposal was to provide the rebels with non-lethal equipment unless the Sandinista government entered into serious negotiations with the Contras on national reconciliation.

Congressional investigators, who declined to be identified by name, said they have obtained State Department records showing the first payment under the contract was made April 22, 1985, even though the commitment was not formally approved until April 30.

All told, seven payments of $12,858 were made under the $90,000 contract, records show.

A House Foreign Affairs Committee report said the six contracts to IBC and a principal of the firm, Frank Gomez, totaled more than $419,000.

North, Poindexter blatantly ignore duty

PATTI PAXSON
Collegian Columnist

While we were all on spring break gladly and willingly losing our minds at assorted vacation spots, the House and Senate Iran-Contra committee members were working overtime losing their minds as well.

Yes, folks, deep from within the foul and malevolent muck and murk that we have come to know as "Irangate" there emerges still more travesties of justice. Last Wednesday, the House and Senate Iran-Contra committees approved a program that would grant limited immunity to former national security adviser Vice Adm. John Poindexter and former National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver North.

Under the limited immunity program, North and Poindexter would not have to publicly testify until at least mid-June. This 90-day time span would give special prosecutor Lawrence E. Walsh time to gather evidence independent of the closed-hearing congressional testimonies which North and Poindexter will be asked to give as early as May 2. The limited immunity program would not allow the special prosecutor to use testimony from the closed hearings against North and Poindexter. However, evidence gathered independently of the closed testimonies could be used against the two men.

The actual granting of immunity will not be made for at least a month or two, thus giving Walsh time to find evidence which quite possibly could support indictments. If evidence is found, it would be sealed by a court to ensure that it had been gathered before and without the assistance of the immunized congressional testimonies of North and Poindexter.

It is being said by the powers that be that the immunity plan virtually assures testimonies will come spewing forth from the two men in question. Indeed, chances are excellent that North and Poindexter will testify if they know their words will not incriminate them. However, they will not be exempt from prosecution if Walsh succeeds in scraping up the dirt they left behind.

This is all clearly a huge lot of horse manure, strategically spread over a blatant disregard for one tiny fact that seems to have been overlooked in this whole fiasco: North and Poindexter have a strict and uncompromising responsibility to the United States as men in uniform.

Being in the military certainly does not strip North and Poindexter of their constitutional rights. These two men, though, have clearly not fulfilled their primary responsibility — the responsiblility to their country. By tap dancing around the truth and using the Fifth Amendment as a vehicle to cart them far away from the prosecution they know is inevitable, North and Poindexter have successfully forced a frustrated Congress to give them the slack of rope that will save them rather than hang them.

It is deplorable that they, as leading military members, would embarrass the whole of America by not being responsible for their actions, thus bringing degradation upon the American military uniform. As military members, they are obligated to their country WITHOUT EXCEPTION. This is made clear in the oath that they took as well as in the laws that guide military members — the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

It is my belief that North and Poindexter never should have been allowed to side-step their obligations for this long. Incredible amounts of time, money and man-hours have been spent watching these two renegades stutter and stammer about nothing. Because of the cowardice of North and Poindexter, the president is looking dumber than ever, Congress is spitting bullets and the American people will choke if they again have to hear Ollie and his partner-in-crime say, "I take the Fifth."

Perhaps it is a bit severe to suggest that President Reagan, as commander in chief of the armed forces, should have ordered North and Poindexter — after they first began to dissent — to testify as to their exact involvement in Irangate. Severe maybe, appropriate definitely.

North and Poindexter are no different than any other military member in that they play by the same set of rules every private, seaman or airman does. If, for example, a young private declares to his commander that he is a conscientious objector, in so doing the private has abandoned a major responsibility as a military member. The commander then is required to order the private to carry and, if necessary, to fire a weapon. If the private chooses to disobey the order by still refusing to adhere to his obligation to bear arms, then appropriate administrative discipline and discharge is arranged for the private.

North and Poindexter deserve no special treatment from the president or Congress, especially because of the enormity and seriousness of Irangate. If the president had ordered them to testify, I am confident they would have. Disobeyng the order would simply add prosecution on top of prosecution for them.

These renegades have clearly abandoned their obligation to their country. Why should their country bend over backward to protect — and thus perpetuate — their obvious disregard for truth, justice and national responsibility?

Gadhafi's new threats not wholly convincing

After months of exile following the U.S. bombing raid on his country, Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi has re-emerged fighting mad and full of threats. While this news is hardly startling, the nature of his latest threats is potentially chilling.

During an interview on "NBC Nightly News," Gadhafi said he would deploy Soviet missiles — possibly nuclear — on Libyan soil if the United States renews aggression against the North African nation. Furthermore, he warned that Libya may join the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact military alliance.

This threat represents another form of one-upmanship similar to the ultimatum he delivered to the United States about not crossing his much-touted "line of death." Shortly after that warning was issued, and while Libya was continuing with its self-acknowledged sponsorship of terrorism, the United States elected to bomb the nation, and the warning about the line of death went up along with the smoke from the bombs.

Although Gadhafi's tough words then were obviously a bluff, it's not apparent if his latest threats are to be regarded in the same vein. Even if they are sincere, Gadhafi still has to convince at least one other party that he is serious: the Soviets.

That won't be easy. There's no evidence to believe the Soviets would want to deal with someone as unpredictable and potentially deadly as Gadhafi, no matter what the benefits. Indeed, having some control in the vital Persian Gulf region would be appealing, but at what price?

Any attempts to block the Persian Gulf, the world's oil lifeline, would surely draw an immediate and no-nonsense response from the United States and a conflict would be inevitable. Are the Soviet Union and the other Warsaw Pact nations prepared to back such a liability as Gadhafi?

Gadhafi can say he will turn to the Soviets. He can say that Libya will officially turn communist and become allied with the Soviet Union. The question is, will the Warsaw Pact nations have him?

Gadhafi has some convincing to do.

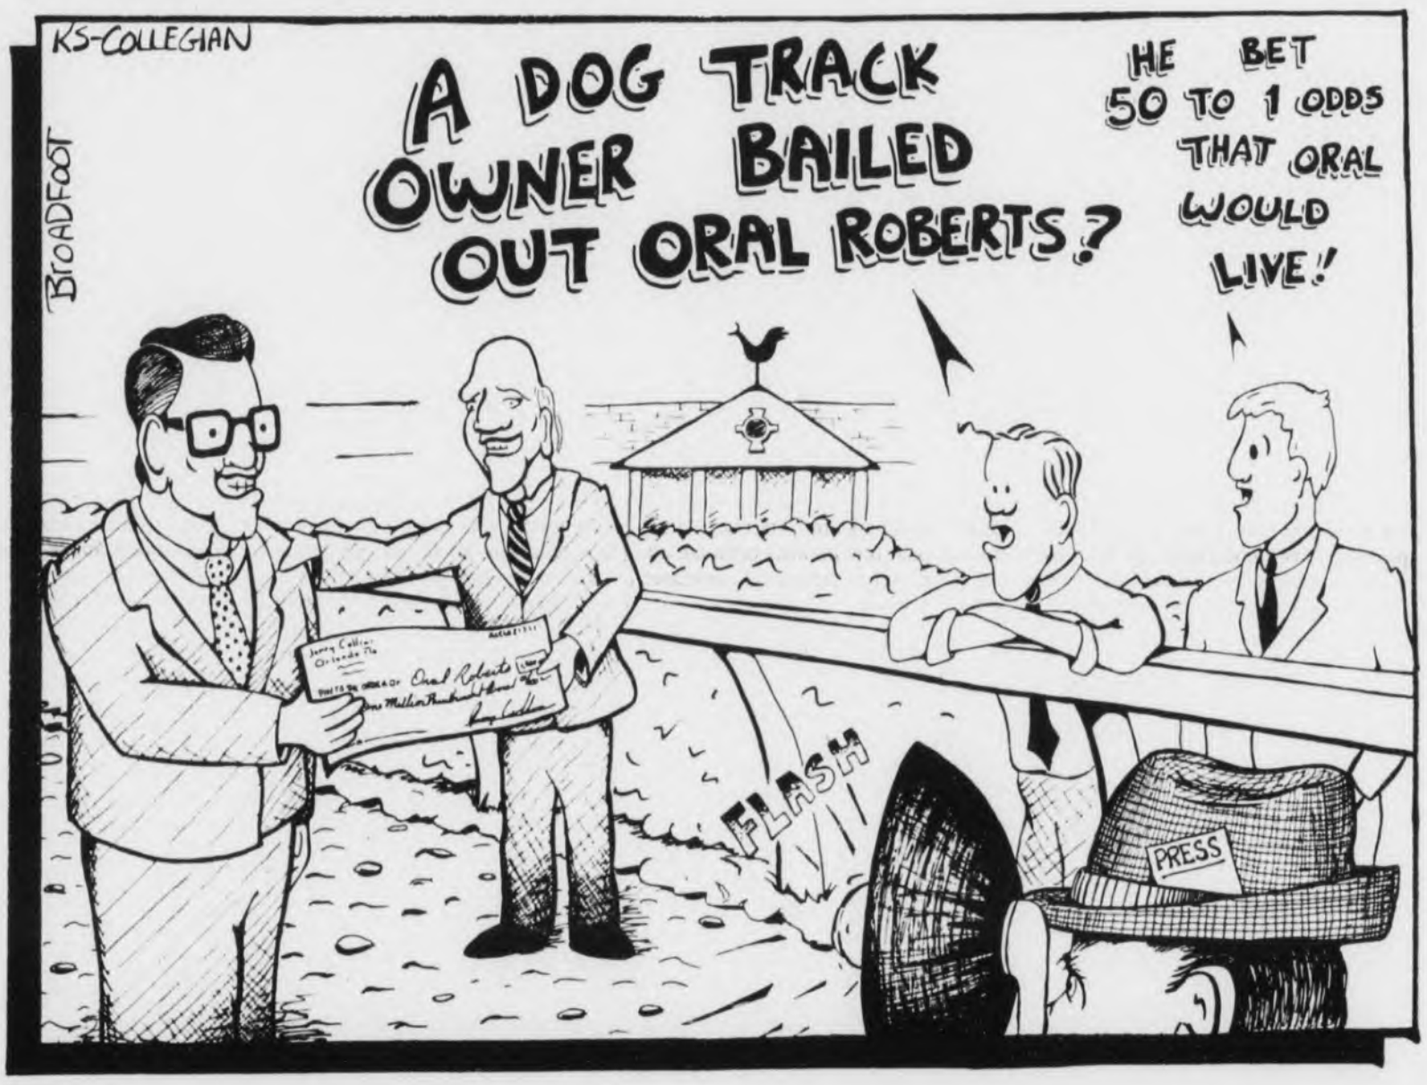
Common sense is vital during stormy season

Although the weather is still in its schizophrenic seasonal change, it's certain severe weather will soon descend upon the area. After all, it is now officially spring and this is Kansas. Such a combination usually portends violent weather.

By living in Kansas, it is easy to become immune to tornadoes and other violent storms. It is also easy to believe they will always hit anywhere but where you are at the time.

But make no mistake: Tornadoes and severe thunderstorms can be deadly, and even with all the advanced technology available to meteorologists, there is not always enough time to give the vital advance warning that will save lives.

During this potentially violent season, common sense must be the rule. Don't underestimate a storm and don't make foolish decisions. Above all, be alert.



The life you save may be your own.

Reverse snobbery

Editor,

Re: Patrick Muir's column "Real students don't go to KU" in the March 9 Collegian.

Greetings from yet another left-wing liberal who has run out of country clubs to join and proms to attend. Yes, I'm just another decadent public transportation freak under the delusion that Harvard is located in Lawrence under the guise of the University of Kansas. You know that school — the great bastion of overindulgence and Eastern mimicry.

I just wanted to congratulate Muir on his refreshing piece on KU. It always renews my faith in journalism in general and K-State in particular when I read such well-researched, unbiased and useful writing. Muir will go far. I fully expect to see his byline in the supermarket checkout some day under "Satan Worshiper Gives Birth to Half-Goat, Half-Human." He certainly deserves a chance to write for a publication of that caliber.

If it weren't for Muir, I wouldn't have known that all us Jayhawks graduated from Johnson County. Stupid me. I believed everyone when they told me they were from Salina, Wichita, Tulsa, Chicago or St. Louis. Now I know they're lying to cover their lack of courage to strike out on their own. Imagine my parents' surprise when I told them we were really from Johnson — not Dickinson — County.

If it weren't for Muir, I would have kept going blindly to the Wheel and kept pretending to enjoy myself. If he would, perhaps he could elaborate and tell me where else I'm not having fun so I can quit wasting my time. Can you believe I actually thought I was enjoying myself? Well, I feel pretty foolish!

If it weren't for Muir, I'd still be under the delusion that I was putting myself through school. He cleared that up. I obviously can't do that because K-State is the only place where one can be independent. Another illusion shattered.

Thanks, Pat, for opening my eyes. I thought I was a "real" student, but you've shown me the way. I'm a journalism major also. Unfortunately, I didn't have the wisdom to go to K-State. I only saw that KU ranked second in the nation in journalism and believed it! I didn't realize I was really going for the basketball. My God! Shouldn't I have bought tickets or something?

Sarcasm finally aside, I wish to inform Patrick Muir and K-State that KU is proud of its steadily increasing enrollment. Perhaps the only change K-State needs to make is in its hostile attitude and reverse snobbery. Not many can stomach it. To those who have, I say congratulations. You've obviously avoided Patrick Muir.

Try involvement

Editor,

Re: Steve Milligan's letter to the editor in the March 10 Collegian.

First, what is the purpose of attacking a harmless column that simply encourages students to get involved? Besides the fact Milligan obviously has a personal vendetta, he has also misstated the facts.

As an off-campus, non-greek senator, I can speak from experience that you don't have to know the people in Senate or other organizations to get involved. Last year, I didn't know anyone in Student Senate, yet I applied for an at-large position on the Senate Operations Standing Committee and got it.

That experience encouraged me to run for Senate this year. However, I'm far from an exception to the rule, as there are many others who get involved this same way.

Second, to someone who knows little or nothing about Student Governing Association or the people involved in it, Milligan has painted a portrait of a senator as being a somewhat "bizarre" bureaucrat. Yet, he has spent time in this environment himself and has attended many Senate meeting, so he must also contribute to this atmosphere.

Third, Steve, it seems you're beating a dead horse by bringing the representation referendum up again. The referendum was vetoed because there were too many "bugs" in it, and most importantly it never identified any actual problem with the current method of Senate representation. This solution to the problem has been found unfeasible, so why not stop wasting your time wearing it out and try devoting your time to coming up with an alternate solution to the problem, if there is one?

Finally, what really disappointed me was Milligan's letter may have discouraged any students who were considering applying for those positions from doing so. How many prospective future senators (non-greek or greek) is he discouraging from even making an effort to get involved?

To Milligan, the SGA atmosphere is a "somewhat bizarre" one, and the Senate consists of "bureaucrats." I'd just like to remind everyone that these students representing you on Senate are taking a lot of their personal time to do so. Why not get involved in this also and make sure they're doing a good job for you and your fellow students?

Sexist language

Editor,

I would like to point out what seem to be two man-sized violations of the K-State guidelines for non-sexist language. The first violation is the third sentence of Bruce Dolsberry's Collegian article of March 10, "K-State sets guidelines for non-sexist language."

That sentence reads, in part, "The guidelines for non-sexist communications include...avoiding the use of 'he' or 'she' when both sexes are clearly meant..."

The second violation is the third sentence of this letter.

School board hopefuls spar at forum

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER
Staff Writer

Nine candidates seeking five seats on the USD 383 Board of Education fielded questions on issues ranging from board representation to sex education in the Manhattan/Ogden school system during a public forum Monday.

About 35 people braved the wet weather to hear candidates speak at the forum sponsored by the Manhattan League of Women Voters at the Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave. Seven candidates are vying for four available four-year terms, and two candidates are seeking one two-year term.

Most of the candidates agreed the current system of at large election of board members is a good one.

"The free market takes care of what the people want," said Rudolf Clarenberg, professor of anatomy and physiology and candidate for the two-year term.

Board members must be aware of needs and interests outside of their neighborhoods, something that might be remedied by district representation, said Jim Lindquist, director of Riley County Extension and a four-year term candidate.

Representing all interests was stressed by members of the panel.

"We need to be aware of the quality of life we pass on to all districts," said Mary Nichols, temporary instructor of speech and four-year term candidate.

On the question of the education of sexually transmitted diseases in the USD 383 system, the candidates agreed that education is needed. However, the candidates had differing opinions on when the education should begin.

Children should be taught to have respect for their bodies at the earliest age possible and should learn how to become and remain healthy, said Bob Shoop, professor of educational law and candidate for a four-year term.

Grade school children may be too young to be given just facts about such diseases as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome or sex education, said Joleen Hill, Manhattan resident and four-year term candidate. Instead, they should be taught critical thinking and problem solving skills so they can learn to handle such information when they are taught it, she said.

The education should be an ongoing process because children are ready for such education and retain it at different times in their lives, said Beverly Eversmeyer, guidance counselor at Manhattan High School and two-year term candidate.

Sex education is a broader problem itself, Clarenberg said. Not just the physical aspects of sex education should be taught, he said, but also ethical or even religious issues should be taught when teaching children about sex.

Speech reveals changes in U.S. beer industry

By The Collegian Staff

Due to mergers and takeovers, the number of beer companies in the United States has declined from 750 in 1935 to its current number of 34, said Victor J. Tremblay, professor of economics.

Tremblay addressed the Economics Club Monday evening in Waters Hall about changes in the beer industry in the past 50 years.

Tremblay has spent five years studying the beer industry and collected data dating from 1950 to 1980 from 34 beer companies.

Mergers and takeovers are the main reasons for the decline in the number of beer companies, he said.

Moreover, nationwide breweries can target different segments of the population and utilize national advertising. Tremblay said large breweries can produce beer at a cheaper cost than smaller ones, and nationwide locations make transportation of beer less expensive.

A small brewer producing a quality product and marketing its product effectively can survive by finding a special niche in the market, Tremblay said. Usually these companies have an upscale image for the beer and a higher price tag.

An increased share of the largest breweries' national business accompanied the decline in the number of companies, he said.

In 1947, the top five companies accounted for 19 percent of beer produced, while in 1986 their share was more than 83 percent of the market. The current top five breweries are Anheuser-Busch, Miller, Stroh, Heileman and Coors, with more than 53 percent of production belonging to Anheuser-Busch and Miller.

Although the number of brewers has declined, the market area has increased, Tremblay said.

The beer industry has been classed as one with moderate, but increasing barriers to new companies wanting to enter the market, he said.

One source of new competition is that of an established brewer moving into a new market or importing foreign beer. Beer imports, most of which come from the Netherlands and Canada, have increased more than 600 percent from 1971 to 1981.

Import beer represents about 3 percent of domestic consumption, but the rate is increasing. In 1950, 0.1 percent of beer drinkers consumed imported beer. In 1980, the figure reached 2.6 percent, Tremblay said.

Health device receives patent

Professor, graduate student develop radiation monitor

By TIM STALEY
Collegian Reporter

A K-State nuclear engineer and his former graduate student have received a patent for a device which could improve health monitoring of persons working in a radiation environment.

Gale Simons, professor of nuclear engineering, and Timothy DeBey, a graduate student at the time of the project, designed the thermoluminescent dosimeter to more carefully monitor beta radiation levels.

The device is a thin element, beta particle dosimeter. The tiny white crystal is small enough to be incorporated into an identification badge for people using radioactive materials for research or production processes in institutions such as hospitals, research laboratories, nuclear power plants, industry or universities, Simons said.

Employees exposed to radiation should wear the badge because it allows them to have a record of the total radiation they receive on the job, he said.

"People must wear these," Simons said. "You want to know how much total radiation you receive."

The team invented the device in 1982 but received the patent in January of this year.

"It is a good feeling (to receive the patent)," Simons said. "You do feel good when you invent something and develop a device that will be used commercially."

Simons said he and DeBey worked for one year on the project and are sharing the patent and the royalties equally. DeBey has since graduated and is currently employed by Sandia National Laboratory in Albuquerque, N.M.

The patented design solves a number of previous problems with radiation detection devices. Simons said the device produces the most accurate beta measurements currently available for future mass-produced dosimeters and makes it easier to measure levels of radiation received.

"In the past, the radiation dose measurements with the beta particles was not as accurate as it was desired," he said. "That was the reason for this project."

The project was funded by the U.S. Department of Energy as part of the Beta Particle Research Dosimetry Program at K-State. The program received $100,000 for a combination of instruments and techniques for research on the dosimeter and an electron spectrometer, an instrument that measures the energy distribution of electrons.

Simons said the spectrometer was primarily a research device used to check the dosimeter's accuracy while developing the device. If the team measured the energy with the spectrometer, they could calculate the dosage of radiation received, he said.

The dosimeter is not in commercial use but is currently being evaluated at Pacific Northwest Laboratories in Washington, D.C. Simons said negotiations are underway with several companies to manufacture a very similar device.

"I would estimate that within 12 months this particular device should be available commercially, and if this is true, then there will be people worldwide using this device," he said.

"I wouldn't be surprised if the market is large enough for 100,000 of these per year. It may be larger," Simons said. "The future of the dosimeter is very good."

Simons said one positive aspect of the project was that it was funded research, thus allowing him to support a graduate student, who received a graduate reseach assistantship and a stipend.

A second positive aspect was that the team developed a marketable device in one year, Simons said. This was reasonably fast compared with the development of other devices, he said.

Report says fewer paroles hurt prisons

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Inadequate counseling programs for inmates and fewer paroles are contributing to the state's prison overcrowding problem, according to a state auditors' report made public Monday.

While fewer inmates are being released, the report said, the number of inmates coming into the system has continued to increase this year.

"Programs and housing are being strained by the recent increases in population," the report said. "The (Parole) Board is requiring more from inmates in order to better protect the community."

The 10-member Legislative Post Audit Committee reviewed the report Monday and accepted it. The Legislative Division of Post Audit evaluates state programs and agencies at the request of lawmakers to determine whether they are complying with lawmakers' wishes.

"Prison populations have shown a larger-than-expected increase during the past few months because admissions have increased, releases have decreased," the report said.

Department of Corrections and Parole Board officials said they agreed with the report. Elwaine Pomeroy, chairman of the board, said the report shows the state must spend more money on counseling programs and said a lack of such programs was a "tragedy."

"An investment would provide great dividends," Pomeroy said. "Spending dollars on programs would lessen the need to spend dollars on construction."

As of Monday, the state's prison system is housing 272 prisoners more than it is designed to hold. Larry Cowger, assistant to the secretary of corrections, said 5,387 inmates presently are housed in prison buildings designed for 5,015 prisoners. The prison population is growing at about 70 prisoners a month, Cowger said.

According to the report, since July 1, 1986, an average of 223 prisoners a month were admitted to the prison system, compared with 204 for the same period a year ago. Since July 1, an average of 156 prisoners was paroled each month, compared with 176 for the previous year.

"Changes in sentencing laws that could reduce the number of new court commitments are not always used by the courts," the report said.

The report said the department's couseling programs were insufficient to meet the demands of the system. The Parole Board requires many inmates to finish drug and alcohol abuse treatment or sex offender counseling programs before they are paroled.

The Department of Corrections has estimated 4,000 inmates need the substance abuse treatment, but the program can handle only 520 inmates a year, according to the report. The sex offender counseling program can treat 149 inmates a year, but the department says about 1,300 need to participate.

"Because treatment opportunities are so limited in relation to the need for this service, inmates may become backed up in the system for lack of completion of this program," the report said.

However, the report stopped short of saying the lack of treatment programs was directly responsible for the overcrowding problems, noting the Parole Board takes many factors into account when it makes decisions on releasing inmates.

Nebraska boasts NIT's most balanced attack

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Arkansas-Little Rock Coach Mike Newell said Monday that the National Invitation Tournament would help his school follow in the footsteps of other hyphenated universities that have risen from obscurity to basketball prominence.

"No one had heard of Nevada-Las Vegas or Alabama-Birmingham 10 years ago and now they're known just as UNLV and UAB," Newell said on the eve of the NIT semifinals at Madison Square Garden. "Our administration has made a commitment to basketball. We think we can have a program similar to those."

Arkansas-Little Rock, 26-9, meets La Salle, 19-12, in the first game of the NIT semifinal doubleheader Tuesday night. Nebraska, 20-11, faces Southern Mississippi, 21-11, in the other semifinal.

Newell, in his third season at UALR, said that beating Notre Dame and losing to North Carolina State in double overtime in the NCAA tournament last season was a step in the right direction for the program.

"To build a program, you have to become known first in your state, then in your region and then nationally," Newell said. "Beating Notre Dame took care of those three immediately, and coming to the Final Four of the NIT is just as big as the win over Notre Dame.

"The three wins we've had gave us a lot of exposure and coming to New York will give us even more."

Newell expects to start a front line of 6-foot-11 freshman Jeff Cummings, 6-10 sophomore Daron Hoges and 6-9 sophomore Curtis Kidd, who leads the team in scoring with a 15.8 average.

La Salle Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris, meanwhile, has used the same starting five in every game — 6-6 freshman star Lionel Simmons and 6-7 senior Larry Koretz at forward, 6-6 center Craig Conlin, and 6-4 junior Tim Legler and 6-0 junior Rich Tarr at guard.

With no player on the roster as tall as anyone on UALR's front line, Morris said he was worried about La Salle's size disadvantage.

"They're the biggest team we've played except for North Carolina," Morris said.

La Salle was the NIT champion in 1952, led by freshman forward Tom Gola, who went on to star in the NBA.

"We want to do it again with another freshman — Lionel Simmons," Morris said.

Simmons was one of the top freshmen in the nation this season, averaging 19.8 points and 9.8 rebounds during the regular season. He had 62 points and 33 rebounds in La Salle's NIT victories over Villanova, Niagara and Illinois State.

But the most balanced attack in the Final Four belongs to Nebraska, which also has four double-figure scorers, but none higher than 12.5 points.

"We are very balanced and have a senior-oriented team with great leadership from co-captains Bernard Day (12.5) and Brian Carr (12.1)," Nebraska Coach Danny Nee said.

"I'm a dreamer and an optimist, but this is beyond my wildest expectations," Nee said after Nebraska beat Washington, 81-76, Saturday in a NIT quarterfinal game.

"Thinking about this team winning 20 games, it's amazing. God looked on this team and smiled."

Carr and Derrick Vick scored 17 points apiece for Nebraska.

Nee, a native of Brooklyn who played high school basketball on the same team as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, has spent most of his adult life in the Midwest. He went to college and graduate school in Kansas, and had coaching stints at Notre Dame and Ohio University before moving to Nebraska this season.

"New York has fond memories for me," Nee said. "I'm glad to be home. There's a lot of nostalgia for me here. I never dreamed I would be a head coach at Madison Square Garden."

Southern Mississippi Coach M.K. Turk said it might be to his team's advantage that it played two early-round NIT games on the road, while Nebraska had all three of its games at home.

"We won tough road games at St. Louis and Vanderbilt and we think that will be to our advantage at Madison Square Garden," Turk said.

Turk said Southern Miss "is a mirror image of Nebraska in a lot of ways. We don't have a star player. We have five guys in double figures and they like to run and play pressure defense."

The Golden Eagles' leading scorer and rebounder is 6-8 center Randolph Keys with 16.1 points and 7.8 rebounds.

Mets' woes continuing into season

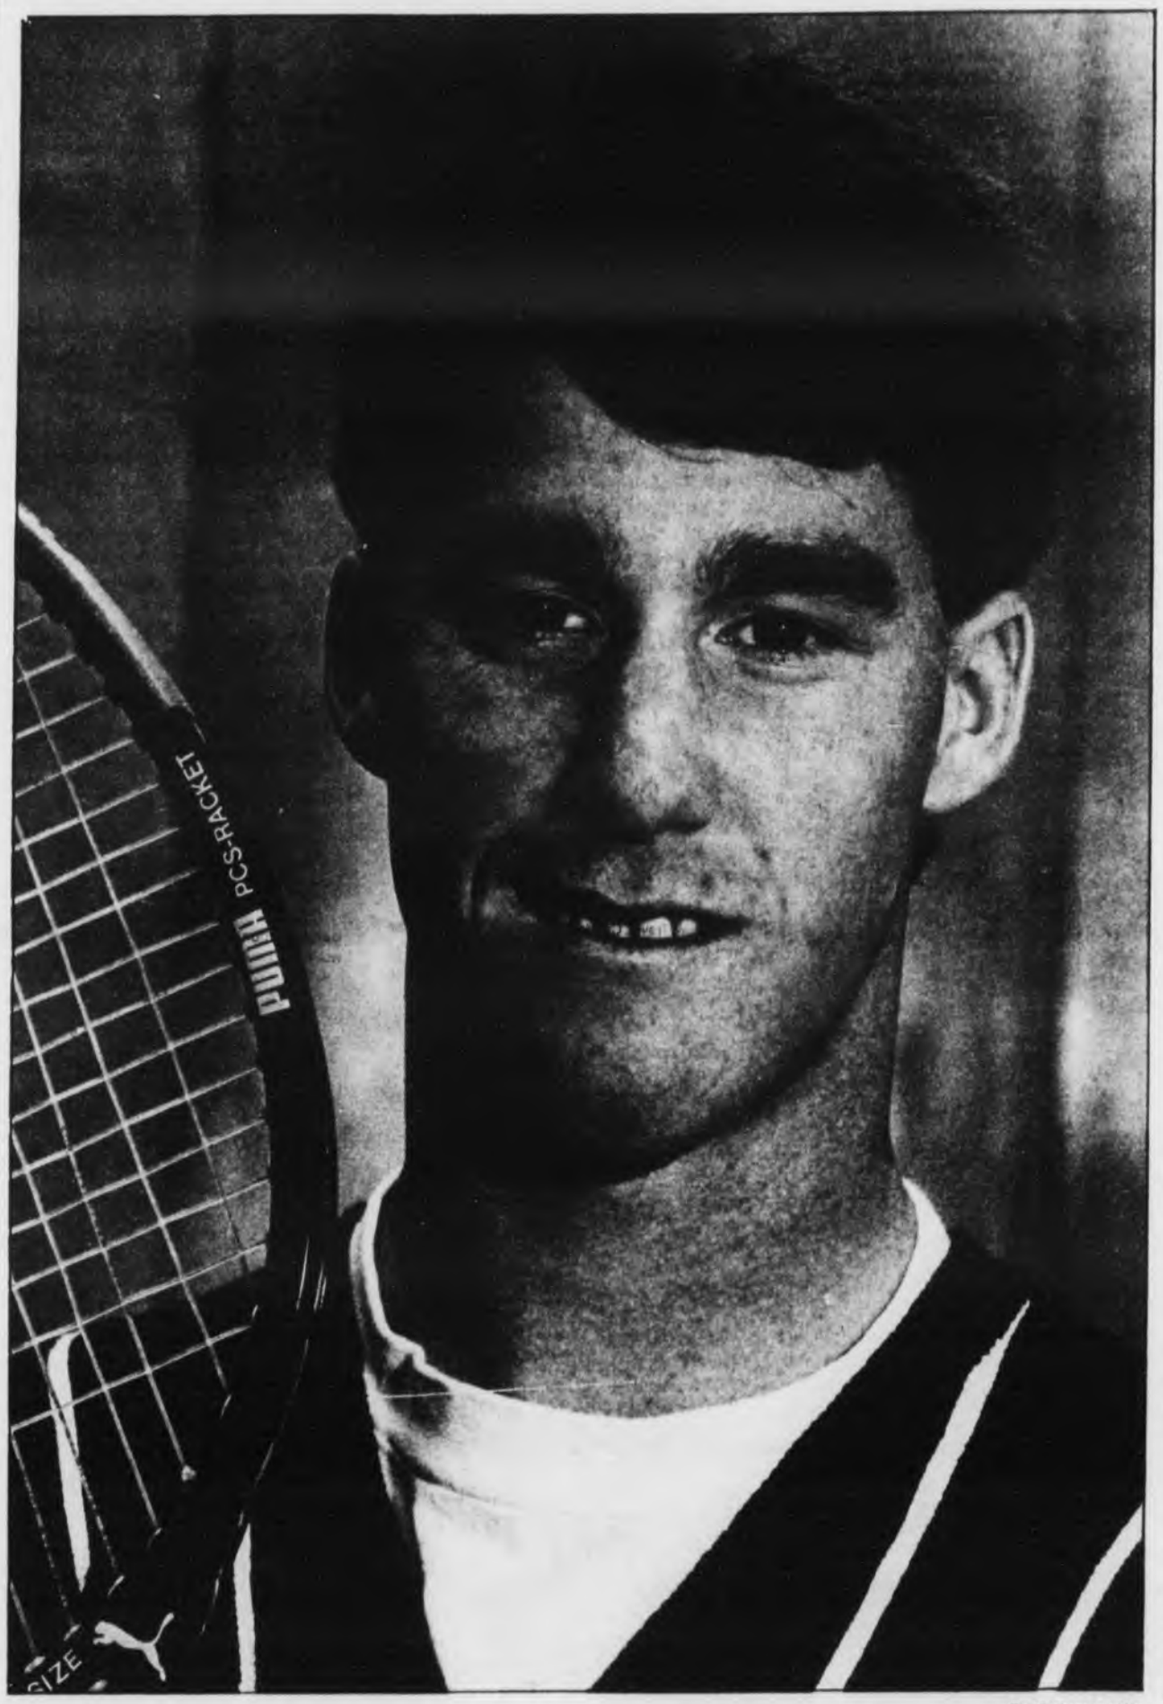
By The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — The off-season problems the New York Mets hoped to leave behind continued to spill over into spring training Monday when Darryl Strawberry indicated he was undecided whether to pay fines totaling $1,500 levied by Manager Davey Johnson.

Strawberry was back in right field Monday for the Mets' game against Philadelpha, one day after having left camp for 1½ hours to protest the fines.

Strawberry, currently in separation proceedings with wife Lisa, missed Saturday's scheduled workout because of "personal reasons." Johnson docked him $500, and when Strawberry disputed the fine and said he would not practice Sunday, the manager told him "to please go home" and added a $1,000 fine.

Later Sunday, Strawberry returned to camp and was in uniform for the Mets' game against Cincinnati, but did not play.



Johnson, whose relationship with Strawberry has been strained since the 1986 World Series, said the matter would be resolved when the 25-year-old slugger paid the fines and was ready to work.

Strawberry did not comment on the situation prior to Monday's game, only saying he would meet with his agent, Richie Bry, later in the day.

Strawberry, who is signed through next season and will make about $1.2 million this year, hit .259 with 27 home runs and 93 runs batted in during 1986.

Johnson and Strawberry have been testy toward each other since Game 6 of the World Series, when Johnson removed Strawberry from the game while making a double-switch involving a pitcher.

During the winter, Dwight Gooden, Ron Darling and Tim Teufel faced court appearances relating to fights with police, Strawberry's marital problems became public, Gary Carter was indirectly named in a vitamin-pill scheme and Gooden's former fiance was arrested at an airport, carrying an allegedly stolen gun while waiting to meet him.

Shawn Walburn, a former player on the K-State men's tennis team, serves as the assistant coach for women's tennis. Walburn believes his summer coaching experience in St. Louis helps with his duties at K-State.

Walburn remains active with tennis as assistant coach

By CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

After the K-State men's tennis program was dropped last spring, one member of the team wasn't ready to pack up his bags and leave K-State behind.

Instead, Shawn Walburn joined the K-State women's tennis team. No, not as a player, but as an assistant coach.

"Shawn walked on the (men's) team last year and did a heck of a job," said tennis coach Steve Bietau. He said after the men's program was dropped "most of the guys still wanted to play tennis and transferred to other schools."

Most of the guys that is, except for Walburn.

Walburn, a sophomore, was disappointed the program was dropped and still wanted to play. But he eventually decided to stay at K-State and pursue his architecture major rather than go through the hassle of transferring to another university to play tennis — much to the delight of Bietau.

"I asked him if he wanted to stay involved with tennis as a coach instead of a player," Bietau said. "I think this is something he really deserves. He makes quite an impact on the team and helps me out a lot."

Walburn said he attends the matches, but most of his coaching skills are put to use in practice situations.

"During the matches I'll help coach. I'll go watch a player and help her with what she's having problems with or just assist with (Bietau) in coaching another girl," he said.

As an assistant, Walburn has had an active role on the team and has been an invaluable help, Bietau said.

"He does a number of things in helping me," Bietau said. "The players have a lot of respect for him because they know he's a good player. One important thing he has done is develop a good working relationship with the girls."

Similarities in playing styles between the women's team and himself has allowed Walburn to relate to and understand many problems the Wildcats have on the court.

His love for the game and desire to stay active in tennis has been the driving force behind Walburn's coaching position. He does not get paid for coaching — everything he does is strictly voluntary.

Coaching isn't entirely new to Walburn, though. He taught tennis at the Sunset Tennis Center in St. Louis the last two summers.

Walburn, who has been playing tennis since he was 8, was a four-year letterman at Lindbergh High School in St. Louis. He led the squad to the Missouri state championship his junior year and was voted the team's most valuable player his senior year.

After visiting the University of Kansas, Walburn decided to attend K-State.

"I came here first for the architecture major and second for tennis," Walburn said. "I looked at KU and I looked here and I decided to come here. I wanted to play tennis...I knew I could play here for sure and then I contacted Steve (Bietau) and came here."

After walking on to the men's team last year, he compiled a 7-16 record at the No. 2 singles position and played on the No. 1 doubles team for much of the season.

At the Big Eight Conference championships, he upset the No. 2 seed and placed fourth at the No. 2 singles position.

"I enjoy (coaching) a lot," Walburn said. "It's a lot of fun and this keeps me in tennis."

Coaches say anything could happen at NCAA's Final Four

By The Associated Press

Emotion is the fuel that will drive Providence in the NCAA Final Four against Syracuse, a team the Friars have not beaten in 12 years, Athletic Director Lou Lamoriello said Monday.

"Nothing will change with their preparation. It's what they can put together in time. But emotion plays a very big part," Lamoriello said.

And the fans are keeping that adrenalin pumping.

"They'll make it," Providence senior Mike Bellucci said. "They're on a winning streak."

"We're on a roll. We've got the entire college, the entire state, behind us," sophomore Donna Lewis said.

They were among a large group of students crushed into a corridor outside the school's athletic office Monday to sign up for tickets for the NCAA tournament at New Orleans this weekend.

The last time Providence defeated Syracuse was in 1975, when the Orangemen last reached the Final Four.

"We've had close games against Syracuse. Each game (this season) could have gone either way, but Syracuse put a spurt on at the end," senior Patrick McSweeney said.

Syracuse rallied from a seven-point deficit with 7½ minutes remaining for an 89-85 victory over Providence Jan. 5, and Sherman Douglas made two crucial steals from Billy Donovan in the final minutes to hand the Friars a 90-81 loss Feb. 19.

Providence spokesman John Marinatto said the Friars would hold on this time.

"We're very confident. Not cocky, but confident," he said.

The last time the Friars made the Final Four was 1973, when they were knocked out in the first game.

Monday, Coach Rick Pitino was shielding his team. Pitino banned all team members and coaches from talking with the media and instructed players to attend classes as usual.

"He wants the team to concentrate on Syracuse and not be distracted from beating Syracuse," Marinatto said.

SYRACUSE (30-6)

If you thought Indiana Coach Bob Knight had it tough playing against former assistant Mike Krzyzewski of Duke, then consider Syracuse's Jim Boeheim, who often vacations with his Final Four counterpart, Providence's Rick Pitino.

"It's going to be tough playing against him," Boeheim said. "I think I would rather play anybody else."

"We're close. Our families are real close. We go on vacations together," said the 11-year-veteran Syracuse coach, noting the attention Knight and Kryzewski drew before Indiana eliminated Duke from the tournament.

"When game time comes we both won't know whose down the other end (of the floor), we'll just be coaching our own teams," Boeheim said.

Pitino left Syracuse in 1978 to begin a five-year stint at Boston University, where he compiled a 91-51 record before departing for the NBA and a job as a New York Knicks assistant.

In 1985, Pitino took over the Friars and began restoring the college to the prominence it enjoyed in the early 1970s during the heyday of Marvin Barnes and Ernie DiGregerio. Pitino turned an 8-20 program into a 17-14 team in just one season.

Although their coaching paths have cross only recently, Boeheim and Pitino's friendship has flourished.

Earlier this month, when the Pitino's 6-month old son died of liver complications, Boeheim and his wife Elaine attended the funeral.

"We keep all this separate from our friendship," Boeheim said of the seasonal basketball confrontations, in which Pitino has yet to emerge as a winner in four tries.

"They are the hottest team in the tournament. Everybody else has struggled, but their games have been blowouts," Boeheim said of Providence's double-digit victories over the University of Alabama-Birmingham, Alabama and Georgetown, the latter two the Southeast Region's number one and two seeds. The only team to challenge the Friars was Austin Peay, which took Providence to overtime before losing 90-87 in a second-round game.

UNLV (37-1)

Two weeks ago, Nevada-Las Vegas Coach Jerry Tarkanian paced nervously among his players and talked about heart. He said it was a key ingredient they would need to advance through the NCAA basketball playoffs.

UNLV defeated K-State, 80-61, in a second-round West Regional game at Salt Lake City.

It took a lot of heart to rally and beat Iowa Sunday, and Tarkanian said his Runnin' Rebels will need more of the same when they meet Indiana Saturday in the Final Four at New Orleans.

"We've got to play well, we've got to play with heart, and we've got to be lucky," Tarkanian said Monday in assessing his team's chances against the Hoosiers.

The Rebels overcame a 19-point deficit to edge Iowa 84-81, relying on the 3-point field goals that have helped carry the club to a 37-1 record.

"I think this is without a doubt the best team we've ever had," said Tarkanian, in his 14th season with the Rebels.

INDIANA (28-4)

Three weeks ago, Indiana Coach Bob Knight told Steve Alford, Daryl Thomas and Todd Meier that he didn't want them to be his only recruited senior class to graduate without a Big Ten Conference basketball title.

The Hoosiers went on to finish as conference co-champions with Purdue and, led by Alford and Thomas, they have gone on to give Knight his fourth Final Four team in 15 years at Indiana.

The third-ranked Hoosiers beat Louisiana State 77-76 Sunday on a rebound basket by Rick Calloway with seven seconds to play after Indiana had trailed by as many as 12 points in the second half.

"It's been a heck of a road for them. Over three years, we got caught up in some things. They won 62 games in three years, but I didn't feel we were competitive nationally."

This will be the first meeting between Indiana and Nevada-Las Vegas.

Knight still isn't convinced this group of Hoosiers is a great team.

"They have found ways to win," Knight said. "They haven't gone out and beaten anyone big, but they have never given up."

Car bomb injures 12 at West German base

By The Associated Press

RHEINDAHLEM, West Germany — A car bomb exploded Monday night at the British army and air force headquarters in West Germany and at least 12 people were injured, West German police said.

Police spokesmen said none of the injuries appeared life-threatening.

The bomb went off at 10:30 p.m. in a vehicle parked outside an officers' mess at the British Army of the Rhine and Royal Air Force headquarters in Rheindahlem, said Wing Cmdr. Colin Tavner, spokesman at the Rheindahlem base, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview early today.

Peter Kueppers, a West German police spokesman in the nearby city of Moenchengladbach, said there was no immediate claim of responsibility.

Kueppers said that 12 people were admitted to local hospitals and that none were in a life-threatening condition.

Another Moenchengladbach police investigator, speaking on condition of anonymity, identified the injured as two German women and the rest British soldiers or German base employees.

British military officials released no details on casualties.

Kueppers said the force of the blast blew out windows in buildings in a radius of several hundred yards. The blast was heard over four miles away from the base, police said.

The police investigator said an anonymous caller had telephoned a West German news agency office in Duesseldorf, 18 miles east of Rheindahlem, and said in broken English that a bomb would soon explode.

But agency staff could not understand anything else the caller said before the phone was hung up, the police official said.

Moenchengladbach police said investigators believed a second bomb might have been left on the Rheindahlem base and police were combing an area cordoned off in a one-mile radius. British base spokesmen refused comment.

Bomb blasts at other NATO military bases in West Germany in recent years have been claimed by West German leftist terrorist groups, either the notorious Red Army Faction or offshoots.

The Rheindahlem base is located about 18 miles west of Duesseldorf and six miles west of Moenchengladbach in northern West Germany.

tificates.

"Fuller came along and changed the rules of the game," Derr said.

At first, frequent-flyer brokers were small-scale agents who sold coupons mainly to vacationers, Derr said. When Fuller entered the picture, he began short-term selling, which opened up the business market and caused the frequent-flyer brokerage market to escalate.

Business eventually became so good for Fuller that he ran out of frequent-flyer certificates to issue tickets against.

"So they began to use phony numbers," Derr said.

"What (Fuller did) was type fictitious numbers on the tickets, then use the airline plates to issue tickets," he said.

In a January deposition, Jeff Rooney, one of Fuller's associates, admitted he had used fake certificate numbers to issue the invalid airline tickets.

Fuller's operation also triggered warning bells at the Airline Reporting Commission, which gives boxes of blank tickets to travel agents, who in turn use the airline plates to issue tickets. A copy of each ticket is to be sent to ARC every week, Derr said.

An ARC spokesman said the commission is missing about 14,000 tickets issued to Fuller, who claims the tickets have been voided and thrown away.

LAWSUITS BUILD

Derr said TWA has been working to prevent brokers from selling frequent-flyer certificates since 1982. Fuller argued that because the airlines had not corrected the situation earlier, it was permissible for him to sell the certificates.

The airlines strongly disagreed.

"TWA lost revenues on every seat tied up by the coupons Fuller sold," Derr told the court. "We didn't have the ability to sell that seat and should be entitled to damages."

Derr also produced a March 9 issue of Travel Agent magazine in which The Coupon Bank had a full-page advertisement for tickets available on TWA and several other major airlines.

In addition, a March 18 statement from a Connecticut attorney revealed The Coupon Bank had informed her TWA tickets would be available through the company within 90 days.

Even if he pays the fine and damages, Fuller will probably not be off the hook. American and United airlines have identical injunctions against Fuller's companies, and both claim violations of those injunctions as well.

The Coupon Bank issued $939,178 worth of United tickets and $250,000 of American tickets after the injunctions were issued last October, attorneys for the airlines told the court.

Turrentine is likely to award similar damages to American and United airlines at an April 27 trial, which could result in an additional $1.3 million in damages for Fuller, Derr said.

The Coupon Bank might remain in operation until a ruling is made on the legalities of the sale of frequent flyer certificates, Derr said.

Several major airlines are currently working on a case to prove the illegality of the issue, he said. If the court decides the practice is illegal it would be the "kiss of death" for all frequent flyer brokers.

Drug causing birth defects reverses transplant reaction

By The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Thalidomide, the notorious sleeping pill that caused thousands of birth defects in the 1950s, is being used to reverse a common deadly reaction in patients receiving bone marrow transplants, researchers say.

Experts believe the drug could represent a significant advance in the treatment of transplant patients if favorable early results hold up in later tests.

"We are very excited that we are onto something that will have potential benefit for these people," said Dr. Georgia B. Vogelsang of Johns Hopkins, who has administered the drug to four people.

The medicine appears to prevent or relieve a dangerous reaction called graft-versus-host disease. This can occur in many different kinds of transplants but is especially common after bone marrow transplantation, which is often performed on people with leukemia or lymphoma.

Hostages

"if the American administration asked us to do this."

A previous offer to trade the four teachers for 400 Arab prisoners was withdrawn because the Israelis refused to negotiate and the United States did not pressure them to do so.

The other two kidnapped teachers are Jesse Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho, and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, an Indian who has resident alien status in the United States.

Normandin said in the videotape from Revolutionary Justice that his kidnappers put him on trial and "I was judged and accused...The sentence is suspended for the time being, thanks to Fadlallah and Capudji." The four-minute tape was delivered to a Western news agency in west Beirut.

A statement from the group last week claimed Normandin confessed to spying for the French and Israeli secret services. He was kidnapped March 8, 1986.

Two Saudi Arabian hostages were freed in west Beirut last week, a month after Syria sent 7,500 troops there to stop a war between rival militias.

There has been speculation that Syria obtained the releases of the Saudis in return for King Fahd urging Britain to resume relations with President Hafez Assad's government. The king is to visit London today.

Britain broke relations last October after saying it had proof that Syrian intelligence masterminded an unsuccessful attempt to smuggle a bomb onto an Israeli airliner at London's Heathrow airport last April.

Twenty-four foreigners are missing in Lebanon after being kidnapped and are believed held by Moslem extremists. They are eight Americans, six Frenchmen, two Britons, two West Germans, an Irishman, a South Korean, an Italian, an Indian and two men who have not been identified.

In addition, Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite vanished Jan. 20 after leaving his west Beirut hotel during a visit aimed at freeing some of the hostages.

Iran's official Tehran Radio said the Revolutionary Justice Organization had kidnapped Waite, then reported the group's denial. Waite disappeared Jan. 20 while on a mission to free foreign hostages in Lebanon. The radio said the organization claimed Waite was a spy for the United States.

Stop & see how much Agriculture is a part of you life

KSU is the only University to offer degrees in Milling Science, Feed Science and Bakery Science.

In America it takes 3 minutes to earn a loaf of bread, 8 minutes in the Soviet Union and 200 minutes in China.

The state of Kansas contains 52.4 million acres, 47.9 million acres are used for Agriculture.

For every Farmer 6 people are employed in jobs related to agriculture.

Buttons, Soap, Film, Gelatin, Marshmallows and Matches all contain Animal By-Products.

Americans spend 12.7% of their income on food compared to 33.7% in the Soviet Union and 60% in China.

The productivity of our land has increased 2½ times since 1930.

The farmer receives 4.3¢ for the wheat in a 54¢ loaf of white bread.

Agriculture is the nation's largest industry—farm assets totaled $956 billion in 1984.

In 1950 the average U.S. worker could buy 8 quarts of milk with one hours pay. In 1984 an hours pay could buy 14.8 quarts.

One farm worker now supplies enough food and fiber for 79 people.

Peace policy fails; Aquino orders constraint

Leader calls for military to fight Communist rebels, conservatives

By The Associated Press

BAGUIO CITY, Philippines — Speaking from a bomb-damaged grandstand, President Corazon Aquino said Sunday her peace policy has failed and she ordered the military to crush Communist rebels and rightist plotters.

"God knows I have tried," she said at graduation ceremonies at the Philippine Military Academy. "But my offers of peace and reconciliation have been met with the most bloody and insolent rejections by the left and the right."

She vowed to eliminate the foes of freedom here before leaving office, and complained that America was just giving advice instead of the aid it promised.

The government-run Philippine News Agency said the week just ended was the bloodiest of the year, with 108 people killed in more than 30 politically motivated incidents.

Aquino spoke from a podium directly beneath the spot in the grandstand roof where a bomb exploded Wednesday, killing four people and wounding 30 during rehearsal for the ceremonies. The speech was broadcast nationwide from the academy in this mountain resort region 130 miles north of Manila.

"To our enemies, let me say that nothing will intimidate this president," she said to loud applause from military and government officials, foreign diplomats and hundreds of spectators.

"Death holds no fear for us, neither for the commander-in-chief nor for the soldier in the line. One nation, one armed forces, acting with the energy and direction of a single hand will smite the foe, on the left and the right, and permanently end all threats to freedom before my term as president is over.

"This is my solemn oath," said Aquino, whose 6-year-term began in February 1986 after a mostly peaceful civilian-military revolution ousted Ferdinand E. Marcos as president.

In a speech later to commanders attending an academy alumni reunion, the president declared, "The answer to the terrorism of the left and the right...is not social and economic reform but police and military action."

Since taking power, Aquino has had to confront an 18-year-old Communist insurgency and at least five coup attempts attributed to right-wing military men.

She criticized delay in delivering promised U.S. military and economic aid. "I have asked our (U.S.) military ally for the hardware to achieve these objectives, but they have given us advice instead," she said. "So let us not hold our breath."

U.S. Assistant Defense Secretary Richard L. Armitage told a congressional panel in Washington last week the Aquino government had no master plan to defeat the Communists.

Investigators said the grandstand bomb may have been intended for the president at Sunday's ceremonies.

Syrian aid requested by Carter

By The Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — Former President Jimmy Carter met twice with President Hafez Assad on Sunday, a day after he urged the Syrian leader to use his influence to free the eight Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

Carter described his first three-hour meeting with Assad as interesting, broad-ranging and pleasant. Asked if the hostages were discussed, he said such information should come from the Syrians.

Assad spokesman Jibrane Kourieh said the talks "focused on international relations, the situation in the Middle East and its developments as well as the Lebanese question." He gave no details.

The second session lasted 45 minutes, followed by a banquet Assad hosted for Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, at the Muhajerine Presidential Palace.

After the dinner, Carter again refused to talk about what he and Assad discussed. "I'll have something to say at the airport before I leave (for Jordan on Monday)," he said.

Carter, who is on a five-nation tour of North Africa and the Middle East, has emphasized that he is not traveling in an official capacity.

Earlier Sunday, Carter took his Syrian security guards by surprise when he showed up at the Sheraton Hotel lobby just before 6 a.m. in a track suit and a pair of running shoes.

The former president, an American security escort and U.S. Charge d'Affaires David Ransom ran out of the hotel to jog for 1½ hours along the Mezze Boulevard as Syrian security men followed them in cars.

Carter and his wife then drove to the St. John Greek Catholic Church for Mass. When they returned to the hotel, they were served traditional, spicy bitter coffee by a woman in Bedouin clothes.

On Saturday, after arriving in Damascus from Egypt, Carter told reporters Syria has shared information with the United States on the American hostages.

Carter also said he would urge Syria to act "if there's information or influence than can be exerted" to obtain the release of the captives.

The eight Americans and 16 other foreigners are believed held by at least four separate radical groups.

Farrell to display books banned across nation

By DANA BRADLEY
Collegian Reporter

As part of its display for the upcoming All-University Open House, Farrell Library will display books that have been banned in elementary, junior high and senior high schools throughout the United States.

"Farrell Library does not ban books," said Noel Young, librarian. Farrell has copies of many of the books banned in other libraries, but banned books not found on the shelves simply have not been purchased or they do not deal with University curricula.

"This is a research library and many of the banned books don't deal with the kinds of research that goes on," Young said.

Farrell Library currently contains more than 292 books banned in other libraries throughout the United States.

The reasons behind the censorships are sexual explicitness, immorality, anti-Americanism, anti-Christianity, objectionable language and creating racial strife.

One of the banned books found in Farrell is the Bible, banned by papal authority in Germany in 1624. Soviet officials stated in 1926, "The section (in libraries) on religion must contain solely anti-religious books." The Bible was not published again in the U.S.S.R. until 1956. And in the U.S. in 1952 and 1953, fundamentalists attacked the Revised Standard Version because of changes in terminology.

The American Heritage Dictionary was removed from school libraries in Anchorage, Alaska; Cedar Lake, Ind.; Eldon, Mo.; and Folsom, Calif., because of objectionable language.

"The New American Poetry 1946-1960" by Grove Publishers was banned in Aurora, Colo., high school English classes on the grounds of immorality.

"Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" by Holt Publishers was removed in Wild Rose, Wis., by an administrator who said it was

Professor analyzes changes under Gorbachev's leadership

By RITA GRAVES
Collegian Reporter

A K-State political science professor is watching for a historic transformation in the Soviet Union under the leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

"The changes proposed by Gorbachev present a challenge to the (Communist) party and the government bureaucracy, and to its privileges and to the position that they occupy in the society," said Joseph Hajda, professor of political science, who is keeping close tabs on the Soviet Union.

Hajda said he has been analyzing the changes in the Soviet Union since Gorbachev gained control of the Communist Party.

When he assumed leadership of the party, Gorbachev believed the Soviet Union was confronted with immense problems such as labor discipline, alcoholism, corruption, unsatisfactory economic performance and social alienation, Hajda said.

After becoming general secretary of the Communist Party in 1984, Gorbachev started a campaign to combat and alleviate these problems, Hajda said.

Hajda said in this campaign Gorbachev attempted to accomplish two things — paint a clear picture of where the Soviet Union should be headed and convince the public that he is the right person for the task.

"He thought that he had the kind of vision that the country needed," Hajda said.

When he started the campaign, many top government officials who did not agree with his ideals were dismissed from their positions, Hajda said.

"The main reasons for the changes were because of the officials' unsatisfactory work and unsatisfactory views on what needed to be done (under Gorbachev)," Hajda said.

The key changes in the political party included a "complete overhaul" of the Politburo, the Communist Party's central political office, with many officials being replaced by party members who endorsed Gorbachev's ideals.

Officials who opposed Gorbachev's plan in the 15 union republics, as well as the regional,

Soviet doubts sincerity of weapons talks

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Veteran arms control negotiator Viktor Karpov said Sunday the United States may be trying to scuttle breakthroughs in medium-range missile talks with demands about short-range nuclear weapons and with other proposals.

"There is increasing evidence that the United States does not really desire the elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe, that the 'zero option' was a bluff from the very outset," Karpov said.

Elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe, the so-called "zero option," was first proposed by President Reagan in his first term.

Progress toward an agreement was blocked by Soviet-U.S. wrangling over U.S. deployments of medium-range missiles, announcement of the U.S. "Star Wars" research program, and other issues.

On Feb. 28, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev offered to negotiate an agreement on eliminating U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles from Europe without linkage to other issues, including Star Wars — the Strategic Defense Initiative for a space-based missile defense system.

The NATO allies welcomed the development, but expressed concern over Warsaw Pact superiority in conventional arms and Soviet deployment of short-range nuclear missiles in East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Gorbachev said the issue of short-range missiles could be dealt with after a medium-range

U.S. troops plan military exercises

WASHINGTON — The United States is about to conduct a major military exercise in Central America involving thousands of American troops, a U.S. military official said Sunday.

The official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the operation, called Solid Shield, would involve sending American troops to Honduras and other places in the region.

But the official denied that the exercise was timed to coincide with what American officials have called a spring offensive by U.S.-supported Contra rebels in Nicaragua. He said the American operation is conducted in the area every other year.

"That's a routine exercise," the official said. "Obviously it's been in the planning stages for a long period of time."

The United States has conducted similar operations in Central America in the last four years.

The official said the number of troops involved in the Honduran portion of the exercise "would involve something less than 10,000 U.S. participants, and a majority of those would be forces afloat." He would not elaborate.

Gadhafi issues Soviet missile threat

NEW YORK — Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi in an interview broadcast Sunday threatened to deploy Soviet missiles if the United States continues what Gadhafi called "its aggression" against the North African nation.

Gadhafi,in the interview on "NBC Nightly News," also said Libya might join the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact military alliance.

"The United States knows if it continues its aggression this could lead Libya to join the Soviet side, and that's going to overturn the balance of power in the region," Gadhafi said through an interpreter.

NBC, after noting the April U.S. bombing raid on Libya, said Gadhafi told it he would open up his country to Soviet nuclear weapons if the United States again tried to punish him. But Gadhafi's remarks as relayed through the interpreter on the broadcast mentioned Soviet missiles without saying whether they would be nuclear-equipped.

"Libya will in fact declare that it is a communist country and join the Warsaw Pact and deploy Soviet missiles on the coast of the Mediterranean," the Libyan leader said through the interpreter.

Trash chute fire kills 7, injures 30

NEW YORK — Fire roared up a trash chute to the top floors of a 35-story apartment building Sunday morning, killing seven people including three who jumped, their clothes afire, to escape the flames, authorities said.

Thirty people, including four police officers, two firefighters and tenants, were injured in the blaze at the privately-owned East Harlem building, authorities said.

Israeli planes bomb guerrilla base

TEL AVIV, Israel — Israeli warplanes today attacked a guerrilla headquarters in south Lebanon, the army command reported. It was the second air attack against guerrillas in south Lebanon in four days.

According to the military communique, the planes bombed a building serving as a planning base for guerrilla attacks against Israel.

The attack occurred at 6:25 a.m. All planes returned safely to base and the pilots reported accurate hits on their target, the military communique said.

The raid was likely linked to a series of violent incidents involving Israel and the guerrillas over the weekend.

Israeli soldiers killed two guerrillas in south Lebanon Saturday night northwest of the predominantly Druse village of Hasbaya, eight miles north of the Israeli border, the military command said Sunday. It gave no further details.

Military sources quoted a senior military officer in the army's northern command as saying he was "not optimistic" that Israel's northern border would remain quiet.

He said hundreds of Lebanese and Palestinian militiamen traveled from Beirut to south Lebanon after the Syrian deployment in the Lebanese capital and the guerrillas might act against Israel, according to the sources, who demanded anonymity.

Denver sees 'pink' with flamingos

DENVER — People used to joke about pink flamingos on front lawns, but the plastic birds are this spring's hottest lawn item in suburban Denver.

Some people buy them because they like them; others purchase them as gag gifts.

In Boulder, neighbors are playing hide-and-seek with them.

"They move up and down a street," said J.D. Dunwell of McGuckin Hardware, which has sold thousands of plastic flamingos in the last year or so.

"We always thought they were tacky so we bypassed them," Dunwell said. "We finally bought them because that's what people want."

"They were on clearance at (a discount store) and I couldn't resist," said Maggie Thomas, who placed two flamingos in her yard "to be ornery."

"They were a standing joke in the neighborhood last summer. Then we left them out all winter to see if they'd fly south," she said.

Residents face charges for energy theft

Tampering risky to user, servicemen

By SANDRA M. SIEBERT
Collegian Reporter

Consumers tampering with electric and natural gas meters in order to receive free energy face felony charges punishable by a jail term and a fine of up to $500, said a KPL Gas Service employee.

The offender is usually ordered to pay full restitution for the energy stolen and the time spent investigating the case, John Johannes said.

Nine cases of energy theft were investigated in Manhattan in 1986, Johannes said. Of these, five have been prosecuted and four are in the process of prosecution.

"When somebody steals electricity or natural gas, it's just like someone sticking his hand in the cash register," Johannes said.

KPL is very interested in prosecuting cases of energy theft, he said.

"The loss of revenues (from stolen services) creates higher rates for other customers," he said. The tampering also creates safety hazards to users and KPL servicemen. When a meter is tampered with many safety aspects are bypassed.

Bypassing an electric meter or bypassing the heavy fusing can result in overloaded circuits, Johannes said. Such tampering may also reverse polarity in the meter. When the polarity is reversed, a serviceman could be subjected to a severe electrical flash when working with the meter.

"Sometimes meters are damaged to the extent that they are unfit to use again, and this equipment must also be paid for," he said.

The amount of energy stolen in some cases is only about $30, but when the investigation is complete, time and manpower costs could be $250, Johannes said.

Meter readers are thoroughly trained to notice when something is out of order, Johannes said. When tampering is physically evident, an investigation is easy and only takes a short time.

When meter tampering is suspected or observed, an investigation team, accompanied by members of the Riley County Police Department, is sent to the site to take pictures and gather evidence, Johannes said. A subpoena is then issued and the person suspected of the tampering is arrested.

However, tampering is not always physically apparent, Johannes said. When tampering is physically hidden, the computer used to keep track of energy usage will record drastic reductions in energy usage of a structure.

When this occurs, KPL may investigate the case for several months before gathering enough evidence for prosecution, he said.

Legislators face hectic 3-week schedule

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The death penalty, the state budget and annexation issues will be on the front burner in the Kansas Legislature this week as lawmakers begin a drive toward the first adjournment of the 1987 session.

With three weeks remaining before the end of the regular portion of the session, scheduled for April 11, legislators still face a number of tough budget decisions. The House has scheduled debate Tuesday on a handful of appropriation bills that include $13.2 million in spending cuts from Gov. Mike Hayden's recommended budget for next year.

Republican legislative leaders are committed to trimming $25 million from the fiscal year 1988 budget Hayden submitted in January, fearing estimates may be far short of the amount of windfall money the state will actually collect as a result of the federal income tax overhaul.

A group of 39 renegade Republican House members want to cut as much as $30 million more from the budget while Democrats have been reluctant to deliver any support for the cuts until Hayden admits he has overestimated the amount of the tax windfall.

Bills containing the remainder of the GOP leaders' budget cuts may come up for debate on the Senate floor during the week.

The upper chamber also is expected to debate a measure Thursday or Friday that would make death by lethal injection a possible penalty for anyone convicted of premeditated murder or of a killing during the commission of a kidnapping, rape or sodomy.

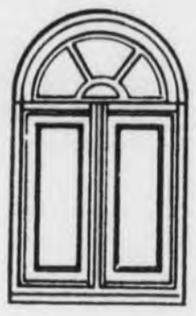
"I hope to get to the death penalty next week, but that depends on what they do in the committee," said Senate Majority Leader Bud Burke, R-Leawood. "If the committee passes it Monday or Tuesday, we'll run it."

A three-member Senate Federal and State Affairs subcommittee agreed last week on changes in the House-passed capital punishment proposal, including a new provision that would allow counties to pass the cost of death penalty appeals on to the state.

Speaker Jim Braden said the House will debate a bill, probably Wednesday, that would limit cities' power to annex more than 21 acres of agricultural land without the consent of the owner or the county commission. The measure also outlines procedures to de-annex areas if cities to not provide promised services when the areas are taken inside the city limits.

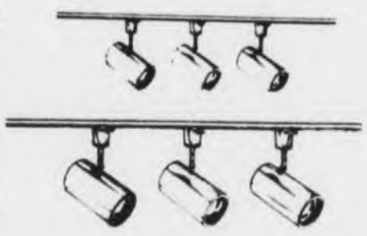
Burke said another bill that will see action on the Senate floor this week is a measure designed to make it clear that public officials can travel and socialize together without violating the Open Meetings Law. He said he expects a conference committee also will be formed to work out differences in House and Senate versions of the bill legalizing public liquor by the drink.

In committee action, hearings are scheduled to begin Thursday before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on a House-passed bill to legalize pari-mutuel gambling in the state.



The hearings are sure to set the stage for another confrontation between horse and greyhound forces over a controversial provision to give special tax breaks to operators of dual horse-dog racing facilities.

The Senate Legislative and Congressional Apportionment Committee has scheduled hearings for Tuesday on legislation that has cleared the House to establish a one-time state census in 1988. The panel also will consider a proposed consititutional amendment that calls for redrawing the boundaries of legislative districts in 1992 and every 10 years thereafter.



A hearing on whether the House should go along with Senate action on a bill that would repeal the state's 96-year-old prevailing wage law is scheduled Tuesday before the House Labor and Industry Committee.

Smoking would be prohibited in all indoor public places, except designated areas, in Kansas under a House-passed bill set for a hearing Wednesday before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Also Wednesday, the House Commercial and Financial Institutions Committee is expected to hear a measure that would provide for unlimited branch banking through acquisition in the state.

PATRICK MUIR
Collegian Columnist

Several weeks ago, I raised some questions that at the time seemed unanswerable. These questions covered several campus issues and other oddities that simply did not have a reasonable or logical response. Several of you were kind enough to shed some light on a few of them.

Since some of the questions were sarcastic, or perhaps even cynical (yes, it's hard for me to believe, too), this information needs to be shared. At the same time, in order to encourage brain stimulation after our period of vegetation during spring break, there are some more questions that were brought to my attention.

First of all, let's deal with President Wefald's dismal performance in the K-State promotion that was shown during our basketball games this season. After the column ran, I received a message to call the president's office. My worst fears raced through my head as I imagined all the vindictive measures a university president could utilize in reprimanding a sarcastic columnist. The worst one was that he had called the Immigration Department and canceled my green card.

But to my relief, Wefald just wanted to explain the background behind the piece. He was asked during the summer to shoot a little off-the-cuff spot to be incorporated into a long promotion. He was never aware that it was to be edited in such a way and used in that manner. The administration is planning on professionally producing several pieces to rotate during next season's televised games. We should all "really" look forward to them.

Larry Travis has yet to explain the ballot box stuffing incident during the Athletic Fee Referendum election. But I understand he is really quite busy booking our football team as Willie Nelson's warm-up act across the country. It's a great promotional idea, Larry, to include a concert in the price of a football ticket, but why Willie Nelson? Is this Kansas State University or the Kansas State Fair? Let's think about recruitment efforts instead of pacifying alumni when making such an entertainment choice.

I also asked a question concerning the feasibility of an art museum at K-State. After hearing from several sources, it appears that certain alumni are only responsive to donating funds to such a project and would not entertain the idea of donating to more pressing causes such as the library. I was also made fully aware that no student funds will ever be used for this project. It is almost sounding appealing.

And the question that sparked the most curiosity concerned Mike Riley and his decision not to run for student body president. Sources close to Riley seem to suggest the Oliver North scandal was involved in the decision. Of course this is purely speculation, but the Hiawatha Daily World is looking into it.

Over the last week, while vacationing in Chicago, I had plenty of time to ponder more questions. Like what were we doing in Chicago? We had heard it was quite a cultural place. But after being solicited for every hedonistic object on the streets, I have decided there is a fine line between culture and terrorism. Chicago is the kind of place where your mind insists on wandering elsewhere. So here are a few more questions in the same realm.

For instance, who named all the streets that our new campus signs so eloquently boast? Somebody needs to do some research to check that they are all legitimate. Some of those names seem just a little bogus. But the truly remarkable thing is the restraint that must have been involved in not coordinating them with our purple trash cans.

Speaking of signs, whoever is responsible for the new K-Sate billboard on I-70 outside Topeka should be commended. "The Excitement Is Building" is a very appropriate and refreshing message.

Moving on to basketball, who isn't proud to be a Wildcat again? Both the men's and women's teams should be thrilled, especially men's coach Lon Kruger. The commentators during the K-State-Georgia game were hailing him as a demigod for his accomplishments this season.

And what will University of Kansas basketball be like now that Mark Turgeon has played his last game? Probably bearable, since we can be certain he won't be coming off the bench to play as an assistant coach.

Well, that's about all of those nagging questions for this week. Things seem to be moving along real smoothly lately. Not a whole lot of big news except that each provost candidate seems to support students, teachers, alumni, education and apple pie.

Thanks to all of you who shared your input concerning the original questions, and if you have any information about these new developments let me know. But please refrain from malicious letters to the editor — my mom doesn't appreciate them.

If done right, Regents restructuring fine idea

Transferring control of Washburn University and Kansas community colleges to the Board of Regents offers the opportunity to increase quality in Kansas higher education, if caution is maintained in the process.

A bill changing administration has passed the Kansas House and is waiting approval in the Senate. The legislation would split the Regents into two, four-member committees, one overseeing the six state universities, Washburn and Kansas Technical Institute, and the other responsible for state community colleges. The Regents chairman would serve as an ex officio member of both committees.

In addition, the Regents would appoint a higher education commissioner as a chief executive officer in charge of developing statewide cooperation.

However, local boards of trustees would retain control of operation and management, and financing would not change.

If this proposal becomes law, members of the restructured Regents must make sure they look out for the interests of all involved, avoiding conflicts among community colleges and the state's four-year institutions.

A plan such as this, while it opens a window between community colleges and the state's larger institutions, may close the door between community colleges and the areas they are designed to serve. Future Regents would have to assure continuance of the primary functions of a community college, to provide community-based learning while providing an education with wider opportunities.

Furthermore, if community colleges come under this system, they are likely to attract more scrutiny than before and may be in for tough times as the state continues to streamline higher education and the budget in general. In taking any action in this regard, Regents again would have to keep the mission of the community college in mind.

On the other hand, the proposal is a hopeful sign for the quality of higher education in Kansas' future. Currently, the state lacks overall coordination and the ability to deal adequately with issues of quality. This plan would correct some of these deficiencies.

In the end, the success or failure of a reorganized Regents system lies with the members on the board. If they are judicious in their decision making, the quality of higher education in Kansas could increase tenfold.

'Pudgy needn't apply' a poor business policy

When amusement park rules forbid those under 5 feet tall from riding the Screaming Destroyer, they are protecting the safety of passengers. When bosses set height and weight requirements on potential employees, they are discriminating.

A recent study of 1,200 graduates of the University of Pittsburgh's MBA program revealed a $600 increase in yearly income for each additional inch of height.

Added inches around the waist, however, are quite damaging to the pocketbook. Of the employees surveyed, those who were more than 20 percent overweight earned up to $4,000 less than their trimmer co-workers.

"People imagine a male manager as tall, strong and powerful. And the man who meets that image gets rewarded," said Josephine Olson, one person involved in taking the survey.

Realizing that first impressions are hard to shake, employers seem to be hiring people who fit the stereotype of a domineering, "lean, mean machine" business executive.

But imposing stature and a muscular build alone do not a business tycoon make.

"You can't discriminate against black people or women anymore, so the only people left are fat people. And if you're fat and short, you're really finished," said Eileen Lefebure, president of the Long Island, N.Y.,-based National Association to Aid Fat Americans.

Employers who hire individuals on the basis of physical characteristics are shortchanging their company as much as the nontraditional, but gifted, individuals who are overlooked.

Efforts must be made to halt this discrimination and allow everyone along for the ride.

Leave KU alone

Editor,

Re: Patrick Muir's column "'Real' students don't go to KU" in the March 9 Collegian. I thoroughly enjoyed it. In fact, it had me chuckling clear through.

However, your theme seemed to be, "what can we do to KU?" and not "what we can do for K-State?" I agree that we should "do all we can to promote K-State on a personal level," but your suggestions only promoted KU's attitude toward us — that we are inferior sore losers.

Attacking KU is the worst thing we can do. Aren't there qualities K-State can brag about without mentioning KU? As far as K-State promotion, I would just as soon keep those "nerds of the University of Kansas" out of it.

I realize you were only kidding about your suggestions, but instead of attacking KU, I say we should uphold K-State. I believe K-State can stand firmly on its own merit. Cutting down other institutions will serve only to downgrade ourselves.

False accusations

Editor,

In response to the letter "Poor fan behavior" in the March 3 issue of the Collegian, I wish to correct a number of falsifications stated by Meredith Paschal, the naive author of the letter.

First of all, Ms. Paschal, have you any idea what us "pea brains" in the front row of seating go through before each game to get those seats? Initially, we camped out for more than a week just to get our passes, not to mention waiting in line for sometimes five hours or more to be close to the action in the front row.

I don't know where you've been all season, but we've been right there, every game, cheering on the 'Cats whether they're winning or losing, whether they're at the top of the heap or in the cellar. You claim that we, the fans, only cheered at the home opener against Missouri when things were going well for the team.

If you're attempting to hint that we're "fair weather" fans, why then did we not give up our dedication to the team after its first loss? The answer is because you're wrong, plain and simple.

By the way, I happen to be the "imbecile" in the front row you accused of throwing a miniature basketball at the K-State coaching staff. Are you nuts? I would never pull a stunt like that. As far as I'm concerned, we've got the best coaching staff in the Big Eight, and I have nothing but respect for our coaches.

Head Coach Lon Kruger has somehow managed to put together a lineup that is a national contender in just his first season as head coach, and I would be the first person to defend him had anyone ever pulled a stunt such as the one you suggested I did. I only wish I could say your false accusation was a joke, but it wasn't, and I suggest next time you check your facts before you frame another victim. You referred to me as an imbecile, but I think the term fits you much better.

The real story: With a few seconds remaining in the game, Nathan Buntin of Missouri sunk two free throws, and immediately following the second one, the Tigers' Mike Sanbothe turned to the student section (right in front of us) and yelled a few obscenities supplemented with finger gestures. Needless to say, we were angered and yelled back. And during the vocal bout I fired a miniature basketball at him (Sandbothe) — not the 'Cats' coaches.

In closing, whether you think what I did was right or wrong doesn't matter. What does matter is that you're a confused wench who stuck her nose where it didn't belong and made me look bad in the process. To do as much damage as was done in one letter would take the mentality of a pea brain — I wonder where I've heard that word before?

Racial dossiers

Editor,

Re: The editorial "Racist beast prevails to a despicable extent" in the March 12 Collegian. Your editorial raises a valid concern, but the final paragraph ("...the laws that guarantee equal opportunities...") is misinformed. The laws in this country are every bit as ambiguous about racism as the people.

For example, K-State maintains a racially discriminatory dossier on every employee. Check it out. When I discovered this fact, I immediately asked that the information be removed from my file, and the administration refused. The information remains on record to permit and encourage any personnel decision to be racially influenced.

You cannot expect the Ku Klux Klan to be colorblind if the bastions of public enlightenment can do no better.

Horse training highlights conference

By LORI LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

The 6th Annual KSU Horsemen's Conference, held March 14, provided horse owners with live training demonstrations and educational lectures.

The speeches, attended by more than 300 people, consisted of a "variety of subjects to help horse owners better manage their horses," said Dennis Sigler, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry.

"Consistency, quietness and knowing what you want are the three main things to training," said Leonard Berryhill, professional horse trainer and exhibitor from Tulsa, Okla.

Berryhill provided live demonstrations on how to start training young performance horses and western riding horses. In his demonstration, Berryhill used a young unbroken horse in a round pen to show the saddling, sacking out, bridling and training techniques to use from the first day of training to accustom a young horse to working under a saddle.

When it is time for the first ride, the rider must "go slow, take your time, be quiet and you'll gain every day" with the young horse, Berryhill said.

"Get to know your horse," he said. "Treat him as an individual — as you would treat yourself."

Berryhill demonstrated how a rider could use leg pressure to train the newly broken horse to work in small circles. He also showed how to neck rein a horse and methods for training a horse to side-pass and two-track, two specialty walking techniques.

"Let 'em be a horse, let 'em play," Berryhill said to remind people that the horse is still young and in the first 30 days of training.

Berryhill included training methods for the canter and lead changes in his demonstration.

Pete Gibbs, cooperative extension horse specialist, reported on the K-State research on the influence of diet on the growth of young horses. The concern with young, growing horses is providing proper nutrition, Gibbs said.

The research compared gains in body weight, forelimb circumference, heart girth circumference, changes in height and total body fat gains of two treatment groups of yearling horses, each fed a different feed ration.

"There's no magic in feeding horses," Gibbs said. "The magic is in having a balanced feed."

Mike Clem, instructor of surgery and medicine, discussed colic and its associated diseases.

Colic is an "equine abdominal crisis," and the many types of colic prevent the use of one treatment for all of the forms of the disease, Clem said.

He said the K-State colic team handles colic cases by checking the history of the horses' health, and giving physical and laboratory examinations.

Sigler discussed the reproductive cycle of the mare, explaining nutritional effects on conception, artificial control of the estrous cycle with increased light or hormone injections, and the advantages of artificial insemination.

Kathy Pool, assistant instructor of animal sciences and industry, said research has increased understanding of the "valuable tool" of embryo transfer. She explained the benefits of the process, registration restrictions with the American Quarter Horse Association, cost and the method of recovery and transfer of an embryo from one mare to another.

Karen Johnson, graduate student in animal sciences and industry, summarized her research project on the metabolic responses of ponies to intense anaerobic work.

Don Ericson, graduate student in animal sciences and industry, discussed his research on the effects of regumate, a synthetic hormone, on reproductive performance and milk production in quarter horse mares. He also explained the use of regumate to synchronize the breeding cycle of mares.

The KSU Horsemen's Conference was sponsored by the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, the Division of Cooperative Extension and the KSU Horsemen's Association.

SADD seeks donations in 'Kiss a Pig' contest

By KARI COMPTON
Collegian Reporter

Most people might not want to kiss a pig, but nine people from the campus community have volunteered their lips for such an occasion to bring attention to the newly organized K-State chapter of Students Against Driving Drunk.

During the Kiss a Pig fund-raiser, sponsored by SADD, votes for the most qualified pig kisser of the nine contestants are being accepted at a table in the Union. A monetary donation serves as a vote. The candidate with the most money at the end of the contest will be the "winner" — the one who gets to kiss the pig.

The candidates are: Charles Beckom, superintendent of the K-State Police Department; Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement; Kent Bradley, junior in nutritional science and student body president; Steve Henson, freshman in general arts and sciences; Provost Owen Koeppe; Lon Kruger, men's basketball coach; Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities; Stan Parrish, head football coach; and Veryl Switzer, director of minority affairs.

The contest, going on since March 9, will conclude with the pig-kissing event at noon Wednesday in the Union Courtyard.

Connie Garrison, freshman in family and child development and president of SADD, said the members developed the idea of the contest to catch the attention of college students.

"We wanted contestants that were visible on campus, and that would create an interest in the contest," she said.

Bill Arck, director of the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services, said until recently SADD was primarily a nationally known high school organization, but there has been a need for the organization on college campuses as well.

"Last year, 45 K-State students were arrested for driving under the influence," he said.

Many people have a misconception that members of SADD are against drinking, Garrison said.

"(Our philosophy is) if you're going to party, do it responsibly, and don't drink and drive," she said.

Garrison said during the All-University Open House, SADD plans to display a car that has been involved in an alcohol-related accident. The display will be between Seaton Hall and the Union.

Garrison said the main goals of the campus SADD organization are to raise awareness among college students of the group's existence and to provide an established organization for members of high school SADD chapters. A long-term goal of the organization is to sponsor a SADD day highlighted by several lectures on public safety.

"We want to inform people about the options to driving drunk," Garrison said.

Final selection of jury members begins

'Victim' nears trial for subway shooting

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — More than two years after he shot four teen-agers on a subway train, Bernhard Goetz is about to get his chance to argue that he was a crime victim arrested for fighting back.

He is charged with attempted murder, and final jury selection begins today. The panel will have to decide whether the electronics specialist was justified when he shot four youths who surrounded him and demanded $5 on a subway Dec. 22, 1984.

Goetz, free on $50,000 bail, said he pulled out his unlicensed .38-caliber pistol and started firing because the youths were trying to rob him. The youths claim they were panhandling money to play video games.

When Goetz surrendered to police in Concord, N.H., after more than a week on the run, he told them, "I knew what they were going to do. You understand? It was at that point I decided I was going to kill 'em all."

The shootings and Goetz's comments touched off a national debate on vigilante justice. Initially, a grand jury refused to indict Goetz on anything more serious than a weapons charge, creating an outcry among blacks and others who saw the shootings as unjustified and racist.

A second grand jury was summoned and, after learning that Goetz shot one of the youths a second time as he lay wounded, returned attempted murder charges. A judge threw out that indictment in January 1986, but his decision was reversed on appeal and the charges reinstated.

The twelve jurors and four alternates will be chosen from nearly 140 prospective jurors screened during one-day-a-week sessions conducted since December by Justice Stephen Crane.

Goetz, 39, tall, thin and blond, had been the victim of a previous mugging in which he was badly beaten and suffered torn knee cartilage. Defiant and unrepentant about the shootings, Goetz says he would do it again if he had to.

While much was made of the fact that Goetz is white and the four youths are black, Goetz contends race had nothing to do with the shooting and should play no part in jury selection.

Three of the youths Goetz shot have since been arrested on unrelated charges. One is in prison for a rape-robbery; another is imprisoned for a necklace snatching and parole violation, and a third was sent to an alcohol-drug rehabilitation center. The fourth, shot in the spine by Goetz, is paralyzed from the waist down.

UNLV, Indiana move to NCAA Final Four

By The Associated Press

Freddie Banks and Gerald Paddio came alive from 3-point range, and top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas rallied behind a 27-4 run in the second half to beat sixth-ranked Iowa 84-81 Sunday and advance to the NCAA Final Four.

Banks hit three 3-pointers in the second half, while Banks had all four of his after halftime as Nevada-Las Vegas rallied from a 19-point first-half disadvantage. UNLV has won 22 in a row to go 37-1, tying the mark for most victories in a season set last year by Duke.

Iowa had a chance to tie the score, but Kevin Gamble, who threw a pass away with 14 seconds left, missed a 23-footer as time ran out.

Nevada-Las Vegas will face third-ranked Indiana in the Final Four semifinals in New Orleans next Saturday. Indiana, 29-4, defeated Louisiana State 77-76 on Sunday to win the Midwest Regional at Cincinnati.

No. 10 Syracuse, 30-6, faces unranked Providence, 25-8, in the other semifinal, assuring that at least one Big East team will play for the NCAA title.

Syracuse upset second-ranked North Carolina 79-75 to win the East Regional on Saturday at East Rutherford, N.J., and Providence upended another Big East rival, fourth-ranked Georgetown, 88-73 in the Southeast Regional at Louisville.

The Syracuse-Providence semifinal is scheduled for 3:42 p.m. EST Saturday, with the second game at 6:12 p.m. The championship game will be played March 30.

UNLV 84, Iowa 81

Iowa led 58-42 at halftime and 62-44 early in the second half when Banks hit a 3-pointer to start the run. In one stretch during the run, Paddio hit three straight 3-pointers to give Nevada-Las Vegas the lead for good. Banks capped the 27-4 run with another 3-pointer, giving UNLV a 71-66 lead with 8:26 left. Banks and Paddio hit on a combined 1-of-11 long-range tries in the first half.

Armon Gilliam led UNLV with 27 points. Paddio had 20 and Banks 17. Gamble and Armstrong had 18 apiece for Iowa.

Indiana 77, LSU 76

Rick Calloway's tip-in on a rebound with seven seconds left boosted Indiana over Louisiana State. Calloway's basket followed an air ball by teammate Daryl Thomas and gave the Hoosiers their first lead since halftime.

Wth 14:31 left in the game, Calloway, already wearing a brace, stretched the ligaments in his right knee. He said the "initial pain hurt, mostly because it scared me. But once I got over that, I was OK."

The basket sent Indiana to its second Final Four in six years — the Hoosiers won the national title in 1981 — and Calloway said he'd be ready.

"If I have to go out on crutches, I'll be out there on Saturday," he said.

Steve Alford finished with 20 points for Indiana. Nikita Wilson had 20 for LSU.

Syracuse 79, N. Carolina 75

Syracuse outrebounded North Carolina 29-12 in the first half, led by 6-foot-10 junior center Rony Seikaly, to set the tone of the game and move the Orangemen into only their second Final Four. Syracuse last advanced to the Final Four in 1975.

"We played a lot better in the second half, but by then it was a little too late," Tar Heels freshman center J.R. Reid said.

Seikaly scored 26 points and had 11 rebounds, while Reid was held to 15 points and six rebounds.

Kenny Smith finished with 25 points for Carolina, which closed out its season at 32-4.

Providence 88, Georgetown 73

Denied the 3-point goal by Georgetown's defense, Providence went to the inside to advance to its first Final Four since 1973. Reserve forward Darryl Wright scored 20 points, including 11 during a 28-11 first-half run, matching the 20-point output of the Friar's touted outside shooter, guard Billy Donovan.

Providence, which led the nation in 3-point shooting, ran off to a 54-37 halftime lead, then built it to as many as 18 points in the second half.

Providence Coach Rick Pitino said he told his team beforehand that the 3-point goal "was not going to be available to us today. We only had one day to prepare, to change our entire philosophy in order to win."

All-American Reggie Williams led all scorers with 25 points for Georgetown, which had won 14 in a row.

Big Eight Conference sheds football-only image

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Big Eight official leaned back in his chair and explained the difference between football and basketball in his league.

"Big Eight football teams," he said that day in 1973, "beat the Notre Dames, the Southern Cals and the Michigans. Big Eight basketball teams always find a way to lose when they play the really top programs."

There were other differences back then, too. Only about 6,000 people were attending the basketball games Big Eight schools staged in mostly cramped, unappealing old buildings.

Each year the conference turned out a parade of all-American football players. But with rare exceptions, Big Eight basketall players were quickly forgotten when their college eligiblity was up.

"People would call and say, 'Why do you guys play such a slow, dull game?' recalls Bill Hancock, assistant Big Eight commissioner.

But that conversation of 1973 would be woefully outdated by a glance at this season's scores: Big Eight team 70, Notre Dame 60; Big Eight team 62, Louisville 58. Big Eight team 67, Temple 64. Big Eight team 89, No. 1 ranked Nevada-Las Vegas 88.

Hancock said he realized last week that no one had asked him about the Big Eight's dull brand of basketball "in about three years. I guess that's as good a sign as anything that we've arrived as a basketball league."

The Big Eight is not yet ready to challenge the likes of the Big Ten or the ACC for hardwood supremacy. But no longer do people in places like Muskogee, Okla., and Seward, Neb., regard it as a momentary diversion between football and spring football.

Last year, five Big Eight teams landed berths in the NCAA Tournament — Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa State and Nebraska. Then, led by Danny Manning, one of the country's most talented players, Kansas became the first in the league since 1974 to reach the Final Four.

This year, the NCAA selection committee again tapped Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma. Kansas State, under first-year head coach Lon Kruger, was also invited. Then the NIT grabbed Nebraska to create a second straight five-team post-season party for the Big Eight.

Last year's NCAA Tournament haul, divided among all conference members, came to $2,113,119.

K-State was eliminated in the second-round by Final Four qualifier UNLV and Oklahoma and Kansas made it to the Sweet 16 before losing to Iowa and Georgetown, respectively.

Nebraska, the Big Eight's fifth-place finisher, qualified for the semifinals of the NIT and will play Southern Mississippi in Madison Square Garden Tuesday in New York.

While Big Eight basketball has been on the rise, ironically, the bottom has dropped out of all but the very best of the football programs. Only Oklahoma and Nebraska have maintained their level of excellence.

Football has slipped terribly at Missouri. Only in the past two seasons has Colorado showed signs of rising above the depths of a 1-10 season.

But Missouri, Kansas and Kansas State the past few years have ranked with the weakest major-college football programs in the land. Iowa State, too, has fallen upon hard times.

> '...we've arrived as a basketball league.'
> — Bill Hancock

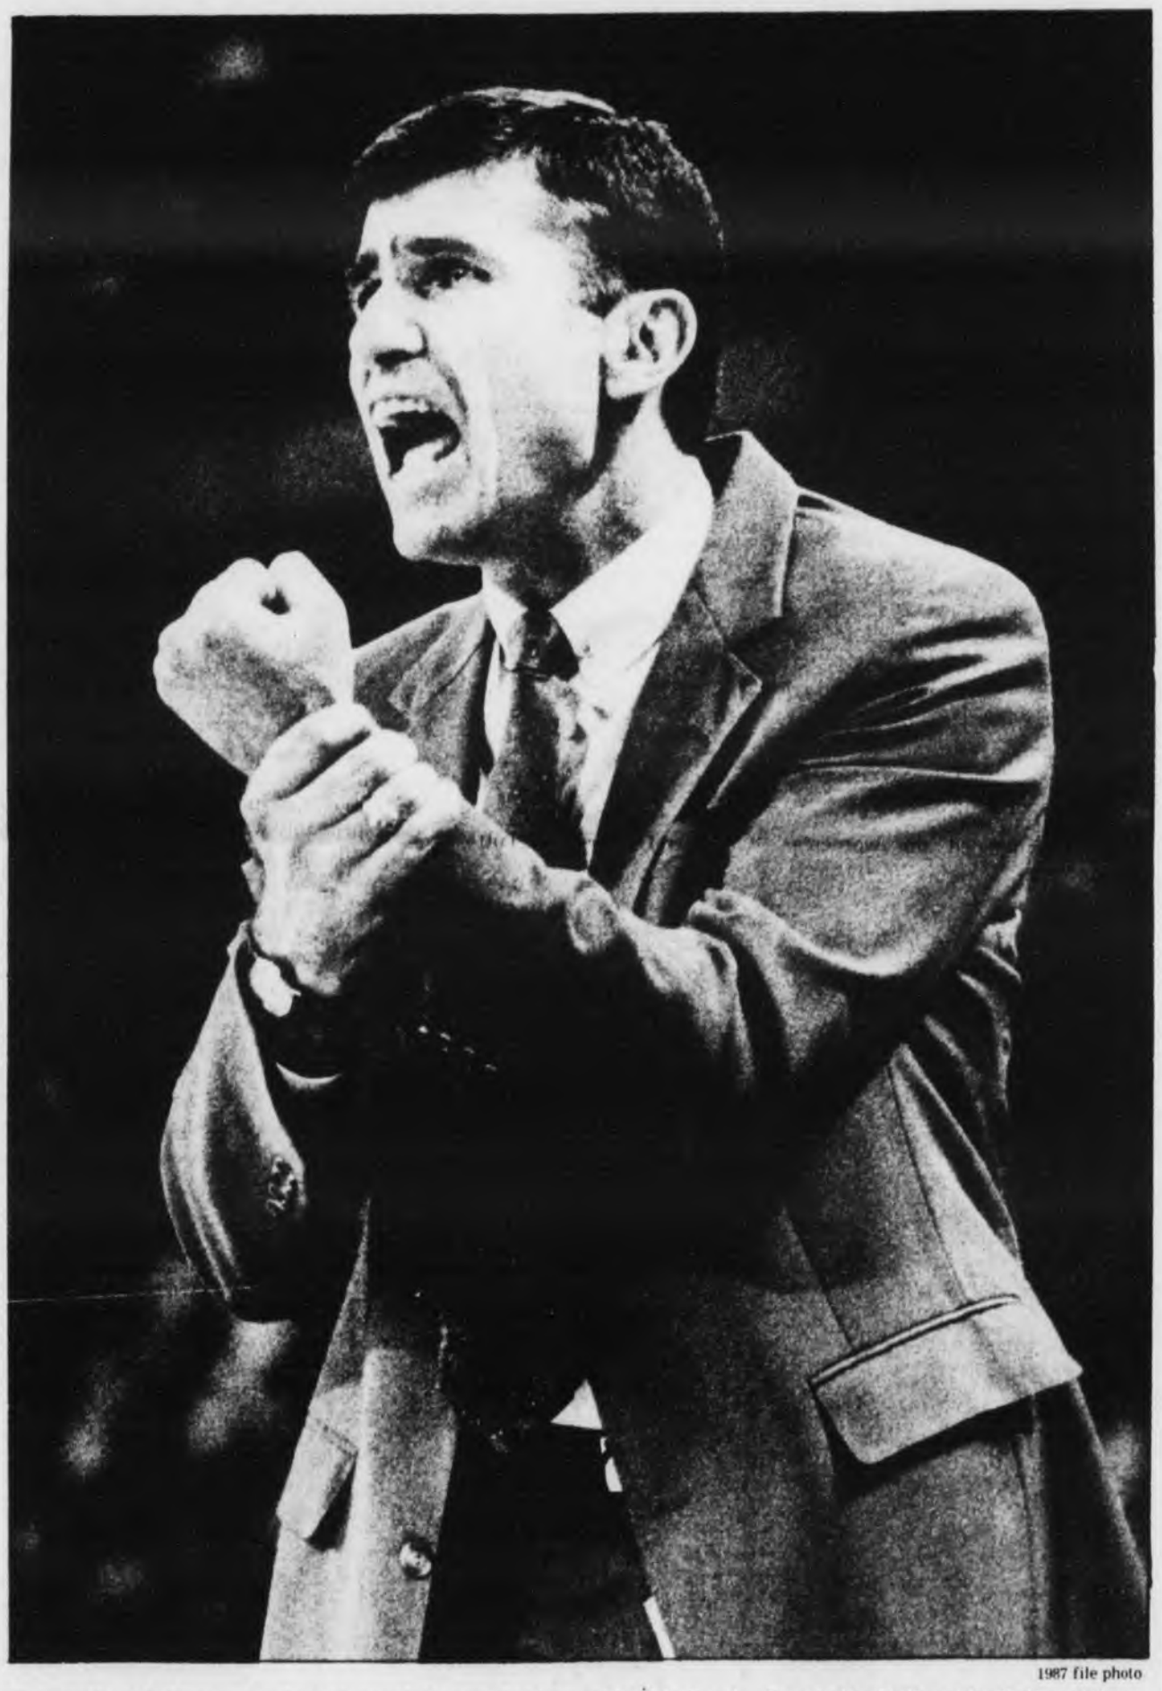
Without question, the Big Eight's third and fourth-best basketball teams are much more nationally competitive than its third or fourth-best football squads.

"The signs leave no room for doubt," said Hancock, an Oklahoma native who directs the Big Eight's post-season tournament. "In 1977 our attendance was about 5,500 per game. This year the average is going to be over 10,000. Attendance has just shot clear through the roof."

The turnaround of Big Eight basketball can be easily traced to the early '70s when attractive new arenas were built at Missouri, Iowa State, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado.

When the building boom took shape, K-State and Kansas occupied what everybody considered the league's basketball palaces. Now, K-State is hard at work on a brand-new building of its own and Kansas is busily refurbishing Allen Fieldhouse.



Many of the new arenas were quickly followed by new coaches, such as Johnny Orr at Iowa State and Dave Bliss and Billy Tubbs at Oklahoma.

"We always prided ourselves on our coaches," Hancock said, "with Ted Owens of Kansas, Jack Hartman at Kansas State and Norm Stewart at Missouri."

Nevertheless, one key to the turnaround was the hiring of Larry Brown when Kansas dumped Owens. Now, at last, the Big Eight had a basketball big-timer well known from New York City, his home town, to Los Angeles, where he had coached UCLA into the Final Four.

"The addition of Tubbs and Brown and Orr, and the success they had, kind of shook things up," Hancock said. "Now, top to bottom, we have top flight coaches. We've shed completely our image of the plodding, slow-down conference. That's gone."

The NCAA announced a study last month that indicated the Big Eight played the toughest non-conference schedule of all Division I conferences. Of the 60 non-Big Eight teams in the NCAA field, 27 appeared on Big Eight schedules 35 times this year. The Big 8 posted a record of 72-40 against outsiders this year.

Golf squad places 10th at 1st meet

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State women's golf team finished 10th at the 13-team North Texas State University Invitational Thursday and Friday at Denton, Texas.

After carding an opening-round 343 Thursday at the par-71 NTSU golf course, K-State's women followed with a 354 over the final 18 holes Friday to bring their two-day total to 698.

"The wind really came up and was probably 15 miles per hour greater than in the first round," K-State Coach Rob Sedorcek said.

Senior Paige Harrison paced the 'Cats with identical rounds of 84 for a two-day total of 168.

Harrison is expected to be the backbone of the 1987 'Cats. She recorded the best individual score in two of the team's three fall tournaments.

In addition, she topped K-State in strokes per round last year averaging 86.0 over 10 rounds. She tallied the team's low individual round last season carding an 82 on two occasions.

Other K-State scores were Erin Andrew (86-86) 172, Shelley Sherman (85-91) 176, Jill Zientara (89-94) 182 and Maj-Beth Rulifson (106-96) 202.

"One would expect the scores to have gone up four to five shots per person because of the wind," Sedorcek said.

Sherman was third among K-State women golfers last year with a 90.8 average while Andrew finished with a 94.1 average.

Host North Texas State staved off a final-round rally by Texas Christian University to claim the overall crown.

North Texas State shot a final-round 315 for a 36-hole score of 612. Texas Christian recorded a 307 on the final day to finish seven strokes back at 619. North Texas State's Georgia Hernandez claimed medalist honors with rounds of 76-72 for a 148.

Nebraska placed fifth in the tournament at 649, while Wichita State finished two strokes behind K-State for 11th.

K-State plays March 30-31 at Springfield, Mo., at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational. The men's golf team will open its season April 2-3 at the K-State Invitational.

Wildcats win pair on 9-game road trip

By TOM MORRIS
Sports Editor

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark knew a nine-game road trip against some of the top collegiate teams in the nation was going to be anything but easy.

During the road swing that started March 14 at Austin, Texas, and finished Saturday at New Orleans, the Wildcats went 2-7 against Texas, New Orleans, Tulane and Nicholls State.

The four teams boasted a combined record of 73-18 and outscored the 'Cats, 78-52. K-State recorded its only wins against Nicholls State, and lost three games to Texas and two apiece to New Orleans and Tulane.

"It was a long, tough trip," Clark said, "especially when you play against a Top-20 ballclub with their umpires, in front of thousands of people and class facilities with huge electronic scoreboards.

"But it was good for us to evaluate our personnel and find out what we need to know for later on in the season," he added.

Clark's main concern is the pitching staff's ability to know what pitch to throw in certain situations. Home runs and big innings from the opposition in K-State's seven losses have Clark wondering if he shoudn't start calling pitches from the bench.

"I promise you, I've got some people that now know you can't make those kind of mistakes against the good teams," Clark said.

K-State, 8-9, plays again at 3 p.m. Tuesday when it hosts Lincoln University at Frank Myers Field in a doubleheader.

"I hope there's a crowd there. There's one thing the team liked about this road trip and that was playing in front of all those people," he said.

K-State, 8-9, to host Lincoln

Game Capsules

Texas 14, K-State 3

Three Longhorns collected three hits each to pace a 15-hit attack as the second-ranked Longhorns won by 11. K-State pitchers walked 10 batters as Texas scored at least one run in seven of eight innings they batted.

Texas 11, K-State 1

Brian Johnson blasted a grand-slam home run to highlight an eight-run third inning and give the 'Horns the 10-run win. Jeff Turtle gave the 'Cats a brief lead with his first home run of the season in the second inning.

Texas 11, K-State 8

K-State stranded 14 baserunners and let No. 2 Texas slip by with a three-run win. The 'Cats scored six runs in the fourth to take a 6-5 lead on three walks, two hit batters, three Texas errors and a single by Tom Parsons.

New Orleans 12, K-State 2

K-State dropped its fourth straight game as No. 19 New Orleans pounded K-State's pitching staff for four home runs. It was the ninth consecutive victory for the Privateers as three New Orleans players hit three-run homers.

K-State 5, Nicholls State 3

Jeff Hulse ripped a two-run double in the sixth to erase a 3-2 Nicholls State lead and give K-State a 5-3 win against the Colonels. The 'Cats trailed Nicholls State 3-0 in the fourth until K-State started its winning rally.

K-State 16, Nicholls State 1

Mike Hinkle pitched 5 2/3 innings of no-hit baseball to help K-State take the 15-run win. Hinkle gave three hits, walked three and fanned six in his first win as the 'Cats supported their ace with 15 hits.

New Orleans 6, K-State 1

New Orleans' starter, Brian Mueller threw a four-hitter and David Ward hit his second three-run homer in two games as the Privateers cruised to the five-run victory. The Wildcats got two singles from Mike Hinkle.

Tulane 10, K-State 2

Tulane got 13 hits and capitalized on four errors to defeat K-State by eight. The Green Wave scored three runs in both the first and second innings to hand the Wildcats their sixth consecutive road loss.

Tulane 19, K-State 14

It wasn't a defensive struggle as the 'Cats and the Green Wave combined for 33 runs in Tulane's five-run win. K-State scored nine runs in the fourth inning to take a 9-4 lead, but Tulane responded with eight runs in its half of the fourth.

Harrison, Carpenter place at indoor finals

By The Associated Press

K-State's Kenny Harrison placed second in the triple jump competition at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships March 13-14 at Oklahoma City.

Harrison, the defending NCAA long jump champion finished third in the long jump this year and had a triple jump best of 54-11 1/4. Houston's Frank Rutherford took first place with a 56-1.

The only other Wildcat to place at the meet was Felicia Carpenter who placed fourth in the women's triple jump.

Six members of the K-State women's team and two members from the men's sqaud competed at Oklahoma City.

Arkansas' Roddie Halley set a world indoor best in the 500 meters and anchored his team to a second-place finish in the 1,600-meter relay, triggering the Razorbacks to a record fourth consecutive men's title.

Only Arkansas and Texas-El Paso had won three straight titles.

While Arkansas was dominating the men's competition, six women's marks were broken by athletes from six different schools, and Louisiana State captured its first women's championship with 49 points.

Georgia's Gwen Torrance reduced her world indoor best in the women's 55-meter dash to 6.56 from 6.60. Villanova's 3,200-meter relay team of Kathy Franey, Colleen Gallagher, Michelle Dimuro and Gina Procaccio also lowered its world indoor best.

Nebraska storms to NIT semifinals

By The Associated Press

Mike Newell, basketball coach at Arkansas-Little Rock, was a little guarded in his optimism.

The Trojans, 26-9, defeated California 80-73 to advance to Tuesday night's semifinal round of the National Invitation Tournament against La Salle, 19-12. In the other semifinal at Madison Square Garden in New York, Southern Mississippi, 21-11, will play Nebraska, 20-11.

The winners will meet in the NIT championship game Thursday night.

In Saturday's victory at Pine Bluff, Ark., Arkansas-Little Rock guards Juric Brown, a reserve, and Paul Springer carried much of the load as the Trojans pulled out to a 14-point lead with about 10 minutes left.

Ark.-Little Rock 80, Cal 73

Brown, averaging 8.8 points per game, came off the bench to score 27 points in 35 minutes, while Springer, a sophomore, made all 11 of his points in the first 10 minutes of the second half.

Juric made 8-of-11 from the field, including 3-of-4 3-point attempts, and he was 8-of-8 from the foul line.

The Trojans held off California from the foul line down the stretch. Curtis Kidd made five of six foul shots in the final minutes.

La Salle 70, Illinois St. 50

Freshman Lionel Simmons scored 18 points and grabbed 15 rebounds, leading La Salle over Illinois State, which could get no closer than 11 points in the final 10 minutes.

La Salle took its biggest lead at 20 points on a Tim Legler basket with 52 seconds to play. Illinois State had cut the Explorers' lead to 11 on a 3-point goal by Matt Taphorn with 4:21 left.

S. Miss 95, Vanderbilt 88

Southern Miss blew most of a 56-36 lead, then went on a 14-4 run midway through the second half in beating Vanderbilt. Randolph Keys scored 26 points, and Casey Fisher and John White had 21 each for the Golden Eagles.

Vanderbilt outscored Southern Miss 24-6 at the start of the second half, tying the score at 60, but Southern Miss took the lead for good, 65-62, on a 3-point goal by Fisher.

Nebraska 81, Washington 76

Nebraska went ahead to stay, 75-73, on a 3-point goal by Brian Carr, and Henry Buchanan followed with a pair of free throws to turn back Washington. The Huskies rallied from a 57-44 deficit midway through the second half to go ahead 73-72. Carr had seven points in the final minute of play.

Carr and Derrick Vick scored 17 points apiece for Nebraska, while Buchanan and Bernard Day each had 15.

Washington went ahead 65-64 with 5:04 left on two free throws by Al Moscatel.

Tennis team wins 3 on break

By The Collegian Staff

A journey to Texas and Oklahoma during spring break resulted in the K-State women's tennis team going 3-3 against Baylor, Tulsa, Oral Roberts, Cooke County Junior College (Texas), Texas Christian and Oklahoma City.

"This was our most successful spring break trip ever," Coach Steve Bietau said.

"We were just two points away from winning two of the duals we lost. To be three and three and not have played our best tennis — I feel good about that."

One highlight of the trip came in K-State's 9-0 loss to Texas Christian University — a Top-20 team. The No. 2 doubles team of Annika Emtel-Kristy Line won a set from a TCU duo before losing the match, 6-1, 4-6, 6-3.

"This is the first time we've ever taken a set from a Top-20 school," Bietau said. "We have never been remotely successful. Any time you take a set off a Top-20 school, that is really important to us."

The trip also marked the return of Lena Svennson, who has been recuperating from arthroscopic surgery on her knee. Svennson played No. 4 singles and went 3-2 with wins against Tulsa, Oral Roberts and Cooke County.

K-State opened the trip March 15 with a 8-1 win against Tulsa there. The Wildcats then dumped Oral Roberts, 6-3, Monday at Tulsa. The 'Cats were 6-0 in singles play against Tulsa and 5-1 against Oral Roberts.

Cooke County, ranked No. 3 in the junior college ranks, surprised K-State Tuesday with a 5-4 win. The 'Cats had a 4-2 lead after the singles competition but lost all three doubles matches.

"When the singles were done and we were up four...our doubles let us down a little," Bietau said. "We had a chance to whip the No. 3 junior college team in the country and we didn't put it away."

Against TCU Wednesday, the 'Cats were shut out 9-0 and Svennson had to retire from her matches against TCU and Baylor because of knee problems. Baylor handed K-State a 5-4 loss Thursday.

"We are playing good, but we don't have everybody playing well at the same time," said Bietau of the loss to Baylor.

K-State Saturday rebounded from its two consecutive defeats to dump Oklahoma City, 8-1.

Bullpen poses concern for St. Louis Cardinals

By The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — The St. Louis Cardinals got off to their fastest spring start ever, and one of the main reasons was the hitting of rookie Jim Lindeman.

Lindeman, batting .366 before Sunday's game, is forcing Manager Whitey Herzog to find him a spot in the regular lineup.

Lindeman is the bright spot as St. Louis heads into the second half of spring training with its bullpen the major concern.

Herzog has played Lindeman at four positions this spring — third base, first base, right field and left field. Lindeman has three home runs, 13 runs batted in and eight extra base hits among his 16 hits. Herzog thinks he could hit 20 home runs for St. Louis, which started the spring schedule with a 9-1 record.

Lindeman would be one option for Herzog if centerfielder Willie McGee, still limping badly from offseason knee surgery, cannot start the season.

Andy Slyke, batting .355 with three homers and seven runs batted in, would move to centerfield if McGee can't play.

Herzog then would choose from among Lindeman, Curt Ford, John Morris and Tito Landrum for a rightfield spot opposite leftfielder Vince Coleman.

The bullpen is Herzog's main concern. Right-handed stopper Jeff Lahti and left-handed stopped Ken Dayley both had operations in the off-season and both will start the season on the disabled list.

Herzog has Todd Worrell in the stopper role and Ray Soff and Ricky Horton set for middle relief, but the rest of the spots are open.

The top four starters will be John Tudor, Danny Cox, Greg Mathews and Bob Forsch.

Terry Pendleton, whom Herzog calls one of the best defensive third basemen in the league, will be back at third base, although Herzog was unhappy with his .239 batting average.

The rest of the infield remains the same with Ozzie Smith at shortstop, Tommy Herr at second and Jack Clark at first.

Clark has fully recovered from the thumb injury that ended his 1986 season last June.

Mike LaValliere, batting .421 with four RBI before the game Sunday, probably will start at catcher.

Varsity crew captures 8-oar crown

By CHRIS STEWART
Staff Writer

It was well worth the wait.

Success didn't come to K-State's crew until the last event Saturday in the Austin Rowing Club's Fifth Annual Heart of Texas Regatta when the K-State men's varsity crew won the eight-oar championship for the first time.

The University of Kansas won the overall team competition for the fifth straight year, but that didn't ruin crew coach Don Rose's weekend.

"It was really ironic. All of (the other teams) were taking medals in the lesser events, and K-State was getting shut out or at least not taking any medals. In the final event of the day K-State surprised the field, but not me," Rose said.

"I would not trade the one varsity men's victory for all the victories of the other teams," he added.

The crew outdistanced the rest of the six-boat field to finish two boatlengths ahead of nearest rival University of Minnesota to win. K-State recorded a 3:30.6 over the 1,300-meter course on Town Lake near Austin, Texas.

"This is one of the great team victories K-State has had in any sport," Rose said.

The K-State squad was also awarded the team sportsmanship award by regatta officials.

Rose commended the women's high school novice eight, sponsored by the Kansas State Rowing Association, which made it to the finals, including a win over Notre Dame in a morning heat. The team finished fourth against seven other teams consisting of college women.

"What other high school in any sport in the history of (that sport) has beat a Notre Dame team? And in the final they took the Kansas University novice women," Rose said.

In individual competition, K-State rower Jeff Bushy placed third out of 14 scullers.

K-State's next competition is April 4 when the 'Cat crew takes on Washburn University at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Gilpin signs with volleyball squad

Marla Gilpin from Pratt-Skyline High School has signed a letter of intent to play volleyball at K-State, Coach Scott Nelson said.

Gilpin, a three-sport athlete at Skyline, lettered three times in volleyball and basketball and led her team to a third-place finish at state in 1985. Gilpin, a 6-foot-0 blocker, was an All-Great Golden Plains League selection in 1985 and 1986.

She was also a member of the Kansas All-Stars her senior year.

Kansas City dumps Pittsburgh, 4-1

Danny Jackson, Steve Shirley and Dan Quisenberry combined for a one-hitter as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-1 in a spring training game Sunday.

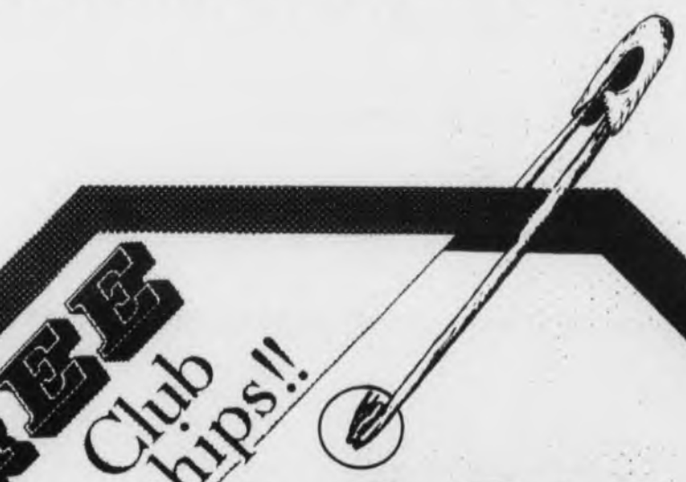
Tony Pena's sixth inning ground ball single up the middle off Jackson was the only Pirates' hit. Barry Bonds, who walked twice, was the only other Pirate to reach base.

Willie Wilson's two-run single with the bases loaded in the seventh was the key Royals' hit. Wilson, Kevin Seitzer, Bo Jackson and Danny Tartabull each had two hits.

Wilson also scored in the sixth inning when he doubled, took third on Seitzer's single and scored when George Brett grounded into a double play.

Bonds scored the lone Pirate run, which was unearned in the fourth inning. Bonds led off with a walk, took second on a Jamie Quirk passed ball and advanced home on two ground outs.

King rallies for Tuscon Open title



Betsy King rallied from six strokes back to defeat Jan Stephenson Sunday by one shot and win the $200,000 LPGA Tucson Open.

King, twice a runner-up at the Tucson Open after second-place finishes in 1985 and '86, pulled ahead of Stephenson with an eagle-3 on the 13th hole and held on for a 4-under-par 68 and a 72-hole total of 281 — 7-under par.

Stephenson, who had led since the opening round on Thursday, bogeyed three of four holes in a disastrous series ending at No. 11.

She also bogeyed No. 18 while trying to reach the par-5 green in two shots. Her fairway shot went into the water, dropping Stephenson's total score to 5-under 283 after a 3-over closing round of 75.

Stephenson was seeking her 14th victory and second Tucson Open title on the 6,214-yard, par-72 Randolph North Golf Course layout.

PTL ministry 'will not be defeated,' new TV host declares

By The Associated Press

FORT MILL, S.C. — The Rev. Richard Dortch, in his first Sunday sermon since succeeding evangelist Jim Bakker in the PTL pulpit, asked the often-applauding and sometimes-weeping congregation to give money to "let the world know this ministry is going to stay strong."

"We will not be defeated," Dortch said during the two-hour service at Heritage USA, now controlled by the Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of Moral Majority.

"We will move forward, and we will see our God walk us through the storm," he told the congregation of 2,300.

That storm began Thursday when Bakker admitted he had been blackmailed after a sexual encounter seven years ago. He turned over his 500,000-member PTL ministry to Falwell, who leads the Moral Majority.

Dortch, who had been executive director of PTL under Bakker, was elevated to PTL president and host of its television ministry.

He told the congregation Sunday that it should be thankful for Falwell's rescue of PTL. "I want to say on behalf of this church how deeply we appreciate Jerry Falwell reaching out to us," Dortch said. His comment was greeted with a standing ovation.

Falwell, who delivered his own sermon Sunday at his ministry's headquarters in Virginia, has acknowledged that he faces problems in operating PTL, which stands for "People That Love" and "Praise The Lord."

The Charlotte (N.C) Observer reported that PTL officials have been seeking a loan to refinance long-term debt and to raise cash. Falwell said the loan would be for more than $50 million; PTL documents say it would be backed with property at Heritage USA used as collateral.

The complex includes a 500-room hotel, shopping mall, cafeteria, convention center, water-amusement park, offices, a school, a television studio and several real estate developments.

Falwell's takeover came two weeks after Bakker's admission that his wife, Tammy Faye Bakker, was being treated for drug dependency at a clinic near their home in Palm Springs, Calif.

Don Hardister, who described himself as Bakker's security guard, was quoted Saturday by the Los Angeles Times as saying Tammy Bakker was at the Betty Ford Center. The Bakkers are secluded in a Spanish-style home protected by closed-circuit television and guards, the Times said.

Dortch said the full story has yet to be told on Bakker's reasons for transferring the ministry to Falwell, but he told the congregation to be patient. "If there are things you don't understand about this, have a little faith and a little confidence.

"The real story as to what happened in the last few weeks has not been told. In God's time, it will all come out," he said.

Benefactor to donate $1.3 million to evangelist

By The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — A millionaire dog track owner took off for Oklahoma on Sunday, saying he'll go on television to give $1.3 million to evangelist Oral Roberts, but that the gift has nothing to do with Roberts' claim that he might die if he didn't reach an $8 million fund-raising goal.

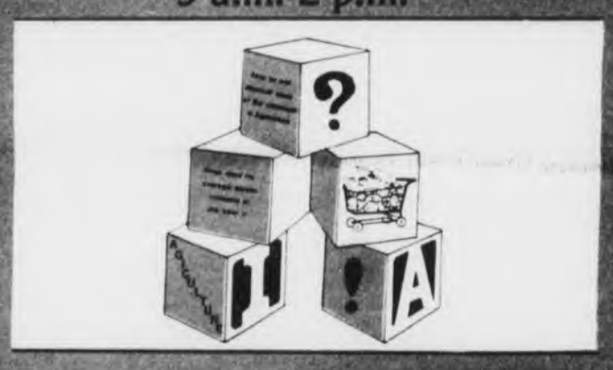
Roberts said in March 1986 that God had given him a year to raise $8 million for scholarships so Oral Roberts University's medical-school graduates could afford to be missionaries in Third World countries.

Benefactor Jerry Collins is not a follower of Roberts and said he's donating the final $1.3 million to help the medical program, not because of the pioneer television evangelist's statements that God would "call him home" at the end of March if the fund-raising drive failed.

"The whole purpose of this is education and my interest in it," Collins told reporters Sunday before eating lunch with Roberts' son, Richard, at the Orlando Country Club.

Asked whether he was bothered that the Collins donation came from gambling, the younger Roberts quoted several biblical passages that he said showed money from any source could be put to good use.

"I'm grateful for a man who gives...who is open with his heart," Richard Roberts told reporters shortly before the two left for the airport and a flight to Tulsa, Okla.



The younger Roberts said: "I believe that my father is going to live...and carry out his purpose."

Youngsters learn to control stress

By The Associated Press

CONCORD, Mass. — Five-year-olds are learning to use "magic breathing holes" and 12-year-olds study biofeedback techniques in a hospital program designed to teach youngsters how to deal with stress.

The 28 children in the experimental workshops have no particular stress problems themselves.

Rather, the program is "an inoculation" against stress and what appears to be an increasing number of stress-related ailments among youngsters, said John Yeager, a Boston area psychologist who directs the program that began this month at Emerson Hospital.

"I'm seeing more and more kids in the middle school area that have tension headaches and the like and it doesn't happen by accident," said Yeager, who also works as a part-time health educator in the Marlboro school district.

The children, ages 5 through 12, attend four 1½-hour-long Saturday sessions where they learn such tension-coping techniques as stretching and aerobic exercises, imagining they are in a relaxing situation and simple biofeedback exercises.

With the children in the age 5-7 group, Yeager and two exercise physiologists teach the youngsters to cup their hands and blow inside, feeling the warmth and relaxing tension.

"We get them thinking they have magic breathing holes. It's almost like a fantasy but it helps kids become more in tune with their bodies," Yeager said in an interview last week.

Older children lie on towels on the carpeted floor and imagine they are at the beach on a warm summer day. The children also learn such simple biofeedback techniques as how to slow their breathing rate and monitor their temperature.

The realization that tension may be related to ailments such as headaches, stomach problems and hypertension and that something can be done to cope with stress led officials to believe children could benefit from the program, said Elinor White, director of community services for the hospital.

Robots to man space farms

By The Associated Press

KENT, Wash. — Having robots grow vegetables in orbit for occupants of NASA's planned space station probably will cost about three-quarters of a billion dollars, but that's cheaper than hauling groceries up from Earth, Boeing engineers say.

"Visualizing future space farms supporting human populations in orbit and on moons and planets is no longer science fiction," concludes a report written by the life sciences design team at Boeing Aerospace Co., which is competing for a contract to build the living quarters for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's space station.

Boeing's vision of a space farm is a tightly packed, school bus-sized space module using solar energy to grow crops tended by robots.

NASA hopes to have its station in orbit in the 1990s, but the Boeing team thinks the farm module wouldn't be launched until about 2020.

Boeing estimates a ready-to-launch farm module to feed four astronauts could cost around $741 million, but growing food in space from seed with recycled water still could be cheaper than continually hauling it from Earth, the researchers say.

"The mass of, say, water is very expensive to haul into space," says team member Mel Oleson. "You're talking thousands of dollars a pound. Obviously, we want to minimize any weight we can because everything you haul up is expensive."

The plants also can recycle wastes from the space station and exchange carbon dioxide for oxygen.

No soil would be used; instead, the plants might grow with their roots in a spray of water and nutrients, says Tom Slavin, a Boeing life sciences design engineer.

"The roots collect all the nutrients they need out of the mist, which has various inorganic salts in it," says Oleson.

Light for the plants would be gathered by solar collectors and transmitted by fiber optics to the growing areas.

Astronauts needn't worry about having green thumbs, says Oleson, because they wouldn't be welcome on the farm.

"One, you want them doing the most productive things they can, and growing food is not necessarily the most productive thing they can do, especially if they can have some other automated or robot-type device do the work for them," he said. "The second thing is humans are disease carriers."

Oleson and other team members say two highly specialized robots, dubbed Tracy and Harvey for their tray-handling and harvesting jobs, would perform all the work.

Boeing Aerospace has teamed with Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. and Teledyne Brown Engineering to compete for the NASA contract to design and build the space station's common modules. The space garden study was conducted by Boeing for NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif.

"slanted."

"Are You There God? It's Me Margaret" by Judy Blume was removed from elementary school libraries in Gilbert, Ariz.; Zimmerman, Minn.; Tuscaloosa, Ala.; and Xenia, Ohio, because it contained the themes of sex and anti-Christian behavior. The boards later reversed their decisions to restrict readership to those students with parental consent.

"The Color Purple" by Alice Walker was challenged — brought to the attention of authorities as inappropriate reading — in Oakland, Calif., high school honors class. It was challenged by the Oakland School Board due to "social and sexual explicitness, and its troubling ideas about race relations, man's relationship to God, African history and human sexuality." Nine months after being challenged, the Oakland Board of Education gave formal approval for the book's use.

"The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" by Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain) was banned from the New York City list of approved books for senior and junior high schools because of objections to the frequent use of the term "nigger." In 1969 it was removed from the Miami Dade, Fla., Junior College required reading list because it "creates an emotional block for black students that inhibits learning."

"To Kill A Mockingbird" by Harper Lee was challenged and temporarily banned in Eden Valley, Minn., due to objectionable language. It was challenged in the Verona-Verona-Sherill, New York, school district in 1980 as a "filthy, trashy novel"; challenged at the Warren, Ind., township schools in 1981 because the book does "psychological damage to the positive integration process, and represents institutionalized racism under the guise of 'good literature.'" It was also challenged in Kansas City, Mo., junior high schools in 1985 because the book uses objectionable language.

Sheila Curl, science reference librarian and member of the American Library Association, said, "We're not trying to do a big thing on censorship. We will just be exhibiting a few of the books we have."

Science and technology information is also being classified now, Curl said.

"With our open house exhibit we are just trying to give people an idea of what we (librarians) are concerned with," she said. "We support faculty research and we have the literary, academic books, but not the more popular titles like Judy Blume."

Manhattan Public Library and Farrell Library try to run in conjunction to avoid overlapping books. "Our juvenile literature department is not for children to go and read, but for education majors," Curl said.

"One of the cornerstones of our profession is that people have the right to know," she said.

pact. The United States has no short-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe.

Karpov, a longtime Soviet disarmament negotiator, in January became head of the Foreign Ministry's newly created arms control office. His statements came in an interview published Sunday by Izvestia, the Soviet government newspaper.

"The proposal put forward in Geneva by the American delegation foresees the possibility of re-equipping medium-range missiles, in part, Pershing 2 missiles, into missiles of a lesser distance," he said. "Factually, for this it is only necessary to remove the second stage from the Pershing 2.

"That means that virtually all 108 Pershing 2s would remain in Europe, with the preservation of the installations to service them. Above all, the United States proposes not to destroy the cruise missiles deployed in Europe, but to move them out for deployment on ships and submarines," he said.

"In other words, Washington obviously would like to preserve all these medium-range weapons, but in another guise."

If U.S. officials "wish to palm off on us a scrap of paper as a cover for the preservation of the U.S. nuclear missile potential in Europe, we will not agree to that," Karpov said.

The Soviet proposal on medium-range weapons would require dismantling U.S. weapons deployed in West Germany, Britain, Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy, and Soviet medium-range weapons targeted on Western Europe, over a five-year period. Each side could keep 100 medium-range missiles — the United States on its territory, the Soviets on the Asian continent.

A U.S. counterproposal was made March 4 in Geneva, site of the arms control talks. It included provisions for on-site verifications. U.S. officials said they were optimistic an agreement could be reached soon after the issues of verification and short-range missiles were "nailed down."

There are 316 U.S. and, by Soviet count, 243 Soviet mid-range missiles in Europe. The U.S. missiles have single warheads, the Soviet missiles three.

district and local levels, were also dismissed, Hajda said.

The immediate visible impact of this campaign could be found in the new atmosphere in the Soviet Union and the new image abroad, Hajda said.

"The new image is more visible through mass media at the national level and less visible at the local level," Hajda said.

"Gorbachev aims at enlisting support from the younger generations, but the immediate impact is less visible."

Changes have occurred in various economic and cultural organizations and institutions.

Gorbachev has talked about the need for "democratization" in the Soviet Union's economic system, Hajda said, but so far there has been no implementation of these ideas.

However, Gorbachev is committed to overhaul the economy and society with a policy that entails some economic liberalization, but no political liberalization, Hajda said.

"According to Gorbachev, there can be no political leadership other than that of the Communist Party."

Gorbachev has had a problem convincing party members and government bureaucrats at the intermediate and local levels that they should support his program of action.

"The ruling bureaucrats at these levels are playing a waiting game, and so many of them are not ready to carry out the directives sent to them from the top," Hajda said.

Time will tell if Gorbachev's plan will succeed.

Electrical fire damages Aggieville businesses

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

Electrical problems in a light fixture were the source of a fire that caused extensive smoke and water damage to three Aggieville businesses Tuesday night.

Businesses damaged were Westron Wynde Music Shop, 1220 Moro St., Benetton, 1222 Moro St., and Undercover, 1224 Moro St. The three stores are housed in part of one large building on the north side of Moro Street. The building, built in 1914, is owned by Emmett Chartier, Manhattan resident.

Bill Smith, Manhattan fire chief, said the fire started in a ballast (the part of a fluorescent tube that emits the electrical impulses required to produce light) in the ceiling of the southeast corner of the building, then mushroomed through the attic and exited through the roof. It was eventually contained in the southeast corner of the second floor, he said.

All three of the businesses sustained smoke damage, Smith said. Electricity and gas were shut off in Westron Wynde because of the excessive amount of water running into the building.

Though Benetton and Undercover received no water damage, he said damages could still be quite extensive.

"Mainly, what's happened there is some smoke damage," he said. "But because it's clothing that you're dealing with here, they're going to have to have an adjuster look at it."

The call came in at 8:23 p.m., Smith said. Spectators lined the south side of Moro Street from the Last Chance Saloon, 1213 Moro St., to the Campus Theatre, 615 N. Manhattan Ave., to watch as firefighters sent streams of water into the second level of the building.

The water quickly began pouring into the Westron Wynde store below, and firefighters tried to minimize the damage by covering some of the merchandise with tarps. Items sold in the store include keyboards, guitars, amplifiers, sheet music and other musical instruments.

Vicki Shult, owner of Western Wynde, said her store was still open when the fire started.

"I was downstairs, and I didn't even know

Manhattan Fire Department firefighters battle a fire above Westron Wynde Music Shop Tuesday in Aggieville after receiving a call to the building at 8:23 p.m. The blaze caused extensive smoke and water damage to several businesses in the shopping district. The cause of the fire was due to an electrical problem, fire officials determined.

Pentagon says Russia conducting laser tests

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union continues to deploy new models of nuclear missiles with an eye toward achieving military superiority while conducting laser experiments against U.S. airplanes, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

Russia is also devoting almost three times as much of its gross national product to weapons purchases compared to the United States. And it shows no signs of slowing that build-up, "no matter who is general secretary; no matter what proposals are made, no matter what public relations activities are undertaken," said Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger.

The Soviet weapons drive also extends to its conventional arsenal, with dozens of new MiG-29 Fulcrum jet fighters along with tanks, artillery pieces and ships having been produced over the past year.

This grim assessment of Moscow's military might was released by Weinberger in the form of the Pentagon's annual publication, "Soviet Military Power." Now in its sixth edition, the magazine-size, glossy booklet has become the Reagan administration's primary vehicle for releasing information about Russian force developments and, in turn, buttressing calls for higher Pentagon spending.

"We must realize that we are competing with a dynamic, and an expanding, Soviet military threat," Weinberger said.

Overall, the booklet concludes that Soviet military expenditures are consuming between 15 percent and 17 percent of Russia's gross national product. By comparison, Pentagon spending consumes about 6 percent of America's GNP.

The report was released hours before Weinberger went to Capitol Hill to push for the administration's request for a 3 percent increase after inflation in the defense budget for the next fiscal year.

Iranian authority dissuades attack, warns of danger to United States

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — The speaker of Iran's Parliament said Tuesday that Americans around the world would be in danger if the United States launches an attack in the Persian Gulf, where U.S. Navy forces have been strengthened.

Hashemi Rafsanjani also renewed Iran's offer to intervene with pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem kidnappers in Lebanon for the release of Americans if Washington returns an estimated $5 billion in Iranian assets frozen in 1979.

He did not link the threat and the offer, both of which were made in an interview with Tehran radio that was monitored in Nicosia.

The United States says Iran has deployed anti-ship missiles in the Strait of Hormuz, the 40-mile-wide southern gateway to the Persian Gulf through which 20 percent of the non-communist world's oil passes.

This has revived fears that the Iranians will try to close the strait. The United States has vowed to preserve free navigation in the gulf, which has been a battleground since the Iran-Iraq war began in September 1980.

"The events of Lebanon could be repeated for the Americans around the world" if the United States attacks, Rafsanjani said. "If, God forbid, such a thing takes place, Americans will be unsafe throughout the world."

"Of course, we don't want this to happen. We're not making threats," he said, "but we are warning the American people to tie the hands of their leaders."

By "the events of Lebanon," Rafsanjani appeared to be referring to the 1983 suicide bombings of the U.S. Embassy and Marine headquarters in Beirut, in which more than 300 people were killed, and to the abductions of Americans.

Eight Americans are among the 24 foreigners missing in Lebanon and presumed held by Moslem kidnappers. Most are believed to be captives of extremist Shiite groups backed by Iran.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Sunday the United States is ready to protect oil tankers against Iranian attack and is making contingency plans for military action.

British, French and Soviet warships also patrol the Persian Gulf area.

Iran has attacked neutral ships in the gulf in retaliation for Iraqi attacks on its tankers, oil fields and petroleum export terminals.

Lloyds of London's Intelligence Unit reported that Iraqi warplanes attacked the Iranian tanker Dena in the northern gulf Monday, setting the 176,000-ton vessel afire.

Iranian vessels regularly stop cargo vessels and search them for war materiel bound for Iraq, but there have been no reports of warships intercepted.

Rafsanjani said the United States warned Iran through the Swiss Embassy in Tehran against using the mobile Chinese-made HY-2 missiles deployed on the northern shore of the strait. He said the message also concerned "affairs in Lebanon and hostages in Lebanon."

He did not elaborate, but he noted: "We've told the Americans before, 'If you really want the hostages freed and expect us to help — though we have no responsibility toward you and it (the hostage-taking) has nothing to do with us — our condition is the return of our assets which have been blocked for the last seven or eight years.'"

Survey finds overall drug use declining, cocaine use rising

K-Staters' usage lower than others

By KRISTI BARANCIK
Collegian Reporter

"If you want to get down, down on the ground, cocaine. She don't lie, she don't lie, she don't lie. Cocaine."

The song "Cocaine" by Eric Clapton reflects a cocaine user's point of view.

Whether it's called coke, C, snow, nose candy, blow, toot, flake, happy dust or snort, cocaine is an expensive, addictive habit that can lead to permanent physical and psychological damage.

In February 1987, Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services conducted a survey on campus regarding alcohol and drug use among students, said Bill Arck, director of ADES.

"The purpose of the survey was to obtain current statistics which will help direct the prevention efforts of (our) staff," Arck said.

The survey of 553 students showed 8.5 percent of the respondents had used cocaine and 1 percent had used cocaine within the past month. Thirty-seven percent said illegal drugs were readily available to them.

These figures were extremely low compared with those from the East and West coasts, Arck said.

"I think it's a very good sign," he said.

"Drug use has probably declined, as far as what we would term street drugs," said Charles Beckom, superintendent of K-State Police. "There is cocaine around. We are just not seeing much of it as a department."

However, cocaine use is increasing.

"Nationwide, all drug and alcohol use peaked about 1979, with one exception — cocaine," Arck said.

"In 1985, 2.5 million people between the ages of 18 and 25 had used cocaine within the past month.

"Marijuana use is way down on this campus," Arck said. "Smoking is just not in vogue anymore. It's really surprising the number of college students who do not smoke.

"Cocaine is just getting here; things are now just surfacing," he said. But cocaine use is not restricted to the college-age market.

"So-called young adults or middle-age groups have a better way of hiding what they are doing," said Lt. James Tubach of the campus police department. Some college students may live in dorms where they don't have the privacy needed to conceal their drug use.

Cocaine is available in more than one form and can be taken in several ways. Pure cocaine is usually snorted, while cut cocaine is often smoked.

The latest cocaine trend is crack. Crack, or "rock" on the West coast, is cocaine mixed with a cutting agent like baking soda, sugar, talcum powder or flour. Crack is sold in pellet-sized pieces packaged in small vials, Arck said. It is usually ignited and smoked through a water pipe.

Cocaine became more popular and more available with the introduction of crack. Crack, as well as pure cocaine, provides an intense high and a feeling of euphoria. And it works fast.

One hit of crack will provide a 10-15 minute high within about 10 seconds. Snorted cocaine takes effect in about 20 seconds and lasts about 30 minutes, Arck said.

A cocaine high gives the user an extreme feeling of well-being.

"You would feel like Linda Evans. You would feel like Superman. You would feel like you could walk into the White House and woo them all," Arck said.

"But all things tend toward the mean. Therefore, if you have a dynamic and outstanding high, the lows are just devastating," he said.

When the cocaine high wears off, the user experiences a crash that can lead to a deep depression.

"They say it's not physical (the addiction). Physical withdrawal symptoms are not usually shown. But, psychological addiction is incredible. (Users) will do anything for it," Arck said.

Although cocaine may not be physically addictive, it can have long-term effects on the user. ADES distributes a brochure titled "What

Congress examines pension fraud

WASHINGTON — Corporations have stripped employee pension plans of nearly $16 billion in excess assets since 1980 while making $145 billion in empty promises of retirement income and health care to workers without setting aside money to pay for them, Congress was told Tuesday.

A growing corporate practice of terminating retirement plans — often using surplus assets in takeover wars and sticking the government with unfunded liabilities — is putting at risk millions of Americans who look to defined-benefit pensions to take care of them in their old age, witnesses said.

The Labor Department, in a 1984 study, concluded that workers in terminated plans lose about 45 percent of benefits they otherwise could anticipate.

The dimensions of the problem and proposed solutions were outlined Tuesday in a day-long joint hearing before the Senate labor and House labor-management relations subcommittees.

While the Reagan administration was applauded for coming up with a set of proposals intended to make pension promises more secure, business, labor and retirement groups all found fault with various aspects.

New cancer therapy gives 'hope'

SAN DIEGO — A new form of therapy is providing "some hope" for the first time for victims of the most common form of brain cancer, which until now has been quickly and relentlessly fatal, a researcher says.

Among the 60 patients who have received the experimental therapy so far is Dick Howser, who resigned as manager of the Kansas City Royals baseball team this team after attempting a comeback following surgery.

Doctors are unsure whether they have cured anyone with the new approach, but some of their patients are still alive long after such victims usually die.

The patients were treated at an advanced stage of their disease, when the expected survival is 14 weeks. But some are apparently free of disease more than two years later.

The therapy uses a newly developed technique to rally the body's own immune defenses to fight cancer. In this case, it's being used to attack brain tumors called gliomas. About 15,000 new cases of malignant brain tumors occur in the United States each year, and 70 percent of them are gliomas.

Death threat remains for hostage

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslem kidnappers announced Tuesday they are still considering the "execution" of French hostage Jean-Louis Normandin, a day after the captive said his abductors had suspended a decision to kill him.

"The organization announces that the execution of the spy, Normandin, was not postponed and was not canceled," said the one-page handwritten Arabic statement.

"It (the execution) is still taken into consideration at any time until we are certain about the intentions and promises which, if fulfilled, will lead to very positive and speedy results that will solve this issue," the statement said.

Revolutionary Justice, believed to be made up of Shiite Moslem zealots loyal to Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, released a four-minute videotape of Normandin on Monday night in which the captive said the group had suspended plans to kill him.

REGIONAL

Group backs tax on illegal drugs

TOPEKA — The state would tax marijuana, cocaine and other illegal drugs under a measure the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee endorsed today.

The committee endorsed the measure on a voice vote with no recorded opposition, and its chairman, Sen. Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, said he expects the Senate to pass it easily. Gov. Mike Hayden and Attorney General Robert T. Stephan have given their support to the measure, which is designed to help the state stop the flow of illegal drugs.

"There was certainly strong support on the committee for the bill," Kerr said.

Under the measure, the state would tax marijuana $3.50 for each gram, or about $99 for each ounce. Cocaine and other illegal substances would be taxed $200 for each gram.

To prove they paid the tax, dealers would have to acquire a stamp from the state Department of Revenue. Records of stamp purchases would be kept confidential and could not be used by law enforcement agencies.

Winfield to retain federal funding

TOPEKA — Federal funding for the Winfield State Hospital and Training Center will be restored in total because the state has made a "good faith effort" to address problems of patient abuse and employee intimidation at the embattled facility.

Gov. Mike Hayden announced late Tuesday the $24,000 per day federal Medicaid funding had been restored and no money will be lost immediately.

However, a new deadline of June 30 was set by federal officials for addressing problems with medical and dental care, patient abuse reporting and other problems at Winfield.

The federal Health Care Financing Administration relented on its earlier decision to withdraw financing effective this week after a team of investigators made a return visit to Winfield last week to see if the state was making any progress improving conditions for patients and staff.

"They said we've shown a good faith effort, that there is no further threat to protection from harm and we are working to improve the health care standards," said Kathy Peterson, spokeswoman for the governor. "We won't lose any money."

Federal officials stripped Winfield State of its certification to accept Medicaid funds last month after investigators uncovered allegations of widespread abuse of the 466 patients and intimidation of some of the facility's 853 employees.

House argues school funding bills

TOPEKA — The House rebuffed Tuesday two attempts to put more money into general state aid to local school districts at the expense of funding for special education and transportation, then advanced a public education appropriations bill to a final vote on Wednesday.

The measure, which still must pass the Senate and be signed by Gov. Mike Hayden before becoming law, would appropriate $449.9 million from the state general fund for general aid payments to Kansas' 304 local school districts in the 1987-88 school year.

It also appropriates $87.8 million to help pay for mandated special education programs and $46.4 million for transportation costs.

The House action was expected to make it harder for a joint conference committee to resolve differences in a school finance bill.

The bill would allow local districts to raise their budgets by 2 percent or 3.5 percent next year, depending on their present per-upil expenditures for education. Most districts would get to raise their budgets the lesser percentage.

Machine supplies better diagnoses

Vet college installs X-ray equipment

By LORI LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

New X-ray equipment, installed last week at the College of Veterinary Medicine, allows better films to be taken for better diagnosis of small and large animals, said Mark Guffy, professor of veterinary surgery and medicine.

The new equipment was purchased after the old equipment "burned out" 16 months ago, Guffy said. The new X-ray equipment costs $320,000 to $330,000, including the remodeling of the X-ray room.

The department owns a second, less advanced, X-ray machine that it used during the interim.

"We now can do things we couldn't do before," Guffy said.

"It has been giving us very nice films," said Karen Killough, radiologic technician. "We hope it will enhance the College of Veterinary Medicine because it will offer services to clients that they can't get anywhere else."

Improvements in the new equipment include the capabilities of radiographing parts of the horse unable to be X-rayed before — such as the pelvis, the spine and horses with "heavy chests," Guffy said.

The new equipment has more power, allowing a greater concentration of X-rays to penetrate the body, resulting in better films of a horse's chest, Guffy said.

Another improvement with the new machine is the ability to perform a myelogram on dogs. A myelogram is a process of injecting a contrast media into a space by the spinal cord to look for tumors in the spine or herniated discs.

The new equipment includes a table for small animals, an overhead tube, the part that generates the X-rays, and a fluoroscope, Killough said.

The new fluoroscope allows for better angiograms, Killough said. Angiograms are the process of injecting dyes into the circulatory system and heart to visualize a section of the venous and arterial vessels.

"Last week we looked at an abnormality that we could not have done without the fluoroscope," Guffy said.

Also purchased was an image intensifier, an electronic amplifier that produces a lower dosage of radiation needed to amplify an image up to a TV monitor screen.

Surveillance policy ready for approval

By CHAD L. SANBORN
Staff Writer

A committee comprising students, faculty and staff sent its University police surveillance proposal to George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, Tuesday for approval.

The Committee on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations approved the proposal Monday. However, Miller's office had not received the proposals as of late Tuesday afternoon.

Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney and a non-voting member of the committee, said Miller asked for the guidelines after University police photographed demonstrators earlier this year.

The demonstrators contested the surveillance procedures, and the police burned the evidence.

The committee's final proposal was drafted from proposals by the student and faculty senates, and John Lambert, director of public saftey. Lambert said he was pleased with the committee's proposal.

"It covers the basics," he said. "It has review procedures that other proposals did not. I think it is a livable, workable procedure."

The proposal forbids the University police from using photographs, film, tape or electronic recordings for surveillance purposes.

The police may only record events if there is "reasonable and articulable" suspicion that criminal acts may take place. However, the police must receive prior approval from the committee to record the event in question.

If there is not enough time for approval, the police may record the events, which will be reviewed within one week of of the date of recording, the proposal states. If there is no criminal misconduct, the records will be destroyed.

According to the proposal, if misconduct takes place, the records can then be used as evidence.

The proposal also requires the police department to review its files and destroy records that would not be allowed under this proposal. If the proposal is approved by Miller, the police have 10 days to comply with the requirement.

Kirk Caraway, senior in political science and one of the photographed demonstators, said he believes the proposal is too vague.

"Who can say what they are burning?" he asked.

Oral injects hypocrisy into sorry list of traits

It was bad enough evangelist Oral Roberts had the gall, the nerve and the sheer effrontery to dump his life into the lap of the American public in exchange for their money. Having declared that the my-hide-or-your-money ultimatum was presented to him by direct order of God, Roberts achieved a new, unethical low in the evangelists' gold-digging business.

This week Roberts apparently reached the $8 million goal God supposedly said he had to achieve in order for Oral to remain oral. And of all the possible donors that could have put Roberts at his goal — thus saving him from the wrath of God — it was a millionaire dog track owner who did the trick.

Apparently, while delivering His request, God did not specify that the money had to be gained by sinless means. We must conclude then that any old money would do, even if it was gambling money.

It truly is hypocritical of Roberts to accept money raised from the "evil" business of gambling, while being the type of evangelist who stands at his pulpit and preaches against just that sort of thing.

Why stop at gambling money? This donation opens up new sources of fund-raising. Prostitutes, the Mafia and those wealthy drug-dealing rings could all jump on the donation bandwagon.

It is indeed a sad state of affairs when someone has to use and abuse the beautiful, special and sacred relationship God has with mankind in order to raise a lousy buck.

Four dead teen-agers, peers deserve service

Four New Jersey teen-agers, all former students at Bergenfield High School, committed group suicide March 11 by asphyxiating themselves in an idling automobile. A day later two Chicago teens followed suit.

The topic is current and many are worried more copycat suicides will follow, yet Bergenfield High School officials have decided not to hold a memorial service for fear of "glorifying" the event.

The logic of this decision is obscure. A memorial service would be the perfect setting for a session on teen suicide illustrating alternative paths for troubled students.

A community task force is looking into the problem and psychologists are working with students at Bergenfield, but a memorial service would allow those who have not voluntarily sought help to receive advice on how to deal with their problems.

Refusal to hold a memorial service will aid no one. The dead cannot be further punished. It's doubtful that any student would see a memorial as an opportunity to gain fame in the school, especially because they would have to die before receiving the attention.

The seriousness of self-killing is immense and needs to be addressed. Solutions must be formulated.

A memorial service would serve this purpose and also finalize the deaths of their peers to Bergenfield students.

TWA, travelers losers in frequent-flyer scam

While traveling, one can encounter a variety of complications — such as scheduling, transportation and monetary exchange rates — that can create headaches. Yet an owner of an airline ticket brokerage, a company designed to aid travelers, has left hundreds of thousands of air passengers, as well as executives from a major airline, reaching for the emergency call button.

Since 1982, Eric Fuller, the owner of The Coupon Bank in La Jolla, Calif., has been misusing his authority. The firm distributes Trans World Airlines frequent-flyer tickets, those awarded when passengers travel and accumulate a certain number of miles with the airline.

Fuller began to purchase travel agencies and use the acquired stock to issue more airline tickets.

Even when he had used up all the original forms, the scheme did not end there. False tickets with fictitious numbers were created to meet the demand. Not only did this cheat TWA out of millions of dollars in profit, but for some overseas travelers, their invalid coupons were a ticket to detention in foreign lands.

Fuller was caught and ordered on Oct. 15, 1986, not to sell or issue any further passage on TWA flights. Yet he blatantly ignored this injunction, taking out ads and informing prosective purchasers of TWA ticket availability through the firm.

For his efforts, he was found in contempt of court. While Fuller is required to pay for his indiscretion — over $132,000 in damages to TWA and a $5,000 fine to the United States — steps must be taken to prohibit such action by others in the future.

The tickets are to be used as a promotion to reward customers and to create an incentive to fly a particular airline on a regular basis, and the only ones to benefit from the promotion should be those who earned them.

Webster has questionable past

SCOTT MILLER
Collegian Columnist

After being faced with overwhelming congressional disapproval for his nomination of CIA Deputy Director Robert Gates as the new CIA chief, President Reagan made what many in Washington are heralding as "a stroke of shrewdness."

Those are the words of columnist Carl T. Rowan in describing Reagan's nomination of FBI Director William Webster to head the agency. Rowan goes on to write of Webster: "He is a man of such integrity that he lifted the FBI from its years of embarrassment and shame to a place of new trust and prestige in America."

Columnist James J. Kilpatrick, the perennial Reagan lapdog, has likewise lauded Webster as one of three "excellent appointments." Even David Broder, who is often regarded as the most respected columnist in the country, has added his voice to the chorus of plaudits descending upon Webster: "With Judge William Webster, an intelligent and principled person, moving over from the FBI director's job to run the Central Intelligence Agency, this administration has regained the look of professionalism...."

All of this is quite wonderful. I cannot put into words (not in the newspaper anyway) how reassuring it is to know the person heading the CIA is a nice man. But before we celebrate too much, there are a few questions to be answered, and since neither Congress nor the establishment press seem concerned with raising those questions, I guess I'll have to use this column to dredge them up.

For starters, there is a rather disquieting matter involving former FBI employee Frank Varelli. Varelli was originally hired in 1980 to act as a liaison between the FBI and the Salvadoran National Guard. For anyone who cares (this doesn't apply to members of Congress or Broder), in 1980 the Salvadoran National Guard had close ties with Salvadoran paramilitary groups known as death squads.

At the time, the death squads were busy killing hundreds of students, labor leaders, church people and workers suspected of opposing the military dictatorship. Varelli, who is a naturalized U.S. citizen born in El Salvador, recently said in an interview, "We're talking here about FBI cooperation with the death squads."

Earlier this month, Varelli testified before a House subcommittee. "The Guard wanted to know the names of persons the United States was deporting back to El Salvador as well as the expected date of arrival," he said. "They also wanted to know who in the United States...opposed the Guard's interests in El Salvador." Of course, the FBI has denied all this. However, Varelli insists his teletyped orders came from the director of the FBI. That would be none other than William Webster.

After helping the death squads track down possible political opponents, Varelli moved on to bigger and better things. Before leaving the FBI in 1984, he managed to infiltrate the Dallas chapter of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES). He asserts this was part of a larger FBI effort to "break" the Solidarity Committee by stealing documents from the homes and offices of CISPES members.

Testifying that he had found no evidence of criminal activity during the time he infiltrated CISPES, he said, "I now realize the purpose was political and not criminal."

Michael Lent, program coordinator of CISPES, also claims that although the FBI has been investigating CISPES since 1981 and collected 17 volumes of files, it has brought no formal charges against the group.

Furthermore, a recent article in the Guardian claims the FBI has spied extensively on at least 100 other groups and individuals opposed to U.S. policies. According to files released under the Freedom of Information Act, included in the investigations have been the All People's Congress — a coalition of anti-war, gay, women's and community groups — and the Physicians for Social Responsibility, a nuclear weapons freeze group whose international arm won the Nobel Peace Price in 1985.

We can, of course, choose to believe these investigations (which are prohibited by Justice Department guidelines established in 1976) have been conducted without the knowledge of Webster. However, the mainstream press has made much of Webster's rejection of the "loose management style" typical of Reagan. For example, if we are to believe that leftist rag, the Los Angeles Times, then Webster "has little tolerance for not being briefed fully on sensitive subjects."

There is also the matter of Oliver Revell. One of three executive assistant directors of the FBI, Revell has spent the past two years as part of the interagency Crisis Management Committee with former National Security Council staff member Lt. Col. Oliver North. According to press reports, North asked Revell in October to sidetrack an FBI investigation of Southern Air Transport, the Miami-based cargo carrier involved in illegal arms shipments to the Contras. As requested, the investigation was delayed.

Again, are we to believe that, as director of the FBI, Webster did not know of the decision to delay the investigation, especially in the light of his intolerance "for not being fully briefed on sensitive subjects?"

And what are we to make of all the media and Congressional hoopla surrounding Webster's appointment as CIA director? Even the Democrats, led by House Majority Leader Robert Byrd, W. Va., have called him "a highly regarded official who will bring much-needed credibility to the CIA."

Is he "highly regarded" because neither the press nor Congress knows nor cares about recent FBI activities, or is it because they do know and consider it honorable to spy on non-violent groups while looking the other way when government flunkies break laws?

MAD not all bad

Protective plan superior to SDI

THEO TZOUROS
Guest Columnist

Re: Tim Inman's column "The fallen U.S. wall: SDI would give essential shield" in the March 6 Collegian. I shall grant Inman that MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction) certainly seems on the surface pretty "MAD." I shall certainly agree with him that defense is definitely "more moral" than offense without bringing up Christian theological arguments (Nehemiah's walls).

I shall even go so far, for the sake of argument, as not to join the majority of my fellow physicists and engineers who believe that SDI will never be able to provide an effective umbrella which can shield all Americans from nuclear attack and annihilation. After all, American science and technology has done wonders. Did the United States not put a man on the moon within 10 years when many scientists in the early '60s claimed this to be totally unfeasible?

Well, if the United States has the perfect shield, what will stop it from attacking first and getting rid of the bothersome "evil empire?" Certainly, the recent lies and disgraceful covert activity of this administration do not convince me there are no people crazy enough to "press the button" first, especially if they know they can rest perfectly safe at home. On the other hand, the Soviets, not having such a shield, would not be ready to risk the full retaliatory wrath of the deadly U.S. nuclear arsenal.

So, in fact, the side with the perfect defense certainly will have the advantage and could be tempted to get rid of the other side first. But wait — didn't President Reagan pledge that once we have SDI he would, out of the goodness of his heart, hand it over to the Russians so they can feel safe at home, too? Don't you believe it! Isn't this the same Ronald Reagan who wouldn't allow the exportation of IBM personal computers to the Soviet Union for fear they might improve their computer industry and be used for military purposes?

The truth of the matter is not even Reagan believes a 100 percent effective SDI shield is possible any more. Experts in his administration have been progressively toning down their rhetoric as far as the projected capabilities of SDI are concerned. They now talk about a leaky SDI umbrella and about protecting only military targets and missile sites. No one knows how big that leak could be.

Even an extremely optimistic figure of 95 percent effectiveness would still allow a lethal 5 percent of enemy missiles to get through. For an estimated 2,000 missiles with 10 nuclear war heads each that the Russians have, a 5 percent leak would allow 1,000 nuclear war heads to find their targets, making most of the United States unliveable for years to come. Furthermore, both sides would be encouraged to build up their arsenals so that they could make that 5 percent leak as lethal as possible and both sides would increasingly be tempted to strike first since the retaliation that would follow would be much weakened.

On the other hand, SDI could easily become an offensive weapon for destroying the other side's spy satellites. This, after all, is within our technological capabilities. These roving eyes in the sky, as detestable as they might be, provide crucial information and constitute the only mutually acceptable way, to date, for finding out what the other side is up to. Therefore, it's no big wonder the Soviets feel concerned about approving a strategic system that can exterminate their satellites.

At a time when the Soviet Union is facing a severe economic crisis at home, supporting the deployment of a scientifically questionable, politically destabilizing and militarily threatening system which could only lead to a further escalation of the arms race, with ever-increasing costs, is something they can ill afford. This is one of the big reasons they don't want Star Wars and seem to be ready to make a deal.

Anyway, if we are going to put these killer satellite weapons into our orbit over the rest of the world and the Soviet Union, do you expect the Soviets to just sit around happily watching while their skies are filled with high-tech weapons? Certainly they would want to shoot them down, wouldn't they?

A deal of some sort would have to be worked out to avoid such a situation. So, if we will have to negotiate the deployment of SDI anyway some time in the future, isn't is mad not to start negotiating right now, before billions of dollars are spent, and stop SDI once and for all?

In this light, MAD is not so mad anymore, being the lesser of two evils and the best available option to date. If our leaders in th '50s had been able to negotiate a treaty to limit atomic bombs when only a handful of such devices existed, the threat of nuclear winter could have been greatly minimized. Today, 30 years later, it looks like our leaders have learned little from history.

Faced with ever-increasing nuclear arsenals, they want us to hide behind walls that can only provide illusory and temporary protection rather than building lasting bridges reaching out to all peoples of this world, respecting everybody's right to their own ideologies and coming up with a comprehensive arms limitation treaty. By trying to abandon the existing ABM treaty and pushing for the militarization of outer space, they will only succeed in opening up a totally new arena into which the arms race can spill over. Our skies have been spared of such militarization, so let's keep them that way!

The administration should take advantage of the new winds of leadership that seem to be blowing in the Soviet Union. Reagan could redeem his tarnished image by bargaining with Mikhail Gorbachev and giving up his dreams of SDI in exchange for concrete, deep and lasting cuts in the nuclear arsenals of both sides. Such a treaty would foster a better climate between the two countries, which can only lead to a safer world for everyone.

Military fallacies

Editor,

Re: Patti Paxson's column "North, Poindexter blatantly ignore duty" in Tuesday's Collegian.

Paxson's article quite accurately describes how special prosecutor Walsh's investigation may gather evidence which could indict Lt. Col. Oliver North and Vice Adm. John Poindexter. However, her article contains some misconceptions regarding key aspects of the American military's legal system, and it raises a serious question regarding an essential civil right.

Her statement, "...military members...are obligated to their country without exception..." is true. All members of the U.S. armed forces are indeed obligated to fight, bleed, die and kill in order to protect the American way of life as embodied by the Constitution. Yet, the words "I swear to incriminate myself" are not to be found in the oath of service.

The Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) contains Article 31, which categorically prohibits the gathering of self-incriminating evidence against the accused. Article 31 applies to all levels of command: A captain, for example, cannot order a private to confess to a crime. To do so would constitute a clear violation of Article 31, and any evidence so gained could not be admissible in Courts Martial.

The UCMJ applies equally to North and Poindexter. An order to them from the president to give self-incriminatory testimony would not have been an appropriate action. The oath of service and the UCMJ no more make it North's or Poindexter's duty to incriminate themselves than do the laws of Kansas make it Paxson's "duty" to incriminate herself if accused of a crime.

Finally, in answer to Paxson's essential question, "Why should their country bend over backward to protect (North and Poindexter)...?" Simply because once the legal rules are broken or bent in order to "get" a North or Poindexter, then anyone can be "gotten."

Perhaps North and Poindexter are guilty as sin. (Certainly the press reports have made a strong indication of at least complicity, if not outright guilt.) However, I'd rather keep my feelings to myself and allow the special prosecutor to make his case rather than resort to a vigilante cry of "off with their heads" and the country's as well.

Chinese lecturer recounts history

By JACKIE SHOCKEY
Collegian Reporter

During World War II, Japan's military focus in China prevented the Japanese from expanding forces in other regions of Asia and the Pacific Ocean, said a visiting professor from China.

"Japan launched the cruelest aggression against the biggest nation in Asia but wouldn't even admit it was a war," said Wu Chungiu, research fellow and professor at the Academy of Military Science in Beijing, China.

In a short speech followed by a question-answer session, Chungiu discussed the various ways in which China has been affected with military research in recent years. Chungiu divided his speech into several categories: Chinese publications written about war, organizations that do research on war-related materials, World War II and military history and strategy.

"Among works of Chinese writers, we deal more with World War II, that is in comparison with the United States," Chungiu said.

Americans seem to focus their historic research more on many different areas, he added.

Chungiu said China was very influential in the defeat of Japan during World War II. Without Chinese opposition, Japan might have been able to concentrate on other places in the Pacific Ocean rather than fighting China, he said.

"China suffered the largest loss of lives; the 'China Theater' tied down 70 percent of (Japan's) strength," Chungiu said. "By the time Japan surrendered, most of her military was still in China."

Chungiu compared the Chinese-Japanese conflict to the American Revolution.

"There are many similarities with the (American Revolution), but we were on a much larger scale," he said. "It's difficult to imagine fighting 24 hours a day, seven days a week, having a constant battle. I guess in war there isn't an eight-hour day with breaks in between. It's hard to imagine what it would be like.

"Many of the books that have been researched and written in our country have taken 20-30 years to write."

Most of the Chinese writing has dealt with World War II, while very little has been written concerning the Vietnam and Korean wars because they are still classified information, he said.

Chungiu's speech was the first of a three-part lecture series this semester sponsored by the Department of History.

Kansas choice site for film makers

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Movie making in Kansas has grown into a $5.5 million industry and state film officials say even greater spending for film production is just around the corner with expected construction of a full service motion picture studio in Lawrence.

Jerry Jones, coordinator for the Kansas Film Commission, said movie producers spent $1.1 million in the state last year and that figure has jumped five-fold since July 1, the beginning of the state's current operating year.

The scheduled shooting of a few more commercials and a documentary film this spring should push film production spending near the $6 million mark by June 30, according to Jones, who predicts even greater amounts will pour into the state during the next 12 months.

For years, Jones said, movie makers have looked to the state mostly to shoot agricultural scenes involving wheat fields. However, as film industry scouts have visited Kansas, he and other commission officials have taken time to point out the diverse rural geography and urban settings the state has to offer.

Jones, whose background in the film production and distribution industry began with a Kansas City company in 1970, said those efforts are beginning to pay big dividends.

"What we're beginning to break through to them is that we have much more than wheat fields," Jones said.

Already scheduled for shooting this summer is a feature film titled "Kansas," produced by Trans World Entertainment of Los Angeles. Also this summer, "Spring Chicken" the first feature production of a Los Angeles-based company called Oread Entertainment Group, is set for shooting in Lawrence.

In addition, Oread Entertainment plans to begin construction later this year on a $3.5 million studio on a 13-acre site in west Lawrence. Producer Douglas S. Curtis, president of the company, said the facility will include a 16,000-square-foot sound stage which can be subdivided into two smaller stages.

The studio also will contain 12,000 square feet of "support space," including dressing rooms and areas permanently set aside for University of Kansas instruction, said Curtis, co-chairman of the film commission who has produced such films as "Black Moon Rising" and "The Philadelphia Experiment."

A hearing is scheduled for Tuesday in Lawrence on whether the city should issue industrial revenue bonds to finance construction of the studio.

Art reflects life, speaker says

By DANA BRADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Today's art in Africa often reflects the political turmoil of the continent, said a professor discussing "Change and Continuity in African Art" Tuesday afternoon.

Solomon Wangboje, professor of art education at the University of Benin in Nigeria and visiting professor at the University of Illinois at Champaign, said African art is of interest now because of the political happenings in the country.

"An artist can't close his eyes to his environment," he said to about 40 students and faculty members in the ArtBuilding. "He must be aware of his society and what is going on in it."

Lecturing on the history of African art and its evolution, Wangboje showed slides of artwork dating back to 900 B.C.

African artists make the most important object the largest, Wangboje said.

"African art is crude, but naturalistic. African artists pay attention to the head, and make it larger because it is the site of wisdom.

"African artists do not have molds for their works," he said. "The images are in their heads."

Wangboje said art was a way of recording events because there was no formal writing. Wood carving was common because wood was plentiful.

Most artworks were inspired by religious motivations such as the four rites of passage — birth, puberty, marriage and death.

African culture contains masks not considered works of art, he said, noting that they are used for entertainment.

"Masks have taboos attached to them and are often used to represent the dead," Wangboje said.

Since the 1950s, African art has changed to a more contemporary form. As a result, murals and body decorations became popular.

In some parts of the continent, when a woman reaches the marriageable age her body is painted with designs to make her look her best, he said.

Wall decorations are found on public walls throughout cities. Stories from the Bible are often depicted on church doors.

"Christian missionaries asked artists to promote religion through the arts," he said. He showed slides depicting exaggerated paintings of the Last Supper and Jesus' Crucifixion.

"Artists began their training in workshops and are now in institutions," he said. "Many believe that training should not be in institutions and that it should remain in workshops."

Clay is the most common medium in Africa.

"It is very much in use, even in building," he said. Exhibits of African art are on display in many parts of the world. Beginning in 1978, special exhibit "2,000 Years of African Art" was shown in various cities throughout the U.S.

Nigeria, one of the biggest cities in Africa, is producing the most art, Wangboje said.

"Of every 10 works of art from Africa, approximately nine of them are from Nigeria," he said.

Seminar focuses on goals, values of career planning

By The Collegian Staff

Although some seniors are unsure of their career goals, exploring the possibilities now might make the search for a job easier following graduation.

Mary Naylor, director of Employer's Access Recruiting Network, gave a four-hour seminar on career planning Tuesday in Union 212. Naylor attempted to teach graduating seniors how to find a job in their field with which they will be happy.

"Your career will affect your lifestyle," she said. "Therefore it is important in career planning that your career defines your lifestyle.

"The goal of the seminar was for the students to get a handle on entire career planning," Naylor said.

Seminar topics included interviewing for positions and tips on how to search for job openings.

"Some of the best ways in finding out whether there are openings in your field is through networking, which is simply talking to people who are in your field," she said.

EARN has been doing career-planning seminars for 1½ years. Representatives travel around the country giving presentations at universities.

Students nearing graduation are mailed information explaining the seminar. Those interested in attending send $35 to cover travel expenses and supplies.

"The reason I attended the seminar was to get a professional overview on what to do and what not to do when I began looking for a job," said Linda Burnett, senior in interior design. "It was worth the $35 because now I feel like I have that extra edge needed to compete in the tough job market."

City finalizes airport plans

By The Collegian Staff

The Manhattan City Commission adopted a master plan for the improvement of the Manhattan Municipal Airport at a meeting Tuesday night.

The plan, already approved by the Airport Advisory Board, is hoped to fulfill the future needs of the growing airport.

"The airport currently serves about 41,500 people per year," said Steve Bensen of Coffman and Associates, who produced the plan. "Our studies indicate that number will rise to 81,000 by the year 2005."

The plan is divided into three phases, with expected completion within the next 20 years.

The first phase involves construction of taxiways running parallel to the two existing runways and additional parking areas for commuter and private airplanes.

The first phase is scheduled for completion within the next five years.

The second phase consists of construction of a new and larger airline terminal to be located along the primary East/West runway. The present terminal, located on the secondary North/South runway, will be converted to private use.

The third phase will involve lengthening the secondary runway to 4,500 feet. The additional length will allow larger aircraft to use the runway.

Funds for all three phases will come from federal and local organizations. The budget for the first phase is expected to exceed $2.5 million. The Federal Aviation Administration will pay $2.2 million.

The commission also requested that the Airport Advisory Board look into the possibility of Junction City and Fort Riley sharing the local funding with Manhattan.

In other business, the commission approved the location of a pedestrian activated traffic signal.

Debate teams rate nationally

By The Collegian Staff

The junior varsity debate team placed three teams in the top six at a national tournament in competition with 29 teams from across the country.

The annual tournament sponsored by the National Cross Examination Debate Association was March 20-22 at Johnson County Community College in Overland Park, Kan.

The duos tying for fourth place were: Cathy Doud, freshman in journalism and mass communications, and Pat McGranahan, freshman in education; and Stacey Schwarz, freshman in business, and Steve Collins, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine. A third team of Pete Gregov, freshman in general arts and sciences, and Thom Walker, sophomore in restaurant and hotel management, placed fifth in the tournament.

In order to place at a national tournament, a team must advance to the top 16 teams.

"We have good teams; we were looking to place," Collins said of the teams' performances.

Doud took fifth place overall at the meet, competing against 63 other speakers.

"This is a good sign of where we are and where we will be next year," said Ed Schiappa, debate team coach and assistant professor of speech.

Schiappa said he was pleased with the debate performance because all the team members were first-year members and they were only beaten by second-year team members. K-State was the only school to have all teams entered placing in the tournament.

"Next year we will be unstoppable," Walker said, referring to the junior varsity team

Although Collins said the team members have made great strides in improvement this year, he foresees more improvement next year with the help of Schiappa.

"Ed is a great coach; he brings out the best in you," he said.

The varsity debate team nationals are April 4-6 at the University of Louisiana in Baton Rouge. Two teams will make the trip. Schiappa said that the goal for the teams is to place in the tournament in which they will be competing with more than 200 teams from throughout the nation.

Walker said the three junior varsity teams would have qualified for the varsity debate team nationals, but they are unable to go because they lack funds.

Actor to present play on Jesus' life

By The Collegian Staff

"Testament," a one-character play on the life of Jesus, will be presented by visiting actor-author-playwright Norman Dietz at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Catskellar.

The dramatic work will cover the life of the Jesus of the Gospels including his birth in poverty, life of healing and teaching, his clash with the local religious and political establishment, his capture and trial by the authorities, his death by Roman crucifixion and his rebirth from the tomb, said David Stewart, minister of the American Baptist Campus Ministry.

Dietz, from Orient, N.Y., will meet with drama classes during the day Thursday. He has been "widely and highly acclaimed for his writing and acting," Stewart said.

"His dramatics should bring old accounts very much to life and bring participation from audience members. I think it'll be interesting as far as what he does with the material."

As a special Lenten season program, "Testament" is sponsored by American Baptist, Ecumenical Christian, Roman Catholic and St. Francis Episcopal campus ministries.

Good intentions turn 'cliche' in movie

By GARY JOHNSON
Collegian Reviewer

"Lethal Weapon," starring Mel Gibson and Danny Glover, starts off as a reaction against the mindless, chest-thumping brand of patriotism in Sylvester Stallone's films. In "Cobra" for example, the search-and-destroy mentality was made to look completely admirable.

Film Review

In "Lethal Weapon," the Cobra/Rambo character, a crazed Vietnam vet named Martin Riggs (Mel Gibson) whose family was killed 11 years ago in an automobile accident, is definitely on the edge. He seriously considers suicide. He's now a cop who shoots to kill every time a crook forces him to pull his gun. His only contact with reality is through his job.

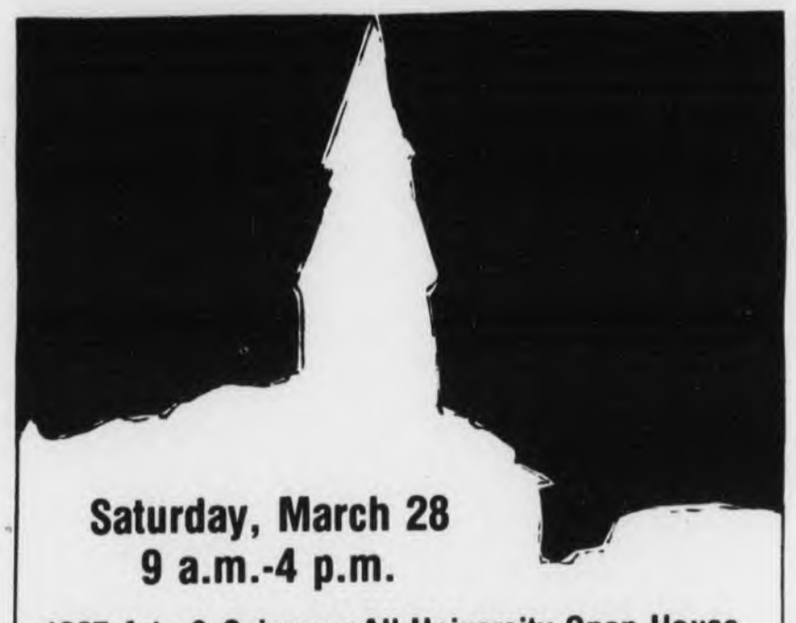
The police psychiatrist realizes he might be dangerous and recommends he be relieved of duty, but instead of losing his badge and gun, he gets a new partner, Roger Murtaugh (Danny Glover).

Murtaugh has just turned 50. He's happy with his life and would just as soon coast until retirement age. But Riggs doesn't know how to coast. He's on overdrive every hour of the day.

Salt and pepper combinations are nothing new. Look no further than last summer's "Running Scared" with Billy Crystal and Gregory Hines, or try "48 Hours" with Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy.

Gibson's character is also a cliche. How many times is Hollywood going to use a character's experience in Vietnam as an excuse for the film's violence? But these cliches are balanced by the realistic background given to Murtaugh.

He's one of the most interesting black characters to come along in years. His family looks a bit like the Cosby bunch (including a Lisa Bonet look-alike daughter), but they are less cute, and that makes them much more realistic. In contrast to the Cosby's neat and clean home, the Murtaugh home looks lived in. Shelves are overstuffed; the furniture is a bit worn, and uncompleted remodeling scars the kitchen walls.



But the majority of the movie is action-filled as Riggs and Murtaugh hunt down a killer. As they close in, they uncover a drug smuggling ring. From then on the movie never slows down for a second. There's an exciting scene in a desert, where Murtaugh confronts the drug smugglers. And there's a thrilling chase down the middle of a Los Angeles boulevard — armed with a high powered rifle, Riggs, on foot, pursues the killer, who's in a car.

These scenes are captured by the dazzling photography of Stephen Goldblatt. In the movie's quieter scenes, he uses a documentary-like style, but when the action heats up, the camera becomes mobile, gracefully swooping down streets and pulling us into the middle of the action.

But even with all the movie has to offer, "Lethal Weapon" is never quite as compelling as it promises to be. The realistic home life scenes never mesh with the essentially comic book crime story and the Mickey Spillane-influenced tough guy heroics. The filmmakers forget about the interesting characters they've developed and turn their movie into a roller coaster ride where nothing matters except providing thrills.

At this point the movie also turns ugly. There's a torture scene where Riggs is given electrical shocks over and over. At times like this the movie becomes a parody of hard-nosed crime fiction, complete with a villain (played by Gary Busey) who's so hardened he'll hold his arm over an open flame (and not even flinch) just to show how tough he is.

But most disappointing of all is the movie's ending where the filmmakers end up endorsing Rigg's search and destroy mentality. This completely negates the film.

And hey pal... don't forget the BREAD

Stories by Dana Bradley
Photography by Chris Stewart

Contrary to popular belief, Grandma did not invent homemade bread.

Breadmaking began 10,000 years ago in the Fertile Crescent, a part of the Middle East that follows an imaginary line drawn from Egypt through Palestine and Syria and south along the Euphrates and Tigris rivers to the Persian Gulf. It was there that wheat was first a grass.

It is believed that the first bread baked was unleavened bread baked by the sun. The Egyptians usually get credit for inventing the oven and discovering leavening.

Bread bakers began to compete with each other to produce fancy loaves for offerings to pagan gods. Drawings of some of the breads are in the pharaohs' tombs in the Valley of the Kings.

Bread was frequently used as money. Egyptians paid the slaves who built their pyramids with three loaves of bread a day.

The Greeks later refined methods of milling flour and baking. The Romans learned from them and carried the skills to what is now Europe.

When the Christian era began, bread continued as the staff of life. Jesus, teaching his followers to pray, said: "Give us this day our daily bread."

Early Christians used fancy loaves for feasts on church holidays such as Christmas and Easter, and to give thanks for the end of the harvest season — similar to Americans' celebration of Thanksgiving.

During the early colonial years, corn was more plentiful than wheat; thus, corn bread was more common than wheat bread. The Indians showed the colonists how to grow the corn and prepare it for meals.

Pioneer women improved upon the Indian techniques, and many of those techniques are still used today.

With the application of science and management, bread baking has been simplified. The use of electric mixers, automatic heat controls on ovens and electric knives are a few of the tools used to simplify the bread-baking process.

Kneading bread continues to be an important method, giving the baker the feel of the springy, pliable dough.

A slow, but fun, process of making bread is the sourdough method. A starter is needed to make sourdough bread. To make a starter, milk is poured into a stone crock or glass container (never metal) and left to stand, uncovered, in a warm place (80 degrees) for one day or until it bubbles or ferments.

If bubbling occurs, add one cup of flour to the milk and continue to let the mixture stand in a warm place (80 degrees) for two to four more days, depending on how long it takes the entire surface of the mixture to bubble and give off a sour aroma.

Once a starter is ready, some of it should be saved and kept in the refrigerator until ready to use again.

For yeast breads the basic ingredients are: wheat flour, yeast, liquid — usually water or milk, salt, sugar, lard, butter, margarine, salad oil or shortening.

Flour is the main ingredient because it contains protein. The protein develops in long elastic strands that stretch and trap the bubbles of carbon dioxide gas the yeast gives off as it grows.

The protein forms a framework of the bread, enabling the bread to hold its shape when baked.

Yeast consists of living plants that feed on sugar and flour as they multiply. Carbon dioxide gas emitted by the plants causes the dough to rise.

Active dry yeast is the result of removing water from moist yeast. Active dry yeast has a keeping quality of approximately one year from the date stamped on the airtight package.

A way to recognize top-quality bread is to see if the loaf is plump with a tender, golden crust. A slice should also be soft, springy, and a little moist.

PIZZA SANDWICHES

Cut one loaf Italian Bread in half lengthwise. Spread with butter. Combine 3/4 cup of lean ground beef, ½ cup of grated Parmesan cheese, ½ teaspoon of dried oregano leaves, one teaspoon salt, 1/8 teaspoon pepper, 1½ tablespoons minced onion and 1½ cans of tomato paste.

Spread mixture on cut sides of bread. Place, cut side up, on baking sheet. Top with thin slices of two ripe tomatoes. Bake for 20 minutes at 350 degrees.

Remove from oven; top with eight slices processed American cheese. Return to oven until cheese melts, about five minutes. Cut to make eight to 10 servings.

BRAN ROLLS

1 package of active dry yeast
½ cup warm water(110-115 degrees)
½ cup boiling water
½ cup shortening
⅓ cup sugar
½ cup whole bran
3/4 teaspoon salt
1 egg
3 cups sifted all-purpose flour

Sprinkle yeast on warm water; stir to dissolve. Pour boiling water over shortening in mixing bowl; stir in sugar, bran and salt. Cool to lukewarm. Beat egg with rotary beater and add to bran mixture. Stir in yeast and mix well.

Stir in flour, ½ cup at a time. Cover and let rise in warm place until almost doubled, about 2½ hours. Punch down. Drop dough from spoon into greased muffin-pan cups, filling cups half full. Cover and let rise until doubled, about one hour.

Bake for 15 minutes at 375 degrees. Makes two dozen rolls.

IRISH PAN ROLLS

1/4 dough for batter rolls
1/4 teaspoon garlic salt
1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine
1½ tablespoon finely snipped parsley

Shape dough in one-inch balls. Place in lightly greased 8-inch round layer cake pan. Cover; let rise in warm place until doubled, about 35 minutes.

Combine garlic salt and butter. Brush lightly over tops of rolls. Sprinkle with parsley, finely cut with scissors. Cover; let rise about 5 minutes.

Bake in oven for 15 minutes or until done at 400 degrees. Remove from pan and place on rack. Makes about 18 rolls.

Art, science of baking brought to Manhattan by institute

Manhattan is a focal point for the baking industry, said John Cannon, communications coordinator for the American Institute of Baking, and the community benefits because AIB brings in students.

"The Wheat Commission, Wheat Quality and the U.S.D.A. grain and marketing research is located in Manhattan, which supports the industry of baking," he said. In addition, the K-State Bakery Science Club offers bake sales that raise money and give students a chance to see their baked goods purchased by the consumer, which also promotes the industry.

Yet AIB does not work with K-State.

"K-State and AIB don't work together, except that they'll let us use some of their equipment," he said.

AIB was established to promote the cause of education in nutrition and in the science and art of baking, and bakery management.

Students from all over the world attend AIB.

"Approximately 30 percent of the students here are international students," he said. "There are students from K-State at the institute. K-State has more milling and grain science, whereas AIB works with baking and equipment."

The AIB offers several short courses and two 19-week courses. Short courses range from English Muffin Technology to Electrical Troubleshooting for Bakery Maintenance Engineers. The courses run from three days to two weeks in duration.

The 19-week courses in Baking Science and Technology are designed to assist capable students by offering advanced training in supervisory and management positions in the baking industry.

The course includes subjects such as baking mechanics, equipment maintenance, bread and cake production shops, baking science, mathematics and chemistry.

Other special seminars and courses are held throughout the year in Manhattan and other locations in the United States.

These short courses offer AIB graduates and others in the industry an opportunity to update their technical knowledge and sharpen their baking skills.

"Requirements to get into AIB are a high school diploma and two years' experience in the baking industry," Cannon said.

Individual training is a method of instruction used to assist students in a short period of time.

Individual training can be held in the AIB's food-processing shops or in the individual's own facility.

"Students get a lot of hands-on training here," Cannon said. "They are here from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. They are in lecture until noon, and the rest of the time is spent in the labs. The students actually get to see what happens to dough when equipment breaks down, or the effect of time on dough."

Baking is not AIB's only concern. Basic research in the areas of cereal science and nutrition is conducted to help ensure the application of advances in science to the food-grain processing industry.

Chadd adding punch to 'Cat lineup

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

David Chadd has been playing baseball since he was 5 years old, but never as well as he has been performing lately.

Chadd, a junior first baseman by way of Barton County Community College in Great Bend, was rated the top hitting prospect of this season's newcomers.

So far this season he has met those lofty expectations while compiling an outstanding batting average and coming through in the clutch for the Wildcats.

"He's doing a great job hitting. He's very aggressive and he's always going to get a good cut in. If a pitcher makes a mistake, he's going to hurt him," K-State Coach Mike Clark said.

Clark is right.

One example that stands out is this scene: On March 8, the 'Cats trail Texas Christian University, 6-3, and it's K-State's last time at bat. Chadd steps to the plate with two outs and the bases loaded.

He takes the first pitch, then proceeds to spank a grand slam home run high into the Fort Worth sky to give K-State a 7-6 lead it would never relinquish.

"He was looking for a fastball, and the pitcher hung a breaking ball right out over the plate and he just turned on it and got all of it," Clark said. "He's that type of a hitter.

"He's a kid we like to have up to bat in a key situation with the game on the line because he's going to get good cuts and he's going to put the ball in play with some juice on it," Clark added.

The 21-year-old Wichita native said that was one of the highlights of his career.

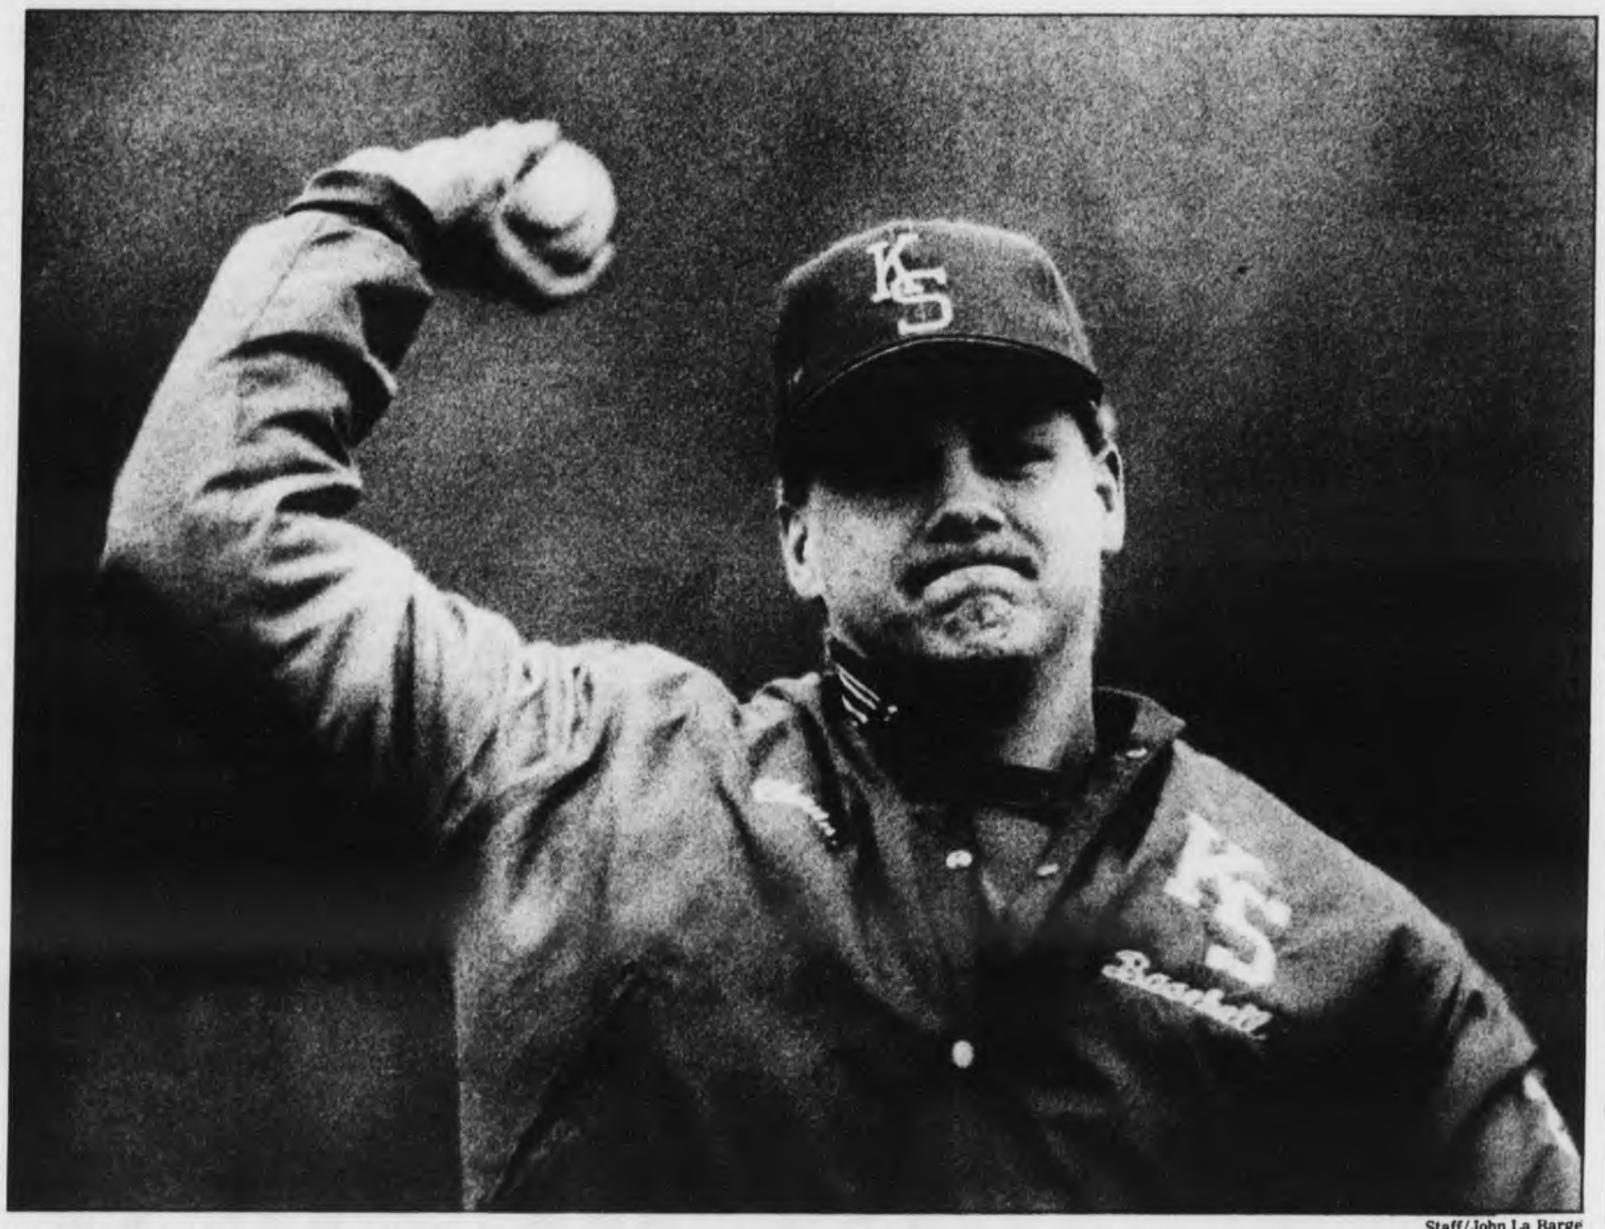
"I wasn't looking to hit the ball out of the park. I just stood up to the plate with the bases loaded, trying to at least score a couple of runs to keep us going. He just hung a curveball and I just happened to be looking for it and I got it out of the park," Chadd said.

"It was a great feeling. It was the first time I've ever hit a grand slam in my life."

Another punishment Chadd dealt to an opposing pitcher was a March 19 bombing incident at Tulane University in New Orleans. That's when Chadd crushed what was estimated to be about a 420-foot blast straight into the lighted scoreboard.

"It was just one of those things. He threw a pretty decent pitch, I guess, and he threw me a fastball. I got under it a little bit, got it up in the air and it just took off," Chadd said.

Chadd, who has also served as a designated hitter this season, currently has a .516 batting average and a slugging percentage of .935. Those statistics lead the team in both categories, so it appears Chadd isn't having a tough time making the transition from junior college.



"I think I've adjusted pretty well so far. I mean, I'm really on a hot streak right now and I know it's going to go down probably, but I'm seeing the ball well right now and that helps a lot," Chadd said.

Chadd is also the leading designated hitter for the 'Cats this season with seven hits in 13 plate appearances as a DH. Chadd, 6-foot-0 and 180 pounds, attributes most of his success to others.

"As far as the key to my success goes, I've gotten a lot of credibility through the teaching of my dad. When I was young he taught me key points on hitting. I had an older brother that played ball, too. We were a big baseball family," Chadd said.

Chadd, who bats and throws right-handed, also played AAU baseball last summer with a group of junior college players who were preparing to make the switch to major colleges. He said that helped him to achieve success as a hitter at K-State.

"Just playing ball during the summer and keeping up on it is really all it is. There's nothing much to it, just see the ball and hit it. That's about what I do."

Staff/John La Barge

David Chadd, first baseman and designated hitter for the K-State baseball team, transferred from Barton County Community College and has added to the Wildcats' offense early in the season. Chadd posted a .455 average during the Wildcats' spring-break road trip through the South.

Poor outing earns Black bullpen job

By The Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Kansas City Manager Billy Gardner said lefthander Bud Black would pitch out of the bullpen after Black gave up five hits and three runs in his last outing.

"As of now, he'll be in the bullpen," Gardner said of Black, who has allowed 22 hits and seven earned runs in his last eight innings.

"When we go to a five-man rotation, I don't know. We'll go a month with a four-man rotation."

Black was hit hard by the Chicago White Sox on Sunday, yielding a double to Jerry Royster, the first batter he faced. Ken Williams, Harold Baines and Carlton Fisk led off the next inning with singles.

"I don't like to give up hits," Black said. "I don't know any pitcher who likes to give up hits.

"What it boils down to is I've thrown too many pitches in the hitting zone. When that happens, you're going to give up hits. It's been that way for 100 years. When I'm giving up hits, I'm making mistakes. You don't make mistakes, you don't give up any hits. That's what spring training is for. That's why they have it, to get us into game situations."

Black had his best season in 1984, when he was 17-12. He was sent to the bullpen early last season and responded by saving nine games and posting a 2.34 earned run average.

"Hopefully, my stuff and pitching is good enough where I'm not going to give up that," Black said. "I've felt I've been a key man of this pitching staff for five years. And I expect that to continue. In what role, I'm not sure yet."

Rookie David Cone is also a consideration for the fifth spot in the rotation. Cone has a 1.50 ERA over 12 innings.

Rain cancels athletics

By The Collegian Staff

Mother Nature has played havoc with K-State's spring sports schedule this week as two baseball games and a tennis meet have been cancelled due to rainy weather.

Tuesday's baseball game against Lincoln at Frank Myers Field and today's action with Northwest Missouri State in Maryville were cancelled. Neither game will be rescheduled.

In women's tennis, the KSU Invitational slated to begin at 9 a.m. today at the L.P. Washburn Recreation area, was also postponed.

Tennis coach Steve Bietau said a make-up match with Kearney State will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday. The 'Cats will not play Northwest Missouri, Bietau said.

K-State's baseball team is next scheduled to play Thursday when the 'Cats host Augustana-South Dakota.

Tark says he would prefer to face LSU

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Nevada-Las Vegas will not be facing the team Coach Jerry Tarkanian would have preferred in Saturday's Final Four matchup with Indiana, but count on him to show up in New Orleans anyway.

"I'd rather have played LSU than Indiana because I thought we had a better chance of beating them," Tarkanian said Tuesday. "I just wanted to play someone I thought we could beat.

"For that matter, I'd rather have played Pacific," Tarkanian said as an afterthought, referring to a Pacific Coast Athletic Association opponent.

UNLV beat Iowa 84-81 and Indiana edged LSU 77-76 Sunday to advance to the semifinals of college basketball's championship tournament.

Also on their march to New Orleans, the Runnin' Rebels defeated K-State, 80-61, in a second-round West Regional Game at Salt Lake City.

Tarkanian said just being in the Final Four is more than he allowed himself to dream last fall. He has contended since preseason practices began that the four teams making it to New Orleans would have to be not only talented, but also lucky. He stuck with that assessment Tuesday.

"I thought we were very good and very lucky," Tarkanian said of the NCAA playoffs. "I thought all the teams that made it were very good and very lucky. In fact, if you played the tournament over again, I think you would have four different teams in the Final Four."

The Runnin' Rebels ended the regular season ranked No. 1 in the nation, a spot they held for 12 weeks in the Associated Press poll. The heady success of this year's team is still tough for Tarkanian to comprehend.

The Rebel coach credits the leadership of his six seniors with much of this year's success. He cited an example in Sunday's game when senior guard Gary Graham approached him in the closing minutes of UNLV's dramatic come-from-behind victory.

Cocaine

Do You Know about Cocaine and Crack?" The brochure includes a description of the physical effects of cocaine use.

The brochure states cocaine causes an increase in blood pressure and heart rate that can do permanent cardiovascular damage. Other effects of long-term use include ulcers, kidney damage, strokes, malnutrition and respiratory disorders. If used in large doses, the drug may cause dizziness, blurred vision and vomiting.

"With cocaine and crack, there is no antidote to overdose," Arck said. "It speeds you up and gets you going, and it can cause cardiac arrest."

Cocaine users can build up a tolerance, but, "it's a double-barreled shotgun."

"As you develop a tolerance, your nervous system is also becoming more sensitive to (the drug)," he said. "You could overdose the first time or after a year of using it. It's just unpredictable."

Considering that cocaine costs about $100 a gram, it can turn into a very expensive habit.

"The weight of a penny (2.5 grams) would cost $200 to $250," Arck said. "(But) you don't necessarily have to have money to do drugs. You need to have a connection.

"Cigarette smokers can smoke a lot of cigarettes without ever buying a package. But, if you're not in the culture, it's harder to score."

Many cocaine users are also dealers. Arck said the profit they make from selling cocaine depends on how pure it is, how much it is cut (mixed with another substance) and who is buying the drug.

"I just can't imagine that much really pure cocaine gets to Manhattan," he said. "(But) the higher the demand, the more pure it gets."

"We have ideal breeding grounds for drug activities because of the mobility of our population base," said Capt. Larry Woodyard of the Riley County Police Department. "The age is prime, and with the mobility, it certainly provides the opportunity to produce illegal substances."

The campus police department cooperates with the Riley County Police Department and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation on drug cases, including cases involving the undercover purchase of illegal substances.

"We have no specific funding for undercover work, and our officers become known very quickly," Beckom said.

"If you've got the money and the time to go out on the street and you want drugs, you can get them," he said. "We have a diverse enough community that it wouldn't take long."

Fire

it was on fire until somebody came in from the street and told me," she said. "I went up to look, and sure enough, there was a fire."

The second level of the building is leased by Shult and used as a studio, offices and storage area.

When she looked upstairs, Shult said she noticed that part of the ceiling in the room above her store had fallen in. No one was in the upper level of the building, but she said a music lesson in the upstairs studio had been completed about 45 minutes before the fire started.

Shelley Mann, manager of Benetton, said as far as she could tell the store had received no water damage.

"I asked the chief and he said if it hadn't come through by now, he didn't think it would," Mann said at 10 p.m.

She said she could not determine if the store had sustained any smoke damage.

"I can't tell yet," she said. "It was real smokey in the back, but I'm hoping I got here quickly enough that we could thin the smoke out."

Mann said she was worried that the fire could have gotten out of control because of the age of the building.

"It could have taken out a couple of buildings quickly," she said.

She said the owners of the Benetton store, who live in Lawrence, would be in town today to survey the damages.

Chartier stood and watched the firefighters pouring water on his building. His son, Larry, who manages the building, said the structure is considered a landmark.

"It's not totaled, but there's extensive damage," he said.

Smith said no further investigation would be conducted.

"We've taken our pictures, and we had adequate light up there," he said. "It was very confined, and there was no reason to believe that it was anything other than an electrical problem."

No citations will be issued for faulty wiring in the incident, Smith said.

"Sometimes these problems just occur," he said. "Some of these buildings are quite old."

Smith said the fire department inspects the buildings each year. Ballast-related problems are quite frequent, he said.

Imelda Marcos, have we got a shoe for you.

The K-636 for women.
The K-626 for men.

And for you too, Ferdinand.

You can replace a closet full of shoes with a single pair of Kaepa athletic shoes, because a Kaepa can change its colors.

Just snap out the colored logos, and snap in new colors. We have dozens—from Auntie Red to Manila Vanilla.

So you can match your clothes, your school colors, or your mood.

With a fraction of the money you save by not buying 12,000 pairs of shoes, you can buy Ferdinand a pair of Kaepa shoes that change colors, too.

The K-650 for women.
The K-640 for men.

And since living well is the best revenge, Imelda, Kaepa shoes have two moving parts, each with its own separate lace. This design does for your foot what independent suspension did for your stretch Mercedes.

So you two trend-setters can feel perfectly comfortable while making a perfect fashion statement.

Which is maybe the only statement you and Ferdinand should make for a while, Imelda.

Kaepa. Say "Kay-pa"

Cindy Johnson learned the alphabet, her colors and how to tie her shoes at an earlier age than her older brother Arlon did.

The children's mother, Linda Johnson, attributes differences in her children's learning to Project Head Start, a federally funded preschool program in which Cindy is enrolled but Arlon, now a first grader, was not.

Head Start is designed to better prepare children from low-income families for elementary school.

Although Head Start is operated in the same manner as other preschools, Manhattan Head Start Director Yvonne Lacy said the program has a much broader role.

Besides developing basic learning skills, the program provides children with a complete physical and follow-up examinations, as well as updated immunizations.

To cover the children's nutritional needs, each child is served two meals a day. Lacy said these meals replace breakfast and lunch or a snack and lunch, depending on what time the child arrives at the building.

Lacy said many such children progress to second or third grade with what administrators believe are learning disabilities or behavioral problems when such problems can be easily corrected by early detection.

Lacy said she remembered one case in particular involving a child with obvious attitude problems. She and her staff recommended a dentist correct his teeth, not realizing it would make a difference in his personality, she said.

"The child had a whole personality change," Lacy said. "The dentist said he was in pain (before the dental work)."

While Head Start covers many areas of a preschooler's life, Lacy said she still feels the program's role is preparational.

"We have to make sure we provide the kinds of things to the children that they need to go into the school district," she said.

If the sole purpose of Head Start was to provide a free preschool for low income children, Lacy said the program would be very expensive. However, Head Start has many components, making the program much more valuable.

Lamb said the investigation halted the group before many of the counterfeit licenses were completed.

"We are only talking maybe two or three (licenses) at the most that were finished, and we got some partially finished."

A lead in Wichita, the hometown of the four, prompted the investigation, Lamb said.

"The logic that went into that decision was that they had six states involved in the compact and they didn't think any one of those states could sit around the table and pick another state to be the site," Walker said. "Nobody wants the darn thing."

After the June 2 meeting of the commission, the developer will take on responsibility for seeing the project through to completion. The developer is expected to do additional research on whichever site is chosen and must seek approval for their plan.

"This will be done fairly soon because the site has to be picked and some preliminary site plans developed by Dec. 31," Walker said.

Two federally set deadlines must be met, Walker said. By 1989 each state must have an approved plan for disposing of the low-level radioactive waste produced within its borders.

Cindy Johnson learned the alphabet, her colors and how to tie her shoes at an earlier age than her older brother Arlon did.

The children's mother, Linda Johnson, attributes differences in her children's learning to Project Head Start, a federally funded preschool program in which Cindy is enrolled but Arlon, now a first grader, was not.

Head Start is designed to better prepare children from low-income families for elementary school.

Although Head Start is operated in the same manner as other preschools, Manhattan Head Start Director Yvonne Lacy said the program has a much broader role.

Besides developing basic learning skills, the program provides children with a complete physical and follow-up examinations, as well as updated immunizations.

To cover the children's nutritional needs, each child is served two meals a day. Lacy said these meals replace breakfast and lunch or a snack and lunch, depending on what time the child arrives at the building.

The individual attention each child

Lacy said many such children progress to second or third grade with what administrators believe are learning disabilities or behavioral problems when such problems can be easily corrected by early detection.

Lacy said she remembered one case in particular involving a child with obvious attitude problems. She and her staff recommended a dentist correct his teeth, not realizing it would make a difference in his personality, she said.

"The child had a whole personality change," Lacy said. "The dentist said he was in pain (before the dental work)."

While Head Start covers many areas of a preschooler's life, Lacy said she still feels the program's role is preparational.

"We have to make sure we provide the kinds of things to the children that they need to go into the school district," she said.

If the sole purpose of Head Start was to provide a free preschool for low income children, Lacy said the program would be very expensive. However, Head Start has many components, making the program much more valuable.

Basketball coach Lon Kruger kisses "Squeaky the Pig" to raise money for the K-State chapter of Students Against Driving Drunk Wednesday in the Union Courtyard. Kruger was given the "honor" after students donated money for their pig-kissing nominee in a week-long fund-raiser.

Lon Kruger said it wasn't too bad, but it wasn't too good either.

Kruger, men's basketball coach, and Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, shared the honor of kissing "Squeaky the Pig" to raise money for the K-State chapter of Students Against Driving Drunk.

"I grew up on a farm, but I've never done anything like this before," Kruger said. "I never imagined that I would do anything like this."

About 100 students gathered at noon Wednesday in the Union Courtyard as the two "winners" kissed the pig.

The K-State chapter of SADD collected money this week in the Union. Students were given the opportunity to vote for their "favorite" nominee to kiss a pig.

Nine candidates from the University community volunteered for the Kiss a Pig contest.

Connie Garrison, freshman in family and child development and president of the SADD chapter, announced the winners.

"When the final vote came in, I really didn't think this could happen, but we had a tie," Garrison said. "I kept expecting someone to call in with a last-minute pledge, which didn't happen," she added.

"I went through the vet med department to locate a pig and they sent me over to the swine farm on campus," Garrison said.

Wildcat guard Steve Henson, freshman in general arts and sciences, was the third finalist.

Although the contest was originated to create interest in the newly orgainized SADD chapter, Garrison said some people have misconceptions of what the SADD chapter is trying to accomplish.

"(SADD) is not here to stop students from drinking; we're just trying to stop the people from driving drunk," she said.

"We didn't raise as much money as we had wanted to raise," Garrison said. She would not reveal how much money was raised.

However, the SADD chapter members learned a lot from the experience, she said.

Garrison said the money-raising efforts had positive results by attracting students to see what the organization is about.

"I think with the amount of people who showed up today, the activity really got our organization better known," Garrison said.

When asked if kissing the pig was as bad as he anticipated, Bosco joked, "It was worse."

The pig had no comment.

Bureau to charge 4 students in scam

By The Collegian Staff

Four K-State students have been ordered to appear Friday in Sedgwick County District Court, where they will be formally charged in connection with reproducing Kansas driver's licenses, said John Lamb, director of the Division of Alcohol and Beverage Control.

Lamb said Wednesday the felony arrest warrants were the result of a three-month ABC investigation into the scam.

He said the four — working individually on various components of the fake driver's licenses — used artificial driver's license data cards made in a print shop, coupled with a likewise bogus stamp of the state seal for the reproductions. Polaroid pictures of individuals were then affixed next to the forged names of the secretary of revenue and the director of the Division of Motor Vehicles.

The fake ID was then photographed, printed and laminated, Lamb said.

"At this point we will never know whether they were doing it for just their own personal use or whether their intention was to give them to friends or sell them to people," he said.

Lamb said the investigation halted the group before many of the counterfeit licenses were completed.

"We are only talking maybe two or three (licenses) at the most that were finished, and we got some partially finished."

A lead in Wichita, the hometown of the four, prompted the investigation, Lamb said.

"Apparently, Wichita is where most everything transpired," he said. "Someone called the Wichita Police Department with some information, they gave the information to us and we followed up on the investigation."

Waste disposal subject becomes major issue

University plot stores radioactive materials

By JUDY LUNDSTROM
Staff Writer

The Riley County Landfill is not the only waste disposal site in Manhattan.

Just north of the KSU Stadium parking lot on the Agronomy Research Farm sits a small white trailer on a one-acre, fenced-in lot.

Since the late 1950s, the lot has been the site of low-level radioactive waste disposal for K-State. In 1981, the trailer was moved in and used for temporary storage of hazardous wastes and short-lived isotopes, said John Lambert, chairman of the radiation safety committee and director of public safety.

Although nothing has been detected yet, Lambert said there is a slight possibility of the site causing contamination similar to that at the Riley County Landfill.

"It's feasible that it may happen," he said.

Currently, Lambert said only low-level solid radioactive wastes are buried at the plot.

However, before 1981, when the Environmental Protection Agency and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment began regulating waste disposal, Lambert said no regulations existed for waste disposal.

"They buried a lot of stuff because it was legal then," he said.

The trailer is used to store both hazardous wastes and radioactive wastes, Lambert said. EPA controls hazardous wastes, while KDHE regulates the radioactive wastes.

While hazardous wastes may only be stored a maximum of 90 days, the radioactive wastes may be stored indefinitely, he said.

"That's just the way the rules are written," he said. "They're not written entirely for an environmentally safe situation."

After 90 days, the hazardous wastes are shipped out by a brokerage firm to waste sites in towns such as Clarence, N.Y., Pinewood, S.C., and El Dorado, Ariz.

Lambert said once the wastes are loaded, disposal is the responsibility of the broker.

"Whatever they do with it, I don't really care," he said.

Lambert said all the wastes produced at K-State are low-level, tracer amounts.

"We don't have any high level stuff on campus," he said. "A lot of the stuff that we use goes down the drain."

K-State departments dispose of quite a bit of carbon-14, tritium (a hydrogen isotope), phosphorus-32 and iodine-125, Lambert said, all of which are low-level wastes.

The burial site is only for low-level solid wastes from science labs, such as lab jackets, pipettes and paper towels, he said. Wastes are buried one to three times a year at a depth of 10-12 feet.

The water table at the disposal site is about 60 feet, he said. To check for contamination, a monitor well has

Kansas legislators to face critical decisions

By JONIE R. TRUED

Two critical decisions face Kansas lawmakers within the next three weeks concerning hazardous and radioactive waste disposal, said Lt. Gov. Jack Walker in an interview Tuesday.

Walker has been appointed by Gov. Mike Hayden to be acting head of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

In a current proposal legislators must decide whether to outlaw the burial of low-level radioactive waste materials within state boundaries, Walker said.

In another bill they must decide whether Kansas will remain a member of the Central Interstate Waste Commission.

"As soon as we settle this issue of whether we're going to be in the compact or out of the compact, we will know who we are dealing with," Walker said.

The outcome of both bills affects Kansas' relationship with the compact, Walker said, because all the compact's research involving site selection is directed toward an underground disposal facility.

If legislators decide to prohibit underground burial of low-level radioactive waste and a Kansas site is selected for the facility, the developer chosen to construct the facility will be forced to comply with state law. The developer would then have to build an above-ground facility.

Walker said a developer will be chosen at the next meeting of the compact commission on June 2.

"...they will select a private company who wants to build a facility for the storage of low-level radioactive waste. They sent out letters to bidders in February," Walker said.

Compact voters will not choose the site where the facility will be constructed or even the state where it will be located, Walker said. After the developer is chosen that company will select the facility site.

"The logic that went into that decision was that they had six states involved in the compact and they didn't think any one of those states could sit around the table and pick another state to be the site," Walker said. "Nobody wants the darn thing."

After the June 2 meeting of the commission, the developer will take on responsibility for seeing the project through to completion. The developer is expected to do additional research on whichever site is chosen and must seek approval for their plan.

"This will be done fairly soon because the site has to be picked and some preliminary site plans developed by Dec. 31," Walker said.

Two federally set deadlines must be met, Walker said. By 1989 each state must have an approved plan for disposing of the low-level radioactive waste produced within its borders.

Teens take over school for 6 hours

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — A heavily armed teen-age couple claiming to be leftist guerrillas held more than 900 school children hostage Wednesday and surrendered to the armed forces after more than six hours.

A guerrilla communique late Wednesday denied any connection with the takeover.

The boy and girl left the school in a blue mini-bus belonging to the army, but police sources would not say where they were being taken. There were no reports of injuries.

Gen. Adolfo Blandon, head of the joint chiefs of staff, entered the school to help persuade the couple to end the siege. Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, also helped.

"I have the impression that they are not guerrillas, because their arguments are too incoherent," Rosa Chavez said after the siege ended at about 4:45 p.m. (5:45 p.m. EST.)

The takeover of the San Jacinto school, which includes first through ninth grades, started at about 10:30 a.m. It came a half-hour after rebels in the neighborhood intercepted a police patrol car, killing two officers and wounding four other people.

Bill would guarantee basic skills

TOPEKA — High school graduates would be guaranteed they'd learn basic skills, or have the opportunity to return to school free of charge for remedial training, under a bill discussed Wednesday before a House committee.

Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, sponsored the bill, which would require the state Board of Education to provide remedial education to graduates of Kansas high schools if a Kansas business reports the graduate is deficient in basic English and mathematics skills.

The school district which gave diplomas to illiterate students would be charged the cost of providing remedial training, under Apt's bill.

Apt said she introduced the bill as "food for thought" and did not want the House Education Committee, of which she is chairwoman, to act on it this session. But she warned education officials she is serious about the proposal and will pursue it.

"I think it's a concept that we need to look at," Apt said. "School districts need to be responsible when they graduate a student."

Proposal focuses on 'brain drain'

TOPEKA — A spokeswoman for the state Board of Regents urged a Senate committee Wednesday to endorse one of a series of proposals designed to help stem the "brain drain" of intellectually talented students from Kansas.

The proposal would let the state regents give up to 1 percent of the state scholarship money it distributes each year to honor high school students to help pay for special honors programs at state universities.

"In essence, Kansas must become a recruiting agent for its own students," Clantha McCurdy, director of student financial aid for the regents, told the Senate Education Committee.

Honors programs for high school students at state universities are designed to provide challenging work and enhance students' self-esteem, McCurdy said. But to gain college credit for the classes, students must pay regular tuition costs.

"Providing a positive educational experience to high achieving students at Kansas colleges and universities will enhance the chances of that student selecting the same or a similar Kansas institution for postsecondary study," McCurdy said.

Falwell dispels Bakker comeback

FORT MILL, S.C. — The Rev. Jerry Falwell said Wednesday it would be impossible for the Rev. Jim Bakker to return to his scandal-wracked evangelical empire anytime soon, while a new board member of the organization vowed: "There will be no funeral for PTL."

Meanwhile, two California religious activists said a $115,000 payment made by Bakker was not blackmail as he claimed but settlement of a threatened lawsuit over his sexual dalliance with a church secretary seven years ago. It remained unclear where most of the money ended up.

And a Tennessee minister said he plans to show leaders of Bakker's denomination, the Springfield, Mo.-based Assemblies of God, evidence that PTL officials attempted to cover up reports of the sexual misconduct.

Falwell, who will preside here Thursday at the first meeting of the new PTL board he formed since succeeding Bakker as chairman last week, told a civic club luncheon Wednesday in Cocoa Beach, Fla., that he had heard rumors Bakker wants to return to PTL.

He added that he didn't know how he and the new board could "deal with the credibility issue" if Bakker were to return right away.

"I'm not saying he could never return," he said. "That's up to God, not Jerry Falwell."

Filibuster holds off Democrats

WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats, after failing a third time to choke off a Republican-led filibuster, abandoned on Wednesday their drive to force President Reagan to fully account for all assistance flowing to Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

The Senate vote — 54-46 in favor of cutting off the filibuster — was six votes short of the total needed to end debate. However, it provided evidence that there may be a Senate majority ready to reject new aid installments.

"The vote bodes well for halting Contra aid next fall," said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the deputy Democratic leader.

"The 54 majority vote to stop the filibuster clearly reflects the erosion of support for the Contras," Cranston said. "It shows the growing concern over the cover-up of what happened to the money for the Contras, money that has either vanished or gone into illegal channels."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., was more cautious.

He had said earlier in the week that he wanted to show that a "constitutional majority" of at least 51 votes could be rallied against Contra aid.

But Byrd told reporters on Wednesday that reaching that level now does not automatically mean the Senate will defeat Reagan's request for an additional $105 million for the Contras when it reaches the Senate floor this fall.

"The $105 million will have a hard time," Byrd said. "But events between now and then could affect votes — including mine."

Jet wreckage found in mountains

MARCH AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — The wreckage of an F4-C Phantom jet was sighted by aerial search crews Wednesday in the rugged San Bernardino mountains where a plane piloted by the eldest son of entertainer Dean Martin vanished five days ago.

"We don't know about any survivors," said Holly Kress, a spokeswoman for the San Bernardino County Department of Forestry.

Dean Paul Martin and Ramon Ortiz, both captains in the California Air National Guard, have been missing since radar lost track of their F4-C Phantom on Saturday.

Lacy said the program involves each parent in the actual planning of their child's education.

"We sit down with the parent and design a program where we can try to do what the child needs," she said. "You are involved with the parent in trying to emphasize how important it is that when they go into the school district, they make sure they have some impact in what goes on with the child."

In addition, Lacy and her staff try to make parents aware of what their rights are to provide their child with an education.

"A lot of parents are very reluctant to go up to school and say, 'I would like to know how my child is doing,'" Lacy said. "What we are encouraging is that the parents are the primary educators of their child, that they are the parents and that they have rights to give their kid a head start."

Lyne Stitz, a community volunteer with Head Start, said emphasis on continued education within the home is also important.

"The idea is that the parent understands what is going on in the school so that they can continue it in the home," she said.

Stitz said many children do not receive the parent-child interaction they need because many of the parents are struggling to support the family.

One criticism of the Head Start program throughout its existence has been the argument that children do not retain the material taught and that the level of retention drops sharply as the child enters the third and fourth grades, according to "Head Start in the 1980's: Review and Recommendations," a government report on the program.

Lacy agreed that helping the children to remember what they are learning is a problem, but she said it stems from the lack of constant parental support of what the program is trying to accomplish.

Nevertheless, parents and school administrators do see progress in the children.

"I think the school districts do see a difference in the children as they go into the schools, and I think the parents see the difference," Lacy said. "They see the child doing things they didn't think they were capable of."

Pamela Skaggs, Manhattan, said the progress her daughter, Jennifer, 4, has made while in Head Start surprised her.

"She was very shy, but now she does talk," Skaggs said. "She seems more open."

In addition to preparing Jennifer for kindergarten, Skaggs said Head Start has made her daughter more aware of the educational process.

"This way, she won't be scared (to go to kindergarten)," she said. "She's mastered that."

Johnson said she has seen definite differences between Arlon and Cindy.

"I think they (Head Start students) get along much better with other kids and get used to a half-day of school faster," she said.

Cindy has learned numerous things quicker than her brother such as tying her shoes, learning the alphabet and learning the differences between colors.

"It is also true that a lot of times, when a child is in high school and they're asked what their best experience was, they've been known to mention Head Start," Lacy said.

PROBLEMS AND SOLUTIONS

Lacy sees further problems with educating children from poorer families because of the current push to send children from middle- to upper-class backgrounds to preschools and prepare them for kindergarten.

"The preschools are really pushing, so when the children go to kindergarten, many of them are about ready to read," she said.

Lacy said many of the preschool children are receiving additional training because of their socio-economic status, so the children who do not receive any preschooling are behind even more.

"We're sort of running to catch up," she said.

Of the 69 children currently involved in the local Head Start program, 12 are part of the home-base program that requires a teacher to bring daily lessons into the child's home. Each day is carefully planned and designed to ensure that the child develops a wide range of skills and takes part in numerous learning activities.

Head Start utilizes K-State students, as well as parent and community volunteers to help teach the children.

Marvin Kaiser, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropoloy and Social Work, said students in the Introduction to Social Work class must complete 50 hours of community service in an area of interest to fulfill one of the course requirements.

"They go out and volunteer time, and Head Start is one of the areas that they can work in," he said.

Shelly Bucher, sophomore in family studies and social work, recently completed several months of work with the program. She said she found it very hard to leave.

"I always felt so welcomed and needed that I really felt guilty when I left," Bucher said. "They were always thankful that I even showed up."

The program began in 1964 when the federal government asked a panel of child development experts to outline a program to help disadvantaged preschool children. The Office of Economic Opportunity launched Head Start as an eight-week summer program in 1965.

"It was first called a pilot program, and in fact it's still called one," Lacy said.

Lacy said the Manhattan program was established in 1965 by faculty within the Department of Family and Child Development, which was renamed the Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

Originally designed as a summer program, Head Start operates throughout the regular school year in Manhattan.

Head Start receives federal funding from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

In 1986, Head Start served 452,000 children and their families in the United States and its territories.

After excessive delay, teachers getting credit

Consider the following job notice: "Wanted. Someone to shape the future of and educate American children. Must have unfailing grasp of knowledge and a morally unquestionable character.

"Unreal patience required. Must be willing to accept sub-par salary, with little hope of achieving career satisfaction. Immediate openings available."

For too long — far too long — the above job description applied to this nation's school teachers. The professionals in whom America placed its greatest trust also had to receive this country's most anemic recognition.

Of late, however, there has been an encouraging nationwide trend to increase teachers' salaries. According to Ralph Vatalaro, executive director of the New York State Public Employment Relations Board that oversees labor relations between local governments and employees, "The politicians are all trying to outdo each other to give the most to education.

"Everybody is on the bandwagon that says there ought to be excellence in education," Vatalaro added. This desire for excellence in education has translated into a 7.6 percent salary increase for Kansas teachers during the last 10 years, although this year has seen only a 3.68 percent increase. The average now stands at $23,427 per year.

Whether these increases will convince more qualified people to accept teaching positions remains to be seen. That is at least as much a matter of greater prestige as well as higher salaries.

Nonetheless, the salary increases are a positive step in upgrading education, even if only as a means of keeping pace with the higher cost of living. Without providing some form of job incentive, Kansas can abandon any hopes of attracting the best and brightest to fill teaching positions.

U.S. should let Aquino run nation on her own

With political violence in the Philippines once again making headlines, U.S. foreign policy makers need to take a long and careful look at future implications before involving this country in something which could have serious worldwide repercussions.

In response to Philippine President Corazon Aquino's complaints Sunday of the sagging military aid from the United States, she should first consider the unrest within her country's military. The communist insurgency has broken the December cease-fire and right-wing rebels have left all attempts at reconciliation in a deadlock.

After a year of attempting peaceful negotiations for unity in her country and being frustrated by the lack of progress, Aquino said she will no longer consider non-violent means for ending the strife. She now believes the solution to terrorism in her country is "not social and economic reform, but police and military action."

The United States' final relinquishing of support for Marcos and his fraudulent administration proved a good move last year, but the latest requests for more military support shouldn't prompt overreaction by U.S. officials.

Going on the U.S. experience in foreign involvement, there should be a hesitancy to respond to Aquino's request for military aid until her party and its left- and right-wing opponents are willing to work toward a peaceful settlement.

Aquino's hopes for a unified nation won't come through force from a foreign power. Although negotiations seem out of the question with battling factions at the moment, the unification must come from within.

The Filipinos must decide on being one country — without U.S. guns.

Aquino has made an oath for freedom of Filipinos. She should by all means continue this crusade with renewed spirit.

However, for right now, the United States should merely be concerned observers and let reform run its course in the Philippines.

Jews are not to blame for Japanese economy

Japan has designated a scapegoat for its recent economic problem — the Jews. According to a March 23 "Newsweek" article, Japan is blaming its economic inflation and work-force layoffs on the business practices of Jewish businessmen and businesswomen.

Fanning the fire of anti-Semitism in Japan is a multitude of books, including "If You Understand the Jews You Can Comprehend the World: 1990 Scenario for the 'Final Economic War.'" The book is a best seller in Japan, having sold over 500,000 copies.

In the case of Japanese, they — not the Jews — are the source of their problems. The success of their exports has caused the value of the yen to increase so much the economy is hindered.

This perpetuation of antiquated stereotypes is not flattering to the Japanese.

Of moral consequence

Honesty a rare human quality

RON HONIG
Collegian Columnist

Of all the traits we possess, honesty is definitely one of the most respected. I've always considered myself an honest person and I'm sure most people think the same of themselves. However, I've been questioning my honesty lately. I wonder if I'm consistent enough to put myself in that category.

I view an honest person as someone who is law abiding, one who always gives another a fair deal and one who without fail answers a question honestly. Unfortunately many people, including myself, don't carry honesty to its fullest definition. We enjoy the right to bend the meaning to fit our conscience.

It's frightening to take a hard look at ourselves, evaluating this one aspect of the group of actions and attitudes that make up what we call "right and wrong." We feel we are honest because we do not lie or steal — but do we? How big does a crime have to be before it counts against us? For some, swiping a pen from the office or taking a sheet of paper from a roommate would be dishonest. For others, supplies provided on a job are considered fair game.

Many times we feel our actions are right and others' are wrong because we have an exception, some factor which justifies our action. In a cafeteria line we find no problem with filling a glass of soda, taking a swallow and refilling. We console ourselves with thoughts like, "I put in more ice than normal" or "Last time I didn't fill my cup completely."

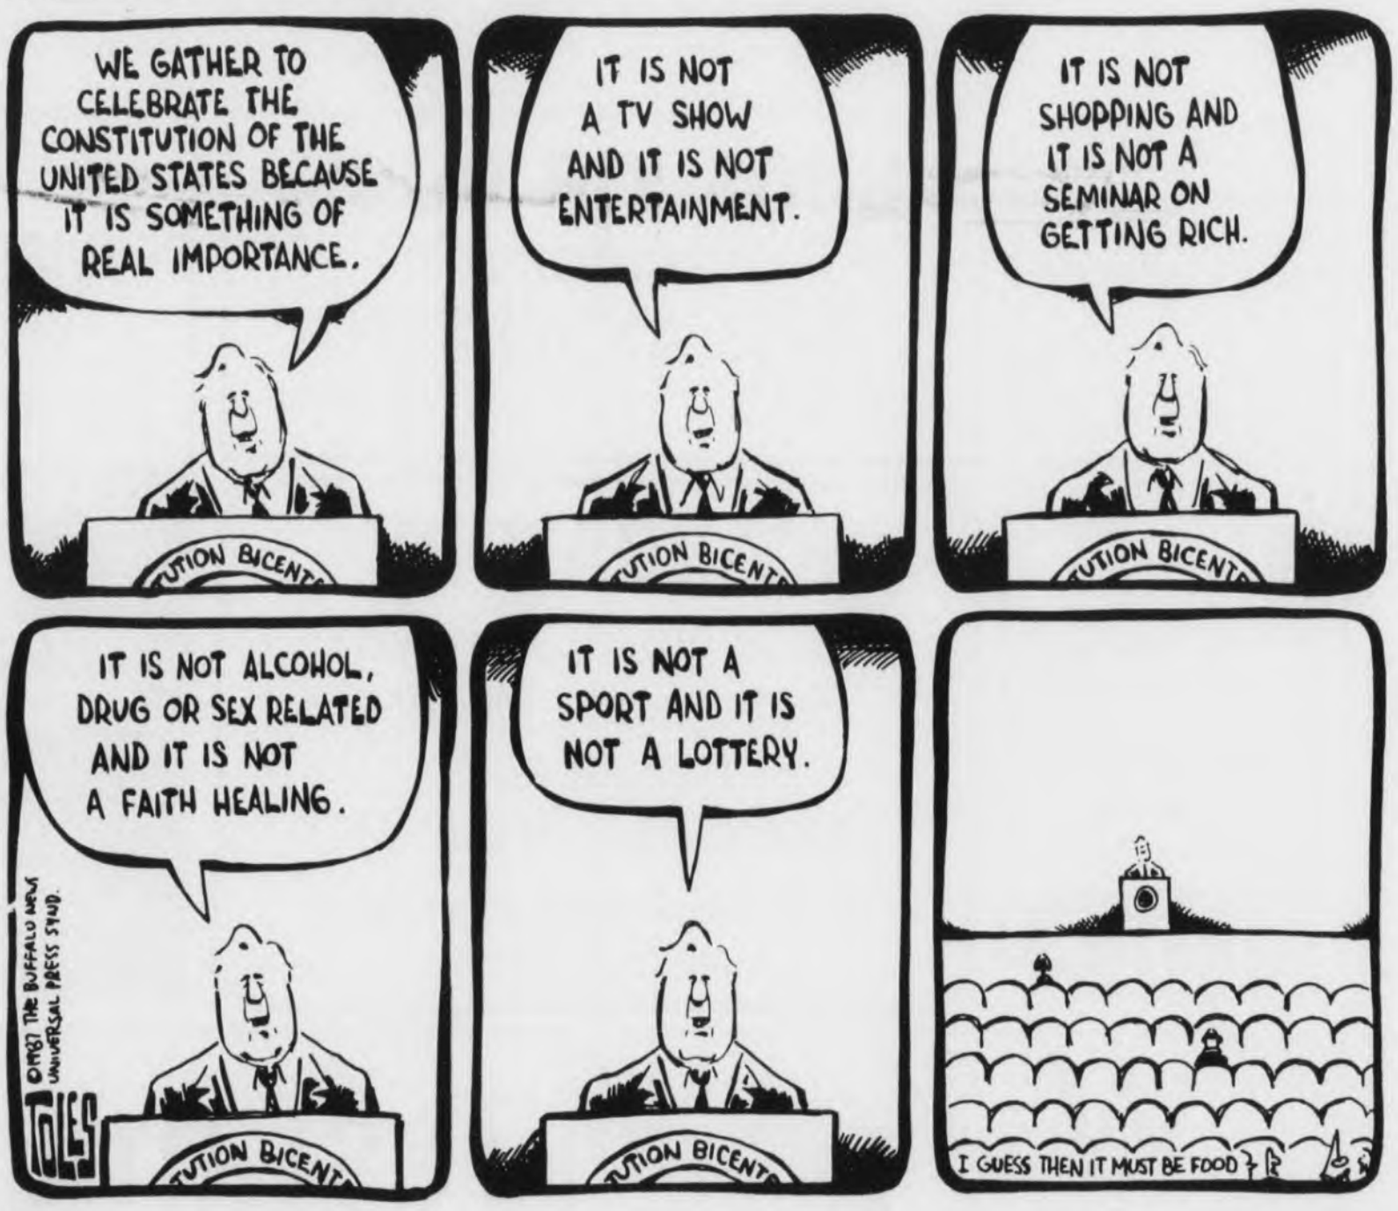
How often do we tell a clerk she has given us too much change, and how often do we speak when we receive too little? How often do you exceed the speed limit? Do we take these incidents into account when evaluating ourselves, or are these overlooked because they are not important or because to change them would mean changing our lifestyles. Must an honest person be honest to the core or can we fit the criteria with just a high percentage of truthfulness and law abidence? Reluctantly, I would have to say one would need to meet all of the above criteria to earn the title of a truly honest person. Even more regrettably, I don't make the grade.

I would have thought of myself as someone who never lied, always making it a point to tell the truth. At least, that is, until I really thought about it. I find I don't always relay a totally truthful message to the people I converse with. At times I tell people what will make them happy or at least satisfied. Not that I mean to lie to them, I simply don't want to hurt their feelings. What can a person say when asked, "Does this outfit look all right?" Naturally, one is going to be as tactful as possible and probably respond to the effect, "Sure, you look fine," even though you may be thinking, "Your clothes would make rags look good."

There are advocates of these types of lies. Some believe telling lies is necessary to avoid conflict and hurting others' feelings. To always tell the truth, some believe, would force us to disclose our deepest feelings toward each other. In certain circumstances this would strengthen relationships, but in others, one's true feelings may disappoint the other party.

Nicholas Humphrey said it best: "To speak the truth among people who do not want to hear it is considered almost an aggressive act..."

Being totally honest would be similar to people being able to read minds. Answering a single question could disclose your feeling about another. One could refuse to answer, but that would even give away the truth in some cases.



Truthfulness is not limited to verbal responses. Saying nothing may also relay a message that is false. I've sat in many meetings where I did not agree with an idea or motion being discussed but remained silent when objections were called for. Thus, I was not being totally honest.

Children are told from early childhood to tell the truth, but we are quick to lie to them when they ask about death or sex. Growing up, we often detour from the truthful path with playful fibs that go uncriticized. Telling someone their shoe is untied or that there is a spider crawling on them are effective ways of getting a reaction from them. We teach young that we can lead people on with simple fibs. No wonder people lie — we are so trusting that we allow ourselves to become gullible.

In their book "The Right to Lie," Robert Wolk and Arthur Henley discuss the day-to-day dishonesty that may protect a relationship from constant trauma. They say: "The only lie worth telling is an untruth that might alter a situation for the better. It must be justifiable, technically proficient and appropriate to the occasion." The authors also remark: "A successful marriage is the product of lies as well as love."

On the other hand Roger Gould states in his book "Transformations:" "The truth, as best as we know it, must be our goal, no matter where it leads us." I believe the truth, presented in a positive manner, is best, but to keep from being a hypocrite I admit I have a long way to go.

To become a totally honest person is no easy task. It requires extreme awareness and discipline. A willingness to put oneself on the line, to risk angering or even disappointing others. A check must be kept on lying and other forms of dishonesty because, like drugs, we can become addicted to the feeling of getting away with "little crimes." Each person must decide what is best for themselves. I hope the next time people call themselves honest they stop and think about it.

Police winning

Editor,

Following a five minute visit to Lafene, I found a ticket on my properly parked car. The "ticketor" explained that this was policy to dissuade cheaters who parked there for class and that I would need to get certain forms verified at Lafene to prove my innocence.

Apparently on the K-State campus you are guilty until proven innocent. Way to go guys — (police 2, students 0) — and chalk up another one for K-State's finest.

Praise academics

Editor,

Lately, it seems like everyone from the student body to University president is concerned about "maintaining the excellence" at K-State. Excuse me, but just what does that mean? This overused phrase is neither concrete nor specific, because it doesn't refer to any particular action or event that we do. This is just an example of the attempts by University officials to commend our academic programs with flowery adjectives and cliches.

The truth is, the academics here at K-State are "excellent" but let me explain why...in "real words." Did you know K-State has more winners of the Truman Scholarship in the last five years than Harvard, Princeton, Cornell, Duke and MIT? This particular award was established by Congress in 1977 for students in leadership positions. In real words...that's cool!

Similarly, we are in the top six nationally from 1974 to '85 for Rhodes Scholarship winners among state universities in the entire United States. Yes, K-State! When you compare us to such prestigious universities with these very indicative awards, you can see by illustration just how great we really are.

Most of these facts came from a compiled report of K-State's accomplishments submitted to University Relations in Anderson Hall this year. If it weren't for this letter, how would you know?

Did you know that, in the Speech Department, we have members of the forensics and debate teams competing in the national championship tournaments this year as we have years before too? But all you see in the headlines is that the basketball team made the second round in its national tournament. So, does this mean that academics take the back seat?

I think if we had more coverage of these types of events using "real language" instead of ineffective rhetoric, the real "excellence" of K-State would be seen concretely. I'm not saying that we should abandon the praising of our sports, just that it and academics should both be equally "cool" in their own respects.

Bill creates study of Senate

By MICHAEL MORRIS
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate will vote tonight on a bill to establish an ad hoc committee to study current student body representation.

The bill states the committee is needed because questions remain about accomplishing the goal of improving student representation.

"There is still student concern about how they are being represented in student government," said Eirene Tatham, senior in construction science and one of the sponsors of the bill.

If the bill is passed, the committee would be composed of 11 members: three student senators and eight at large students.

The bill also states that a broad representation of all living groups and colleges shall be taken into consideration when selecting the committee members.

Senate will also vote on a bill to approve revisions on the Lafene Student Health Advisory Committee bylaws, rules and regulations. One revision would increase the number of faculty members on the committee from one to two.

Senators will hear the first reading of a bill revising the ratification process of Student Governing Association constitutional amendments. The bill states the revision is needed so a formal procedure will exist for submitting a proposed amendment to college councils for ratification.

The bill also states college councils currently ratify constitutional amendments having little knowledge of the amendment. If this bill passes, the student body president will transmit a copy of the amendment to the president of each council.

In return, the bill states each college council will submit a written statement of the result of the vote to the student body president.

Also being introduced during first readings is a bill to establish a committee which would propose to Senate any revisions to the SGA constitution and bylaws needed to make them more coherent.

Senate also will review a bill allowing a special allocation to SGA to cover the 1987-88 SGA elections.

The bill states elections cost $381.37, however, the 1986-87 SGA budget allocated only $300. The special allocation would cover the remaining cost.

Senate will also seek approval of appointments for standing committee chairs, parliamentarian and a finance committee member.

Seeking approval for standing committee chair positions are Eirene Tatham, senior in construction science, Academic Affairs; Charlene Nichols, junior in journalism and mass communications, Communications; Shelly Wakeman, junior in pre-law, Senate Operations; Lori Shellenberger, junior in pre-law, State and Community Affairs; and Wally Brockhoff, junior in agricultural economics, Student Affairs and Social Services.

Justin Sanders, graduate student in physics, will seek approval for the parliamentarian position. Janet Netherland, sophomore in business administration, will seek approval for the vacant Finance Committee member position.

Spokesmen advocate higher prices for American agriculture products

By CHRIS DOLL
Staff Writer

American farmers must be paid higher prices for their goods if the United States wants to eliminate the national deficit, reduce worldwide political strife and stabilize the economy.

This was the consensus of three speakers at a Raw Materials Economics Seminar Wednesday in Justin Hall. The seminar was co-sponsored by the American Agriculture Movement of Kansas and the Department of Agricultural Economics.

"What the farmers need is not more credit but parity prices," said Vince Rossiter Sr., senior economic analyst for the National Organization for Raw Materials.

Parity prices, or prices "at par," describe a ratio of the prices farmers receive for bushels of their commodity compared with the prices of other goods.

The ratio is based on the prices of agricultural commodities in 1914 through 1918, known as the Golden Age of Agriculture, because prices for agricultural products then were some of the highest in history.

If a bushel of wheat could buy a shirt in 1914, those who advocate 100 percent parity maintain a bushel should buy a shirt today.

The average price of a bushel of wheat in February of this year was $2.50. This amount is about 38 percent of parity according to "Agriculture Prices," a publication of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. If the price reflected 100 percent parity, it would be $6.59 a bushel.

Raising prices to parity would cost the government money, but the returns would be worth the cost because the growth in the economy would be "real wealth," said Charles Walters Jr., vice president of NORM.

"Farm income has a quality no other income does," he said. "It not only helps the farmer and rural businesses, but it means a new share of total wealth and new money into the money supply."

In other industries, companies buy and sell the same things from each other, never generating new money. Farming, however, produces a commodity that can generate money for the first time on the market, Walters said.

Because farm income can power the economy with new money, the government should not rely on money which it cannot produce. In this way, the national debt will decrease, Walters said.

"The only sound way to get real money into the system isn't through tax benefits and cute incentives but through production of food and fiber," he said.

All sectors are dependent on the farm industry, Rossiter said. Therefore, it is in the best interest of the national economy to keep it strong.

"If the labor force (population) grows, then it follows they will need more raw material for food and housing. The money they use will mean the economy will grow that much more," he said.

Rossiter said farm prices are so low the government is sometimes able to manipulate the world market and undersell worldwide prices. This causes political strife in other countries because they cannot sell their wheat at prices over production costs, he said.

"I'm not real sure there isn't somebody out there who isn't smarter than us and will someday shoot us in the back," Rossiter said.

The higher farm prices would not necessarily mean more people would want to become farmers in hopes of high incomes, said Thayne Cozart, president of NORM.

Hayden declares engineering week

By The Collegian Staff

Through a proclamation signed by Gov. Mike Hayden, the College of Engineering has been granted its own special week.

The proclamation, signed by Hayden Feb. 19 in Topeka, designated the week of March 22-28 as K-State Engineering Open House Week.

Ray Hightower, assistant to the dean of engineering, said the proclamation "has been a tradition for (about) 15 years." He said Steel Ring, an engineering honorary that coordinates Engineering Open House activities, requests the proclamation every year.

Engineering Open House activities will officially begin Friday noon with the Engineers' Open House Parade. The floats will line up at King Hall and travel up Mid-Campus Drive to Seaton Hall.

The Yellow Brick Award will be given to the float that best illustrates the theme of this year's Engineering Open House: "Engineering: From Visions to Reality." Hightower said the name of the award is a lighthearted reference to the Yellow Brick Road from "The Wizard of Oz."

Hightower said the purpose of many of the Open House activities is to "let the students have fun before they get to the serious (aspect) of operating their displays."

Hightower said groups of two or more students worked an average of 150 total hours on each display for the Open House. He said the planning process for these displays, which will be shown in Durland, Seaton and Ward halls, usually begins in November or December. Work on the displays is not usually completed until February or March.

Students will not have the only displays. Hightower said NASA will display a space suit and hardware used in space exploration. NASA will explain the design and development processes being used to produce new space suits.

Industrial displays by engineering-related corporations will be present.

OUTSTANDING BUSINESS GRADUATES AND BETA GAMMA SIGMA
the National Honor Society for Collegiate Schools of Business

Membership

Membership in Beta Gamma Sigma is the highest national recognition a student can receive in an undergraduate or masters program in business or management. To be eligible for membership, a student must rank in the upper 5 percent of the junior class, upper 10 percent of the senior class, or upper 20 percent of the masters class. Members are usually elected to membership and publicly recognized during the spring term.

History

Beta Gamma Sigma was founded as a national organization in 1913. To establish and maintain an active Beta Gamma Sigma chapter, an institution must be accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, the recognized accrediting agency for undergraduate and masters programs in business and management.

Purpose

Beta Gamma Sigma has three purposes:

to encourage and reward scholarship which is carried out through election of outstanding students to membership;

to promote advancement of education in business which is conducted through awards, recognition of outstanding institutions and chapters, and through publications of the Society; and to foster integrity in the conduct of business operations which is a focus of publications, talks, and seminars sponsored by the Society.

Membership in Beta Gamma Sigma is a signal honor carrying lifetime affiliation with other outstanding graduates of business programs. While almost 300,000 students receive bachelors or masters degrees in business each year, only about 15,000 students are elected to membership in Beta Gamma Sigma.

Students prepare livestock for showing

By SUSAN STAGGENBORG
Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students have spent any spare time during the last four weeks taming and training a timid, young animal or standing knee-deep in mud attempting to teach a stubborn young bull to lead on a halter.

Contestants in the Little American Royal are busy this week trying to catch up on time lost during spring break to get their animals ready for the show.

The Little American Royal gives students the opportunity to work with either a beef heifer or bull, dairy heifer, pig, sheep or horse from the University's farm units. Students sign up for the LAR by paying a $4.50 entry fee and indicating which species they wish to show.

About 165 students are scheduled to show animals in the Little American Royal Saturday, said Kenby Clawson, senior in animal sciences and industry and LAR committee member.

The LAR provides a chance for all students to work with and learn how to show an animal. Previous show experience or an agriculture background is not necessary.

"This year there are a large number of participants that have never shown before, but have an interest in animals," Clawson said. "Other participants have shown before in 4-H."

Students have been working with the animals assigned to them for about four weeks. Participants work with the animals in an attempt to teach them to lead and stand while being shown. Washing and grooming the animals is also part of the LAR experience.

"I was in my animal sciences and industry lab class and my instructor said it would be good experience," said Michelle Linnebur, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine.

Linnebur will be showing an Angus heifer.

"I've worked with her for 2½ weeks to halter break her," she said. Having shown horses before, Linnebur has found that showing principles typically used with horses also work with cattle.

"She has learned quicker than horses," she said.

Making time to spend with her animal has been hard for Linnebur. Car problems and spring break have added to the difficulties of finding time to work with her heifer, she said.

"It's very hard. I've had four tests and two papers this week. Everything is this week it seems," Linnebur said.

"I thought it would be fun and a good experience," she said. Linnebur has tried to work with her heifer three times a week.

"It will be sad not being able to go out and work with her after the show is over," she said.

Dawn Jones, freshman in general agriculture, is showing a Palomino quarter horse.

"I talked to a friend, watched the LAR in the past and watched a friend show," she said. "I've shown horses before so I thought I'd give it a try."

Jones started working with her horse March 4, and has tried to work with it every day. Because of rainy weather, Jones has not been able to spend as much time at the KSU Horse Unit as she would have liked.

"I chose to show horses because I had shown before and wanted to see if I liked showing in the LAR," she said. "The LAR is a good chance for people to get a break from studying and is something to look forward to."

The LAR is co-sponsored by the Block and Bridle and Dairy Science clubs. The show, part of K-State Open House, begins at 1 p.m. in Weber Arena and admission is $2.

Show to offer humor, dance

By The Collegian Staff

Airjazz, a performance of choreographic works of juggling, dance, acrobatics and humor, will be the Open House weekend entertainment at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

The performers, Peter Davison, Jon Held and Kezia Tenenbaum, founded Airjazz in 1982 by exploring juggling as a form of dance theater and rapidly gained a reputation.

The three started out in street theater, branching out into stage productions and forming their full-evening performance "An Evening of Modern Fun."

They have performed throughout the United States in theater and music festivals and have appeared on "The Tonight Show" as well as on British, Canadian and Japanese television shows.

Stephen Riggs, director of McCain, said the artists' performance displays their mixture of traditional juggling and contemporary dance. Their work is known to be unique in the field of performing arts.

Tickets are still available at the McCain box office. Prices range from $10 to $14 for the general public and from $6 to $10 for students and senior citizens.

Competition to test students' driving abilities

By The Collegian Staff

For the second year, the National Collegiate Driving Championships will be at K-State today and Friday. The competition, sponsored by the Dodge division of Chrysler Motors, is hosted by the K-State chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, said Mark DeCou, senior in mechanical engineering and vice president of ASME.

Entrants will drive a car through a course marked by orange pylons in the West Stadium parking lot along Denison Avenue. Drivers will be scored by the amount of time it takes to drive the course and their ability to avoid knocking over the pylons. One second will be added to the time for each pylon knocked over. The person with the shortest time will be the winner.

DeCou said the winner of the competition will be flown to Daytona, Fla., for the national finals. The prizes for the national competition are three scholarships and the use for a year of a Dodge Daytona Shelby Z automobile. The first prize scholarship is $5,000, second prize is $3,000 and third prize is $2,000. Fourth- through sixth-place winners will receive a set of Goodyear tires.

A trailer will be set up in the West Stadium parking lot where students may enter the competition any time between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. Anyone with a student ID from a college or vocational/technical school and a valid driver's license is eligible to enter, DeCou said.

Community helps stranded students

By JONI MANLEY
Collegian Reporter

Arriving Sunday and expecting to depart Monday night, a group of Northern Valley High School students have found themselves still in Manhattan wondering when they will see western Kansas again.

The group, all members of Future Farmers of America, is staying at the Manhattan Holiday Inn and Holidome, 530 Richards Drive, and has received donations from various Manhattan businesses and the University.

Realizing many students did not have a change of clothes, Varney's, 623 N. Manhattan Ave., gave each of them a T-shirt. Hoping to give the students something to do, the University provided the students with free three-day passes to the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area.

The high school is located in Almena, 12 miles east of Norton, and the area has been bombarded with a major winter storm preventing the students form returning.

Every four years the group takes a trip with money they have raised through sales made to the general public. This year they toured the Jeffrey Energy Center, St. Marys and returned to the University to tour Student Publications Inc. and the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Julie Schuler, University pre-admissions representative for the northwest part of Kansas, said the Union provided the group with a free lunch Monday after they found out the students would not be able to return home.

Schuler said the students have been in contact with their parents and are holding up better than their families back home.

"The students are getting a little bored and are ready to go home," she said. "They are not yet sure when they are going to get home, but it should be (Thursday of Friday)."

Darrin Nelson, vocational-agriculture teacher at Northern Valley High School and sponsor of the group, said the students would "all kind of like to go home." He said the first couple of days it was fun, but the students are beginning to get bored and a little homesick.

"Everyone has been super," Nelson said, adding that he appreciates the generosity provided by the University, Varney's, Schuler, the Holidome and other Manhattan businesses.

Many students did not bring much money, thinking they would only be staying two days, and this has limited their activities, Nelson said. Little did they know they would be receiving an extended stay in Manhattan.

Airplanes soar in Durland Hall atrium

By The Collegian Staff

Durland Hall's atrium was filled with a variety of paper airplanes Wednesday night during the second annual Willy's Paper Airplane Contest.

The contest for freshmen and sophomore engineering students was sponsored by Steel Ring, a senior engineering honorary, said Becky Bromich, senior in architectural engineering. Students from different engineering curriculums competed for a total of $500 in scholarships.

The 35 airplanes were judged in three different categories, said Daren Shumate, senior in architectural engineering. In the aesthetic design competition, criteria were appearence, neatness, originality, craftmanship and uniqueness of design. In addition, the airplane had to be able to fly at least 15 feet.

Another category was accuracy of flight. Students launched airplanes from the third-level balcony to a bull's-eye 27 feet away. Each contestant was allowed two throws and was judged on how close the airplane came to the target, Bromich said.

The third category was time aloft. Each contestant was allowed two throws, and airplanes were timed from the moment of release until they landed, she said.

Category winners were: aesthetic design — Denise Rowley, sophomore in civil engineering; accuracy of flight — Daniel Downing, freshman in nuclear engineering; and time aloft — Justin Grusing, freshman in architectural engineering.

Overall, the winners were: first place — James Hawkins, sophomore in mechanical engineering; second — Rowley; third — Downing; fourth — Grusing; and fifth — George Turner, freshman in construction science.

Provost nominee to visit campus

By The Collegian Staff

A public forum has been scheduled for the third and final University provost candidate Friday.

Milton D. Glick, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Missouri, Columbia, will speak and answer questions at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Union 212.

Originally, four candidates were selected as finalists for the position of provost, although Glick did not reveal his identity as the fourth candidate until recently, said Cy Wainscott, director of news and information,.

Glick has been the dean at Missouri since 1983. Before that position, he was chairman and professor of chemistry at Wayne State University from 1978 to 1983 and has been on the Wayne State chemistry faculty since 1966. He has a doctorate from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and was a post-doctoral fellow at Cornell University.

Burglary of greek house under investigation

By The Collegian Staff

The burglary of Alpha Xi Delta, 601 Fairchild Terrace, during spring break is still under investigation, said Art Stephenson, investigator at the Riley County Police Department.

Lt. Steve French of the RCPD said there was evidence of a forced entry through a side window between March 14-16. Total estimated loss of property from the sorority and its members was $2,500.

In addition to the sorority's VCR, stolen items included jewelry, a Minolta 35mm camera and stereo equipment, including a Sony compact disc player, a Pioneer receiver and a Pioneer cassette tape deck.

The theft pattern was unusual, said Cathi Johnson, junior in business and community nutrition and president of Alpha Xi. Items were taken from some rooms throughout the house but not others.

"It was a really weird pattern," she said. "There were some areas where nothing was taken."

But Johnson said nobody was in the house when they closed it at noon on March 14.

Theft of an estimated $3,320 worth of property had been reported at Beta Theta Pi, 500 Sunset Ave., Stephenson said. But the report was unfounded because the items had been misplaced in another room.

Dignitaries recognize classified employees

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's "trench workers" were honored Wednesday afternoon in McCain Auditorium at the 10th annual Classified Employees Recognition Program.

A panel of Kansas dignitaries honored 239 of K-State's approximately 2,000 classified employees for outstanding work, length of service and retirement.

In addition, nine finalists for the 1987 classified employees of the year were honored.

The winners were Phyllis Mentgen, office/clerical category; James Leiker, technical/professional category; and Bernard Wells, service/skilled crafts category.

Mentgen has been an office supervisor in the controller's office and has worked at the University for 26 years. Leiker has worked at the Fort Hays Branch Experiment Station for more than 20 years.

Wells is an animal caretaker with the Department of Surgery and Medicine in the College of Veterinary Medicine where he has worked since 1962.

President Jon Wefald presented Wells and Mentgen each with a plaque, a $25 gift certificate from the K-State Union, $100 cash, a year's family membership to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and a one-year reserved campus parking stall.

Leiker, who lives in Hays, received the plaque and the gift certificate, $175 cash, season tickets to Fort Hays State University football games and season tickets to the Fort Hays State Encore Series, a series of performances by Fort Hays State students.

Ralph Dreiling of the Hays Branch Station and Doris M. Proctor of the Southwest Kansas Branch Station in Parsons received gold pins for 35 years of service. Eleven classified employees received their 25-year pins, 40 received 15-year pins and 131 received 5-year pins.

Forty-six classified employees who retired during the past year or expect to retire by Aug. 1 received certificates from the University.

KSDB awaits power boost

Bad weather slows antenna installation

By The Collegian Staff

KSDB-FM went off the air March 16 to install a new radio antenna on top of the KAKE tower on the south side of Manhattan. Scheduled to go back on air last Monday, KSDB is not expected to return to the air until Friday due to the bad weather.

The delay has mainly been caused by rain and mud, said Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

The steep hill leading to the tower site consists of gravel, dirt and mud. The 2-ton truck needed to carry equipment was not able to climb the hill until Wednesday morning due to muddy road conditions.

"The truck got stuck, but they got it out. They had to hook on to some trees and winch it out," Buller said.

Equipment KSDB no longer needed was removed Wednesday from the top of the tower. KSDB will be putting up the FM antenna and transmission line and testing the new equipment today, he said.

"Everything works and is ready to go; we just have to get the antenna up the tower," Buller said. "Hopefully, we'll be back on the air Friday morning."

In addition to changing the antenna, KSDB is also changing its FM frequency from 88.1 to 91.9. The change was needed because in the future there could be a possible problem concerning interference with TV channel 6 which might be installed in Junction City, Buller said.

The Utility Tower Company of Oklahoma City was hired by KSDB to remove the old antenna and install the new equipment on top of the 200-foot tower.

Along with three employees from the UTC, Buller, Jeff Tullis, KSDB engineer and senior in electrical engineering, and Gary Pettet, electronic technician II, have been helping set up the new equipment.

Final Four teams preparing for New Orleans

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — French Quarter bars and persistent reporters have nothing to do with Indiana's late arrival for the Final Four, said Coach Bobby Knight. It's just that school work comes first.

Nevada-Las Vegas, Providence and Syracuse all flew in on Wednesday to begin on-site preparations for Saturday's semifinals of the college basketball championship tournament. Indiana arrives on Friday.

"As long as I've been involved in coaching, we have never — regardless of the game, whether it's a regular season game or a conference tournament or an NCAA tournament game, first-round or championship game — ever gone to the site of a game more than one day prior to the game," Knight said by telephone Wednesday.

"That's been our policy for 22-23 years. We still have classes today and tomorrow. We'll miss a little class on Friday. We'll get the chance to work out on Friday, and that's the way we've always done it."

UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian, the only coach on hand for the telephone news conference, said one of his reasons for coming in on Wednesday was to give his players a chance to see New Orleans.

"I'm going to let the kids enjoy themselves tonight and after the game," he said. "Starting tomorrow, we will definitely keep our team under close restrictions.

"However, we won't isolate them from the press, because I think it is very important to give them the opportunity to talk to the press and other people. I think that's a real learning experience."

All four teams will be housed in hotels adjacent to the French Quarter, the nightclub center of the city.

Providence Coach Rick Pitino and Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim, speaking by phone, leaned toward Tarkanian's more lenient philosophy.

"We don't have that much time for them to get out much," Pitino said. "It's a lifetime experience for them."

"We want them to have a good time, but we also expect them to concentrate on the game," Boeheim said.

Big East rivals Providence, 28-5, and Syracuse, 30-6, meet in the opening game of the Final Four on Saturday. The regular season ended with UNLV ranked No. 1, Indiana No. 3, Syracuse No. 10, and Providence out of the standings, although getting a few votes from pollsters.

Providence last beat Syracuse 13 seasons ago, the only victory for the Friars in 17 meetings.

Tarkanian flew in ahead of his team and went straight to a pre-tournament press conference. The other three coaches participated from their campus offices.

Las Vegas, 37-1, is picked to win the title. Indiana, 28-4, is Tarkanian's pick for the favorite's role.

"I'm really shocked that we're the favorite. I look around, and Indiana's a great basketball team," Tarkanian said. "I hope those people picking us know something we don't know."

Knight has never hidden the fact that he believes defense is the way to win games. Only this season has Tarkanian's defense been mentioned.

"We've been, always, a great defensive team. The public looks at our scores and says, 'No defense'," Tarkanian said. "We score a lot, and that's because we shoot it quick. We're not into being patient."

"Jerry has never been understood as a coach, as I understand him as a coach," Knight said. "I've always felt that basketball starts with defense.

"I think his trademark has been outstanding defensive play."

New coaches arriving with football team

By The Collegian Staff

K-State football coach Stan Parrish announced Wednesday the hiring of new assistant coaches Dale Steele and Jerry Palmieri.

Steele, 32, comes to K-State after three seasons as an assistant at Wichita State University, which dropped its football program earlier this semester because of financial difficulties.

Before joining the Shockers' staff in 1984, he spent three years at Tulane University in New Orleans where he worked with offensive linemen, tight ends and kickers before becoming the team's and later the school's recruiting coordinator.

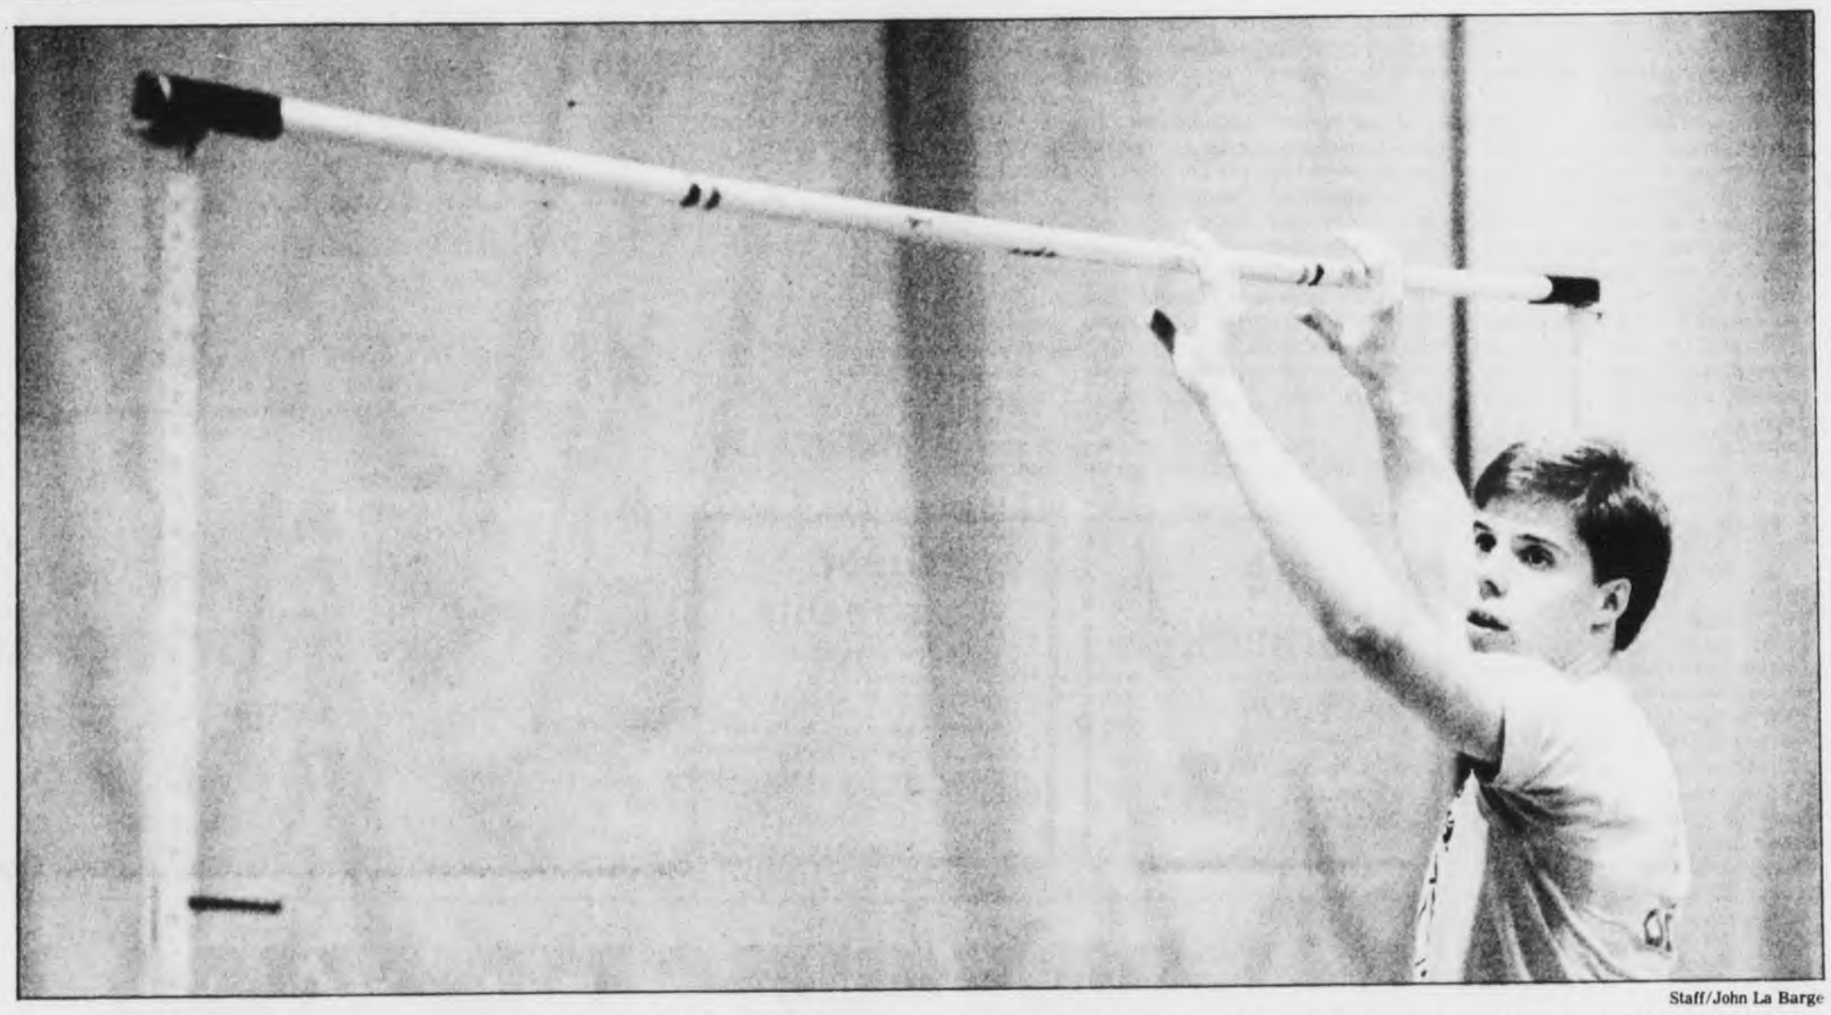
Steele, who will coach tight ends for K-State, has strong recruiting ties in the Dallas area, Parrish said.

"He will recruit the Dallas area for us. He recruited some very fine athletes for Wichita State from that area and that is one place where we were successful at this last recruiting session," Parrish said. "He is a very positive and outstanding addition to our staff."

A 1976 graduate of the University of South Carolina with a bachelor's degree in physical education, Steele played both offensive guard and defensive lineman for the Gamecocks. He also coached one year at A.C. Flora (S.C.) High School.

Steele received his master's degree in 1978 from Ball State University, where he also spent one year as offensive line coach for both the varsity and freshman squads.

By way of Big Eight Conference rival Oklahoma State, Palmieri served as the Cowboys' assistant strength and conditioning coach for two years under K-State graduate and former football Wildcat John Stucky.



Palmieri, 28, replaces Russ Riederer, who resigned in January after six years at K-State to accept a similar job at Purdue University with former Texas coach Fred Akers.

"Jerry comes from an excellent program at Oklahoma State. He is young, intense and full of energy, and can bring some new concepts to an already strong program that was developed by Russ," Parrish said.

Palmieri was an assistant at North Carolina from 1982-84 and assistant at Dumont (N.J.) High School. In 1980 he earned his bachelor's degree in physical education from Montclair State in New Jersey and received his master's in exercise physiology from the University of North Carolina in 1984.

K-State, in its first year under Parrish, finished the 1986 campaign at 2-9 with wins against Western Illinois in its season opener and a 29-12 thrashing of the University of Kansas.

Parrish is entering his 12th season overall as a coach. His 11-year overall mark is 77-29 and his eight-year collegiate coaching record is 57-20. He came to K-State in 1986 after guiding Marshall University in Huntington, W. Va., to back-to-back winning seasons in only two years at the school.

Steve Henson is making the transition from point guard on the basketball floor to track and field, where he plans to compete in the decathlon. While at McPherson High School, Henson won state championships in the high jump and javelin, and could compete on the collegiate level for the first time this weekend at Texas A&M.

Decathlete Henson modifies long-term goals as training switches from basketball to track

By JEFF RAPP
Sports Writer

From dreams of an NCAA basketball crown to visions of competing in the 1996 Olympics as a decathlete in just a matter of days — Steve Henson is not just a basketball player. He's also an extremely talented track athlete.

Henson, a freshman guard this season for K-State's basketball team, doesn'tget to rest now that the Wildcats' campaign has come to a halt.

He is currently training to compete in the decathlon for the outdoor track team. Henson might even high jump with the squad as soon as Saturday at K-State's outdoor opener.

Playing basketball won't hurt Henson's track performance, track coach John Capriotti said.

"No, it absolutely will not hurt his performance at all. He's done it all through high school and he's going to continue to do well here," Capriotti said. "He knows coming off the basketball season what it's going to take to prepare for track and I think he's going to adapt well to it."

Capriotti and Henson agree the two sports complement each other.

"I think a lot of the world-class jumpers play a lot of basketball in preparation for their jumping, so I think they really go hand-in-hand," Capriotti said.

"The two sports go together fairly well, so I think the transition shouldn't be too bad," Henson said. "But the decathlon is a pretty demanding event."

The decathlon consists of a fierce two-day regimen of 10 events. The first day has decathlon participants performing the 100-meter dash, 400-meter dash, long jump, shot put and high jump.

On the second day, the schedule includes the 110-meter high hurdles, discus, javelin, pole vault and 1,500-meter run.

Henson is on the brink of deciding not to go to Saturday's meet because he would be gone for four days, thus losing valuable time to prepare for the decathlon.

"I'm ready to high-jump and compete well, I think, and they said something about throwing the javelin, but I'm not sure if I'm ready for that," Henson said.

"But as little time as I have to prepare for the decathlon, I think a four day trip would cost me some valuable workout time. I need to get on some events I haven't even started training for yet," he added.

As tough a test as the decathlon may seem for the average human and as much dedication as it takes, Henson said he's better at track. But he still claims basketball is his first love.

"Basketball has to be an all-year sport. That's just the way it is. It's always basketball season to me, but sometimes it's basketball and track season.

"Track could definitely be a year-round sport and decathlon could definitely use that much attention, but right now basketball is still my main sport and as long as I can compete in track without hurting my basketball game, then that's what I'm looking at," he said.

Henson, the fierce competitor, has set some lofty goals for his performance as a decathlete.

"My main goal, or it might be more of a dream, is that most decathletes don't reach their peak until their late 20s. So it's kind of a dream of mine to be in the 1996 Olympics," Henson said.

"He's a great competitor. He's very intense, he hates to lose, he works hard at what he does, he's a talented kid and I think all those things combined give him what it takes," Capriotti said.

K-State's track coach described Henson as one who sometimes "burns the candle at both ends." He said the McPherson freshman must learn to take better care of his body if he wants to become a truly great athlete.

"He stays up late once in a while, but he's getting better. He doesn't do a bad job, but he could do better in that area. I think he knows that if he is going to be a great decathlete or a great basketball player, he needs to take better care of himself," Capriotti said.

Henson must be doing something right. As a McPherson High School trackster, he captured first in the Class 5A state championships in the javelin his junior and senior year, and was the state's high jump champion his senior year.

Henson plays basketball almost every day. Capriotti simply made those games a part of Henson's training schedule.

"I told Coach (Lon) Kruger Steve should still be involved a lot in basketball during the off-season and he said, 'Yeah you're right,' and I just worked the pick-up games into his workout. No problem," Capriotti said.

Relievers will throw more against Augustana's Vikes

By BILL LANG
Collegian Reporter

K-State's baseball team is scheduled to play a double-header against NCAA Division II-member Augustana-South Dakota, weather permitting, at 2 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field.

K-State Coach Mike Clark said he views the game as a chance for his relief pitchers to get some much-needed throwing time.

"We don't know who will be starting for us," Clark said. "We are basically going to be throwing the middle-relief and relief pitchers about two to three innings just to get them ready for the weekend series with Oklahoma State."

Augustana enters today's contest at 0-4 with several of its contests being rained out.

"We've had six of our games rained out during our spring road trip," said Vikings' Coach Scott Timmer.

Timmer expressed his team's chances against K-State as being 50-50.

"We've got a lot of respect for K-State," Timmer said. "They're a Division I school and we'll be seeing some better pitching than what we're used to. But we'll go out and play hard and what ever happens...happens."

Clark said Augustana's rain outs may be a factor in how the Wildcats fare after they went 2-7 during a spring break road trip against Texas, New Orleans, Tulane and Nicholls State.

"This gives us an advantage," Clark said. "We've been fortunate to get some playing time under our belts and work some of the problems that might slow us down."

The Vikings are led by Dave Gellerman and Jim Plumhoff, hitting .571 and .455, respectively.

Pitcher Byron Hammerstron is today's probable starter with an 0-1 record and a 3.50 earned run average. Hammerstron, though, was spiked in the Vikings' last game and required stitches in his left knee.

"He was listed as our probable starter, but we'll have to see how he feels Thursday," Timmer said.

NFL's commissioner reinstates Bells; Chiefs will welcome defensive end

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs defensive lineman Mike Bell, who served a four-month prison sentence on a drug conviction, was reinstated Wednesday by the NFL, the Chiefs said.

Bell was ordered to pay $10,000 to a drug abuse clinic in Kansas as condition of being reinstated. The reinstatement was also conditional on his avoiding any further drug trouble and avoiding any conduct detrimental to the NFL or its public image.

The NFL also said Mark Bell, Mike Bell's twin brother who was convicted with him, could play in the NFL. Mark Bell, a former player with the Seattle Seahawks, is a free agent.

"I'm excited about getting everything back in order — getting my life back in order and getting my career back in order," Mike Bell said. "I'm excited the commissioner gave me another opportunity to play. I'm just anxious to get back with the guys and be part of it."

Jim Schaaf, vice president and general manager of the Chiefs, said Mike Bell would be welcomed back to the team.

"We are very pleased for Mike that the commissioner has given him the opportunity to return to the NFL," Schaaf said. "We believe he has the ability, dedication, determination and every right to compete for a position on our team."

The Bell brothers had met with Commissioner Pete Rozelle last December after completing their prison sentences to ask to be reinstated to the league.

The brothers were among 29 people indicted Nov. 25, 1985 in Wichita, their hometown. They were convicted by a U.S. District Court jury June 13.

Mike Bell was convicted on two felony counts of using a telephone to arrange a purchase of cocaine and a misdemeanor count of attempting to possess cocaine.

Mark Bell was convicted on one felony count and one misdemeanor count.

U.S. District Judge Wesley E. Brown sentenced Mike Bell to two concurrent one-year prison terms and ordered him to serve one-third of the time. Mark Bell was also given a one-year term and ordered to serve four months.

The Bells were also fined $5,000.

The twin brothers, who have maintained their innocence, served prison terms at a federal minimum security prison in Minnesota. They were released in December after starting serving time Aug. 11.

Coleman Lockett, a real estate broker in Wichita, testified at the trial that he sold the Bells a quarter-ounce of cocaine for $600. He was given a three-year prison term in December.

The indictment was largely based on six telephone calls intercepted by police in May 1985.

Lockett, in one telephone call to Mike Bell, referred to his efforts to get some "stuff." Lockett testified that the word stuff meant cocaine.

Mike Bell testified that stuff was a reference to details about a proposed sale of a mobile home park.

"Any time you get your name involved with anything like that it's bad," Mike Bell said. "But I really don't want to emphasize that today. That's behind me. I want to look at what's happening that's good."

been placed at the burial site. The well is tested by his department every month or two.

"No problems have been detected so far," he said.

The state last tested the well in April 1985, he said.

"They pumped that thing for two or three hours, and tested it for everything — chemical waste and radioactive waste — and found nothing," he said.

John Paul Goetz, chief of the KDHE hazardous waste section, said the only area his department regulates is the trailer for storing hazardous wastes.

"It's been cleaned out and closed," Goetz said. "The only thing in there now is for 90 days."

K-State did not renew its license for the storage building in December 1986, Goetz said.

"If they store materials less than 90 days, they don't need a permit," he said.

Goetz said KDHE had not inspected the building since it had been closed.

Lambert said canceling the license will save the University about $2,000 a year in inspection fees.

In the event that contamination did result from the K-State burial plot, geologists involved in the soil testing of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum should know about it, Lambert said.

The coliseum site is about one-half mile south of the plot.

"We ran all the tests, and we never had anything that indicated (contamination)," said Jim Starkey, a geologist with Barnett-Stuart Inc. in Topeka.

The firm ran tests on the soil at the coliseum site, Starkey said. The results indicate the pounds per cubic foot of the soil to determine its percent of compaction.

"That tells us if the material is acceptable to be used as backfill there," he said.

Even if the soil was contaminated, Starkey said his tests probably would not have detected it.

"We never had any suspicion of such, and where the material was coming from, there's never been any history of such," he said. "We had no reason that would indicate such a thing happening."

Starkey said he was not aware of the burial plot on the agronomy farm. However, he said he was aware of a river running underground in that area.

The river, the old Wildcat Creek, is an underground tributary that runs through the area, Starkey said. The tributary has many regions containing "lots of water," he said. But even if it did run through the burial plot, he said it probably would not be reaching the coliseum site.

"Water migrates the other way," he said. "We're all uphill from that. Gravity will pull it the other direction."

Though there is a "minute possibility" that some contaminants may have migrated from the burial plot, Starkey said he would not want to cause any alarm to anyone about contamination.

The colisuem architects knew what kind of soil on which they were building the structure, he said.

"They're not going to put it on a toxic waste site," he said. "They're talking about $20 million over there."

Clarence Swallow, associate professor of agronomy, said he was working at K-State when the burial site was opened.

"It kind of irked me at the time," Swallow said. "Back then, we were out in the country. Now it's right in the middle of everything."

He said he had doubts that the site could be causing any contamination because the wastes are low-level.

"But it has always concerned me," he said. "A time or two I took a Geiger counter around the outside, but it didn't do anything."

K-State's basic need is to improve technology in disposing of its wastes, said Larry Erickson, director of the Office of Hazardous Waste Research and professor of chemical engineering.

"One of the problems at the current time is that some of what we use at the University is put into storage that may not be in the best long-term form," he said.

Erickson said he had no concerns about the burial plot at the agronomy farm.

"I think it's environmentally acceptable," he said.

One of the reasons so many contaminants are being discovered in drinking water now is because of advanced analytical techniques, Erickson said.

"Chemists are getting better and better at their techniques, so we are frequently finding more of those trace substances," he said.

Drilling and monitoring a test well to check for contamination is not cheap. Groundwater sampling presently requires test wells which cost $5,000 to $10,000 each, according to the book, "A Citizen's Handbook on Groundwater Protection," by Wendy Gordon.

Costs of analyses range from a few dollars for a bacterial viral test to $900 for a test of all 23 primary drinking water pollutants and classes of pollutants regulated under the Safe Drinking Water Act and the 129 priority pollutants regulated under the Clean Water Act.

The waste storage program at K-State is continually growing, Lambert said. A new storage building is scheduled to be built by July in the northwest corner of the burial plot.

"The money is there," he said. "All we're waiting for is the weather to break and for legislative approval."

University Facilities is to erect the building, which is to be made of corrugated steel on a concrete base.

The current storage trailer will remain in use as well, he said.

"It's a big project," he said. "The program just keeps getting bigger and bigger."
